"THE DIVORCEE"

The Story of a Girl Who Gambled with Fate

by Rufus Steele — Directed by William Wolbert

She thought he was a bandit, but he wasn't. He was a young minister whose recreation was playing Wild West.

And he thought she was a divorcee with a vengeful husband pursuing her. But of course, she wasn't what he thought either. She was just a little lady with a will of her own.

So when these two youngsters meet and the double-edged deception begins, delicious complications bubble and boil.

A delightfully entertaining story, with thrills and punch and heart interest a-plenty—and just enough laughs to make it a happy picture.

Cohan's great patriotic trench song has taken the country by storm —already the boys are singing it in France. Everywhere you hear it —on the street, while you eat, and when you're home—and you think of "Yankee Doodle-boy" and the flag he loves—and you'll like to see him—everybody will.

PARAMOUNT-MACK SENNETT COMEDIES

The first "wild one" is released September 30th, entitled "A Bedroom Blunder," with Charles Murray, Wayland Trask and Miss Mary Thurman.

The second "mirth riot," will be labeled, "The Pullman Bride." The cast includes Miss Gloria Swanson, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin—aided and abetted by a flock of beauties.

Number three of the "delirious delights" is a girl avalanche, entitled "Roping Her Romeo," with Miss Polly Moran, Ben Turpin and Slim Summerville, assisted by custard pies, slapsticks, and a barrel of fun.

The hardest competition you have is Dad's "old pipe and comfortable chair"—but remember, Dad is very much interested in "Girl Pictures," and if you get Dad with a Mack Sennett Comedy, you've got him for life, and where Dad goes—the family follows—Dad's the man you're after—get him now.

Goldwyn Asks You These Questions

WHERE is there another company in the industry that has ever made ten costly productions in advance of a first release that exhibitors may know in advance just what they are buying?

Where is there another company that has ever financed such a tremendous undertaking entirely with its own money—without ever receiving or applying a penny of exhibitor money to production?

Where is there another company that not only advises exhibitors to reach out and find the best available pictures in the open market, but stands ready to distribute the quality pictures of any other producer—thereby seeking to provide you with pictures on which you will make a profit each week in the year?

You will realize instantly that Goldwyn is the first producing and distributing organization to adopt such courageous and unusual policies. . . . It will be greatly to the advantage of all exhibitors to sign contracts with Goldwyn now.

Some reasons why

The SEVEN PEARLS

WITH

is a strong attraction for you!

¶ No.1 Mollie King is one of the most beautiful girls on the screen today. Her talent as a player has been amply proven by the Pathé successes – the serial "Mystery of the Double Cross" and the features "The On-the Square Girl", "Kick In", and "Blind Man's Luck".

¶ No.2 Creighton Hale had a very large following in "The Exploits of Elaine" and "The Iron Claw". He is young, handsome and an actor of experience. The millions who followed him in his two previous serials will want to see him in "The Seven Pearls".

¶ No.3 Charles W. Goddard, the author, is a famous dramatist and writer for the screen. With Paul Dickey he wrote "The Misleading Lady", "The Ghost Breaker" and "The Last Laugh", all successful plays. He wrote "The Perils of Pauline" and with Arthur B. Reeve "The Exploits of Elaine", two great serials.

Other reasons will follow.

There is the struggle for the man—the two deadly rivals—the woman—and GOLD. That is the story

WHAT mightier theme for any picture could have been chosen than this? And the amazing quality in this great film drama is that, despite the bigness of its scope and the magnitude of its spectacles, there still is told a modern story, as vital and thrilling and moving, as any which has come to the attention of the American public in all the years of film making.

IT is not one of those films to entertain and then be forgotten. That is why this master production of the Ogden Pictures Corporation will flame its way across America until every man and woman who frequents the theatres has seen it. IT IS ONE OF THE SIX GREATEST PICTURES MADE IN THE HISTORY OF THE BUSINESS.

—GOLD!

ITS yellow luster has gilded over many a heart, until all that it can dream of is, GOLD, MORE GOLD. The wild passion of King Midas, who sought to make gold everything that he touched, is duplicated and paraphrased in modern days by men whose hearts themselves have turned to gold. From the merest peddler on the street to that wild, unscrupulous man who has sent millions to their destruction that he might conquer the world, there is the same elemental rush for the Almighty Dollar or Mark or Franc. The "Mark" has left its mark on the world, because "THE LUST OF THE AGES" rages.

PARALTA PLAN

Costs More—Worth More

INFORMATION reaching the offices of this company indicates that some exhibitors have misunderstood the price of Paralta Plays sold under the Paralta Plan.

That there may be no doubt in any mind in reference to this important point, we will endeavor to present a concrete example—

Supposing you are renting a picture for $25 a day and are running it two days. That would cost you $50.

Now, under the Paralta Plan, the price would be, say, $75; but the additional $25 secures for you special advantages represented in —

AN UNLIMITED RUN, A TWELVE-MONTHS' CONTRACT, A RESTRICTED TERRITORY AND RE-BOOKING PRIVILEGES, WHICH FREE YOU FROM COMPETITION.

A picture sold you under the Paralta Plan is WORTH MORE AND IT COSTS MORE, for we give you an opportunity to create something for yourself and to keep all that you create.

If you do not want to buy Paralta Pictures under the Paralta Plan, you can secure them on the Star Series booking system—eight smashing big Bessie Barriscale and eight stupendous J. Warren Kerrigan productions a year.

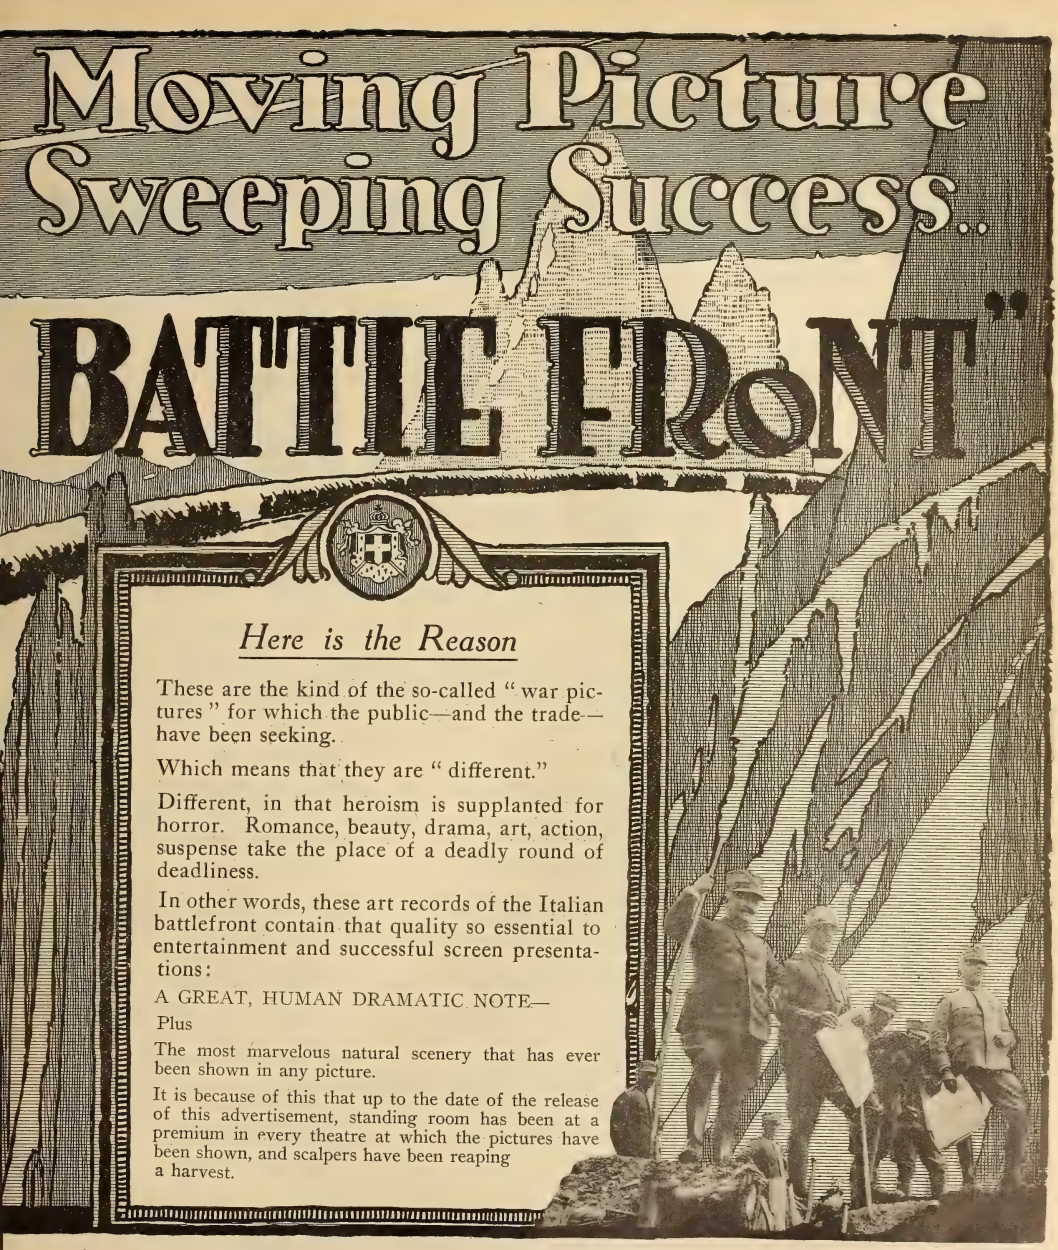
BATTLE FRONT"



Here is the Reason

These are the kind of the so-called "war pictures" for which the public—and the trade—have been seeking.

Which means that they are "different."

Different, in that heroism is supplanted for horror. Romance, beauty, drama, art, action, suspense take the place of a deadly round of deadliness.

In other words, these art records of the Italian battlefront contain that quality so essential to entertainment and successful screen presentations:

A GREAT, HUMAN DRAMATIC NOTE—

Plus

The most marvelous natural scenery that has ever been shown in any picture.

It is because of this that up to the date of the release of this advertisement, standing room has been at a premium in every theatre at which the pictures have been shown, and scalpers have been reaping a harvest.

Volume 16 No. 9 September 1, 1917

What Might Be Done

WE hazarded the slightest doubt, in last week's issue, regarding the present timeliness of discussion concerning next year's Exposition.

A manufacturer quickly dispelled any doubts we may have entertained.

"Expositions," he said on Thursday, "are the subject closest to my heart—or pocketbook—right now. I'm paying the bills and reading the auditor's reports these days. Every time I think of the total I get hotter.

"If you want to make me boil over just ask me what return I think either my company or the picture industry has received from Expositions."

The bills are being paid.

There is the rub. The Exposition of 1917 is fast fading into forgetfulness, but—the bills are being paid. At best its sum total of achievement is the advertising secured in a single city. Seven other expositions—we inadvertently omitted one in last week's little history—have gone the same way, with results no better. And—

Two million dollars have gone with them.

* * * *

LAST week we declared: "Undoubtedly a proper and profitable exposition can be held; and in connection with it a Convention which every exhibitor in the country will find it to be his business interest to attend."

We confessed to some views as to "what might be done."

Roughly, it may be figured that each Exposition costs the industry a quarter million dollars. Let us postpone for the time any discussion concerning the securing of better results with the general public from this quarter million.

No manufacturer will confess that he spends his share solely for the local advertising benefit.

He hopes—somehow—to reach exhibitors; cold facts prove that he does not.

He believes that he is aiding National Exhibitor organization; five thousand is the sum the National League received from last year's exposition.

The exhibitor—there is the object and there should be the basis of Expositions and Conventions.

What inducements can be offered him to attend? What benefits can be secured when he is present?

* * * *

THE exhibitor's first consideration is his box office. We can aid him to get more dollars into that box office. This can be done in many ways.

Take the subject of advertising alone. Addresses, instructive talks, by the leading advertising experts of the country would give an exhibitor part return for his attendance.

Bed-rock information—a sort of primer school in advertising—on the subject of printing, its cost, its handling, would be an exhibitor magnet sure to draw. And draw from ranks seldom seen at previous Expositions—those of the smaller exhibitors representative of eighty per cent of the industry.

Short business talks—exchanges of experience in meeting various problems, from exhibitors all over the country hold out a mine of value to those attending the Exposition.

Heart-to-heart discussion—not blatant promises—of the advertising plans of the various programs for the coming year would provide an exhibitor with a basis on which to form his own intentions for the season.

In a word—a week of box office tonic—there is just part of an Exposition schedule intended to make some portion of that quarter million reach the exhibitor.

* * * *

CLOSE to the exhibitor's heart is his theatre—its devices for the comfort of patrons, for the better showing of pictures. Always in his mind is the thought of some day building a new one.

On a small scale, several ideal picture theatres could be a part of the Exposition—bringing to the exhibitor the last word in picture presentation.

By showing forthcoming productions in these theatres the real object of all Expositions in other industrial lines

Speaking Editorially:

High Lights of the Independent Outlook

A SHREWD observer of conditions in the independent field tells us that there are two principal points for congratulation in the Fall outlook for territorial producers and buyers.

"The sucker money has all been spent. There is no more," he says. That's Number One. Number Two he defines succinctly, "Independent producers have stopped trying to stage successors to 'The Birth of a Nation.' They are satisfied with trying to make good pictures and good profits—not masterpieces and million dollar bankrolls."

If these points are true—and the market gives every indication that they are—there is full reason for declaring the Fall outlook in the independent field to be of the brightest hue.

"Sucker money" has long spelled irresponsibility, lack of permanence and other evils in the territorial field. If the nine lives of the "sucker's" bank account have been scotched it is well for the makers and sellers of pictures.

And as for the multitudinous "Births of a Nation"—some imitators in production, others only in the prices asked of buyers—long may they rest beneath the sod.

The Theatre and the Red Cross

NOT the least of the demands to be made upon the exhibitor, in connection with the war, will be that of the American Red Cross.

The Government wants its important propaganda spread. The Red Cross, frankly, wants money.

Money will be needed right along, even in excess of the $110,000,000 raised by a single business, namely, the bankers and brokers, to carry on this great work for the suffering and needy.

The National Association proposes to acquaint the Red Cross organization with the limitations of the motion picture theatres—the fact, principally, that a very large number of them now need every dollar of their proceeds in order to exist.

It is probable that the schemes decided upon to raise Red Cross money through the box-office will be such that the needy exhibitor's business will be helped instead of being made more burdensome.

One excellent suggestion already advanced is that of permitting Sunday Red Cross Days in towns where theatres are now closed.

The money to be raised through the theatres should, of course, come very largely from the public. This is the intention of the Red Cross.

There is this decided advantage. The Red Cross numbers ten million workers finely organized. Their weight, thrown in favor of theatre attendance, will be a decided factor and one worth cultivating by the exhibitor.

There should be no discrimination on the part of the Red Cross in designating theatres for its benefit days.

The National Anthem in Picture Theatres

A NUMBER of exhibitors have written us, calling attention to caustic editorials in the press on the playing in picture houses of the "Star Spangled Banner."

In some instances, undoubtedly, the censure has been well deserved. The National Anthem should only be rendered in public places in a dignified manner and under the most appropriate circumstances.

The Anthem should certainly not be employed to accompany a picture along with ragtime music; nor should it be played as some picture music is played; nor so generously as to rob it of its dignity.

We see no objection, however, to the rendering of the Anthem at the opening or conclusion of picture performances, as is the custom to-day in a number of theatres; nor to the showing of a patriotic slide at the same time, bearing the words of the song.

It is a matter of good taste; and a matter in which good taste is obligated.

could be approached—the selling of his wares by the manufacturer to the retailer.

The exhibitor would return to his own theatre with new ideas, with a new vision. And more benefit to the industry could be chalked on the ledger against that quarter million.

* * * *

THE exhibitor has his kicks, his complaints, his opinions as to problems in and out of the industry.

He knows the effect on him of various conditions. He would like to feel that an Exposition would bring forth sincere discussion of these problems, definite policies, and—action.

He knows that at best present exhibitor organization, present exhibitor's Conventions, produce only resolutions—never action.

He is bigger under the skin than many seem to think. He won't attend Conventions to talk; he would attend to act.

As long as he doesn't attend the bulk of that quarter million is wasted. When he does attend it will be put to work.

* * * *

THERE are points in abundance that can be taken up when we start to think of "what might be done." Some of them we shall talk of later. Then there is the matter of primary importance:

Who should manage Motion Picture Expositions and Conventions?

That's a dangerous topic—so we are told. But at least we have some views on the subject and we shall later dare the danger by expressing them.

Meanwhile, Mr. Manufacturer, as you pay your share of the quarter million remember this: The exhibitor is a business man. For every one of his clan who will attend an Exposition and Convention for a week of jolly good times and the privilege of voting for a National president there are a hundred who will stay away until they are shown a dollars and cents business return for their expenses and inconvenience.

When you O. K. the final bill give a thought to next year's Exposition—and what will be done there—for the exhibitor.

Talk of Organization Among Independent Producers

Rumored That Meeting on Wednesday Will Result in Permanent Organization—William L. Sherrill Father of Plan for Improvement of Independents' Conditions

RUMORS current along the Broadway front and expected to materialize in action before the end of the week promise one of the most important recent developments in the independent market. This according to the gossip will be the formation of an organization representing practically every producer of pictures for the independent market.

The purposes of the organization according to the rumors will be largely social, for the interchange of ideas, and for the discussion of policies tending to stabilize the open market. It is stated on excellent authority that there is no intention in the minds of those active in the organization work to produce through the uniting anything savoring of a merger of interests or a weapon for use in a business way.

William L. Sherrill, long a leader in the independent field, and active in fighting its battles, is said to be the originator of the get-together idea, with its great possibilities for the betterment of conditions in the independent field. The head of the Frohman Amusement Company is a staunch believer in organization. He has been one of the most active members of the National Association and is looming into still greater prominence during the coming year in that organization's politics.

The film men interested in the get-together of the independents are working quietly, seeking no publicity—and consequently the story must be told by rumors.

It is understood that the invitations for a tentative get-together at the Hotel Astor last Friday evening resulted in a one hundred per cent of acceptances. The independent producers quickly evidenced their enthusiasm for the plan. After long discussion it was decided to hold a further organization meeting at the Hotel Astor on Wednesday of this week.

Among the prominent figures said to be present at the initial meeting are:

APPRECIATION THAT WE APPRECIATE

Manager H. M. Thomas of the Strand theatre, Omaha, Neb., appreciates the representation of Omaha and Nebraska in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. He is president of the Nebraska branch of the M.P.E.L.A.

"On our way to the Chicago convention we were reading the Convention Number of the NEWS," says he, "and I was proud to refer to the frequent mention of Nebraska. The news is all interesting, up-to-the-minute and, more than that, it is accurate. Nebraska is making rapid progress as a motion picture state, and much of this is due to aid such as is given by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

Lillian Walker Signs with Ogden Film for Two Years

Lillian Walker has signed a two-year contract with the Ogden Film Corporation, it is announced. By the terms of the contract she is to be featured in sixteen productions—eight to be made during the year. Miss Walker's first picture by the Ogden Film, "The Lust of the Ages," was shown for review last week.

Among the clauses in the contract there is one which reads that before a script is accepted Miss Walker must place upon it her stamp of approval. There is also a provision that Miss Walker shall expend out of her own money a sum sufficient to provide at least four new gowns for each production. The contract states that at least $12,500 is to be spent in advertising each release.

William A. Johnston Again Upheld by the Supreme Court

On August 15, 1917, Justice Guy, sitting at Special Term Part I of the Supreme Court, New York County, handed down decisions holding that the articles which appeared in the Exhibitors' Trade Review, claimed to have been written by Leslie Mason and Merritt Crawford attacking Mr. Johnston were libelous. The decisions gave Mason and Crawford permission to withdraw their demurrers and answer Johnston's complaint within twenty days upon payment of costs.

Oklahoma Meeting Will Decide Exhibitors' Affiliation

Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Oklahoma Branch, will meet at the Lee-Huckins Hotel, Oklahoma City, on August 21, Tuesday.

All theatre owners and managers in the state are invited to attend as there is business of vital importance to the industry to be discussed.

This meeting is of more than ordinary importance as it will in all probability determine whether Oklahoma will remain in the League or join the newly organized American Exhibitors' Association, for this reason it is hoped that every exhibitor in the state will be present to voice his views in this matter.

Lord Northcliffe Honor Guest at Luncheon to Press

Occasion in Honor of Private Showing of British War Pictures—Lord Northcliffe Said the Motion Picture Was of Great Value to Cause

LORD NORTHCLIFFE was the guest of honor at a luncheon given at Sherry's last Wednesday, following a private showing of the British War Pictures, Inc., films. The pictures are in ten reels and show the "German Retreat at the Battle of Arras." There were thirty-six guests—members of the press, British and Canadian officers, members of Lord Northcliffe's staff and representatives from the Strand theatre. Jeffrey Butler, private secretary to Lord Northcliffe, presided as toastmaster and delivered a short address setting forth the purpose of the British war films and what the English Government hoped to accomplish through their presentation.

Lord Northcliffe made an appeal to the members of the press, to whom he spoke for recognition of the true worth of the official pictures.

"As a newspaper man," he said—and he is probably the biggest newspaper man in the world—"I hate to confess it, but the motion picture is doing more for the Allied cause than any other means of thought transmission. Not everyone reads the newspapers and those that do forget what they have read, but no one can forget what he has seen actually happen on the screen."

In speaking of his work in the United States Lord Northcliffe said that it was difficult for the reticent British to understand such treatment as he had been accorded here. He characterized his reception in this country as the finest comradeship rather than merely the recognition due the representative of an allied nation.

The pictures show how the British kept up an intense fire for days with howitzers, 60-pounders, 6-inch Mark VII's and other artillery previous to the advance. A monster 12-inch naval gun is seen breathing fire over the German lines. Then come the charges of the Scottish Rifles, the South Africans, the Hussars, the King's Liverpool and the King's Own Shropshire regiments, with the amazing tanks rising and falling over the uneven ground like miniature ocean liners in heavy seas. After the British gain their objectives, German prisoners are seen carrying back the wounded.

A comparison of captured Germans as they appear on the screen with the determined looking British troops incidentally points to a marked superiority in morale on the part of the Allies. This is one of the outstanding features of the film.

"Our Boys at the Front" to Be Supplied with Cigarettes

Motion Picture News Inaugurates "Drop a Cigarette" Plan to Collect "Smokes" from Theatre Patrons —Cigarettes to Be Distributed to Boys in the Trenches—Every Exhibitor Expected to Help

WITHIN a few weeks—before the end of a month, at the outside—the hundreds of thousands of people who attend motion picture theatres every day will be taking part in a giant national campaign to furnish cigarettes to our soldiers at the front. Every up-and-coming exhibitor in the country will be an important factor in this campaign; his theatre will be a clearing house for cigarettes and cash donations.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS lays claim to no originality in inaugurating a campaign to supply the soldiers with cigarettes through the medium of the motion picture theatre. MOTION PICTURE NEWS' resolve to start such a campaign is inspired by the splendid results in which a similar campaign has shown in England.

Judged by the results obtained in England, if American exhibitors participate as enthusiastically in this patriotic movement, two million "smokes" a week will be pouring into the central receiving headquarters in New York in a very short while.

Gathering the cigarettes will be done along lines similar to those followed in England. Large glass bowls will be placed on stands in the lobby. Fastened about them is a conspicuous sign, reading: "Men: Drop in a cigarette for our boys at the front. If you haven't a cigarette, drop in a penny. It will buy a cigarette."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, to save patriotic exhibitors all possible costs has had a large number of signs printed, bearing the above legend, one of which will be sent free to any exhibitor who will write a letter or postcard containing his request.

The accompanying illustration which was made from a description furnished MOTION PICTURE NEWS by Allyn B. Carrick who came recently from London, shows the inexpensive equipment which is necessarry for gathering the cigarettes from the incoming patrons. An ordinary goldfish bowl mounted on a stand bearing the placard is all that is necessary.

One of the surprising off-shoots of England's campaign, according to Mr. Carrick, was the mouth-to-mouth advertising which the campaign stirred up. Patrons look upon the "cigarette bowl" as a decided novelty, a novelty that does not wear off. Each week—sometimes daily—the exhibitor flashes a slide telling what the cigarette receipts amount to. In case of more than one exhibitor in one locality, friendly competition soon arises, and attendance is said to increase materially because of the interest excited.

Another point is the space that newspapers give gratuitously to the campaign. It appeals to newspaper editors as a novelty. Many English newspapers are said to publish daily reports, telling the number of cigarettes and cash contributed day by day.

While the "drop a cigarette" campaign, looked at from any angle, is a live wire method of attracting any patron's interest to the theatre, the chief reason for every exhibitor to take up the movement is the opportunity it gives him to be of actual, direct benefit to the soldiers.

This is a war of high tension; of highly strung nerves, and cigarettes, according to first-hand observers, are just about as indispensable as bullets. The first question a litter bearer asks of a wounded man is, "Have a smoke?" Invariably the wounded man—unless he is too severely wounded—will reply, "Sure!"

Every exhibitor, by means of the cigarette campaign, has an opportunity to participate in a real patriotic cause. He can feel that he is taking part in the war, and he can rest assured that every man in the trenches who smokes cigarettes—which means virtually every man there—will be thankful and grateful.

The number of cigarettes consumed weekly by the armies of the Allies reaches a figure almost impossible to believe. Due to the fact that this war gives the men more idle moments than any previous wars they naturally are in constant search of diversion.

Numerous tobacco companies in England, France and America have been contributing large numbers of cigarettes since the outbreak of war, but the demand is constantly increasing.

It is hoped that with the "smokes" campaigns inaugurated by various American publishers and also those being pushed by the Y. M. C. A. and charitable societies, the cigarettes made available by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Campaign will meet all demands.

Exhibitors are urged to act now.

By the Patriotic Efforts of All American Exhibitors

Campaign Will Result in Optpouring of Cigarettes, Totaling, According to Conservative Estimates, More Than Two Million Weekly—"Drop a Cigarette" Cards Given Free to Exhibitors by Motion Picture News

EVERY exhibitor in America has an opportunity to prove to his patrons as well as to himself that he is a patriot; that he is anxious to do all in his power to make life as pleasant as possible for our soldiers in the trenches of Belgium and France.

Through a national campaign instituted by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, it is confidently hoped that the combined efforts of American exhibitors will result in an outpouring of cigarettes, and of money to buy cigarettes, totaling at least one million and perhaps two million "smokes" weekly for the duration of the war.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS will lend all exhibitors every facility within its power for the carrying on of this campaign along efficient and effective lines.

The same plan that met with so much success in England—mentioned on the opposite page—is strongly urged. The apparatus, or equipment, needed by the exhibitor for collecting cigarettes and pennies can be purchased for a few cents. That should comprise the exhibitor's only item of expense, although his campaign will be more effective if he makes mention of it in his advertising—newspaper advertisements, heralds, programs, etc.

The decided novelty of this plan to collect "smokes" and pennies from incoming and outgoing patrons will undoubtedly attract the attention of the local newspapers, and it is plainly up to the exhibitor to see that newspapermen in his locality know what is going on.

In addition to the gratuitous space which the newspapers can be relied upon to give the campaign at its start, the exhibitor should acquaint the editors with the results from week to week of the national campaign. These results will be printed each week in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. If complete records cannot be obtained, fairly approximate estimates will be given.

Newspapers, after the first flush of the campaign's novelty has worn off will be interested in the receipts of cigarettes and cash, week by week, or day by day, that your theatre records. These figures, in addition to the national figures furnished each week by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, will be of interest to the patriotic public in all sections.

The strongest kind of appeal to your public can be made by the use of lantern slides, worded, for example, as follows:

Men: Our boys at the front can't get such good cigarettes as you are smoking. Some soldier in the trenches will be grateful if your will drop a "smoke" (or a penny to buy one) in the jar in the lobby.

Another slide with pulling power would be:

If you can spare one, drop a cigarette in the jar on the way out. It will give one of our boys at the front "five minutes in America."

Other slide matter will occur to the exhibitor as suitable for his particular locality. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be glad to receive slide suggestions and other advertising hints from exhibitors who have special success with the cigarette campaign.

The cigarette bowl, or bowls if more of them are used, can be placed in the lobby in front of the box office or in the back of the theatre, provided that there is sufficient light. The success of the campaign, as far as the individual exhibitor is concerned, will depend largely upon the prominence given the cigarette jar and the sign which calls attention to it. No real American can pass that jar without dropping in at least one cigarette or one penny.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be anxious to hear from exhibitors as to the success with which the campaign is met in their particular territory.

Next week the names of the most prominent exhibitors who participate in the campaign will be published, as well as comments from exhibitors who have suggestions to make. Several of the most prominent exhibitors in America whose names cannot be disclosed for certain reasons, have entered upon the movement with enthusiasm.

Exhibitors are urged to start the campaign at once. How the cigarettes are to be collected and sent to a central distributing point without cost to the exhibitor will be described next week in detail.

In the meanwhile, exhibitors should communicate with MOTION PICTURE NEWS if they desire to have any points cleared up.

It is perhaps advisable to emphasize again the importance of getting in touch with your local newspaper or newspapers.

The campaign should be well exploited in the beginning, in order that your patrons will know.

A REAL OPPORTUNITY FOR PATRIOTIC EXHIBITORS

Who is the livest exhibitor in your locality? Are you?

Motion Picture News wants every exhibitor who is a real patriot at heart and who believes in live wire methods to bend his shoulder to the gigantic task of supplying our soldiers in France and Belgium with at least one million cigarettes a week.

Drop a letter or a postal to Motion Picture News, and an attractive card, inviting your patrons to contribute cigarettes, will be sent to you postpaid.

Motion Picture News considers this a rare and splendid opportunity for American exhibitors to demonstrate their patriotism.

Metro in Market for Plot Material for Stars

Maxwell Karger, General Manager, Tells What Is Desired; Virile Themes Written by Unknown and Famous Authors

STRONG stories for Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Emmy Wehlen and Madame Nazimova are desired by Metro, according to an announcement made last week by Maxwell Karger, general manager.

Mr. Karger is now charged with the production of Metro's de luxe subjects. During the past three years he has produced an average of forty features annually, has secured the stories, supervised the construction of the scenarios, and, in general, been on the scene from start to finish of a picture. Hence he speaks with authority and knowledge of what is wanted.

"Metro wants stories! Not disconnected episodes, however interesting in themselves but in no vital way related to the whole—not title after title with, in between, a few illustrations of the leading characters in motion—not character drawings—and not psychological studies.

"Metro wants stories! Plots that have a definite object of theme—plots that move logically and inevitably toward a certain result—plots that portray human beings and everyday human emotions in situations that develop naturally out of what has preceded them or that lead surely to what follows.

"Metro wants stories! For material that escapes or includes those points—for plots that are reasonable, modern, simple, and sturdy—for stories containing half a dozen virile situations embodied in a tense, logical composite—for these Metro is willing to pay well.

"Metro wants stories! It makes no difference whether the author is a Kipling or an unknown, or if the story submitted is the plot of book, play, or short story. Best of all, perhaps, is the story written especially for the screen."

For a synopsis of 2000 words, Mr. Karger said as much as $1000 would be paid. Money will not be considered.

Pictures of Belgium Invasion Are on the Market

The newest of war pictures to arrive in this country and be placed on the state rights market is entitled, "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief." It is the official war record of the German invasion of Belgium, and is said to vividly depict the arrival of the Kaiser's hordes into the occupied territory. It is in eight reels and leads off with a specially staged historical résumé of the origin of the independent government in Belgium, dating back to 1830. It shows the signing of the famous treaty that was declared by Germany to be "a scrap of paper," and then follows with the swarming of the German troops across the border and into the occupied towns.

The first negatives made of this picture were destroyed by the Germans but one of the positives was saved from which the present prints were made. King Albert ordered and supervised the taking of the picture. Monsieur Claude Patain, as the Belgian representative, brought the picture to this country recently and has given the entire rights for the United States to Mrs. M. L. Fulton, one of the best known women in the film game, for exploitation. Mrs. Fulton is at present making her headquarters at the Great Northern Hotel, in Chicago, and is making ready to dispose of the various territorial rights to the picture. She also has the territorial rights for the entire country on "Fighting in France," which is receiving much popularity and acclaim wherever it is being shown.

Two Features Bought by Netter

Ohio rights for "Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit, and "The Gold Heart," last of the William Hart Triangle production, have been purchased by Leon D. Netter of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, O.

Netter already has "The Garden of Allah," "Beware of Strangers" and "The Ne'er-do-Well" for his state.

Brady Donates Two Pictures to U. S. Troops in France

The Rev. Joseph L. Hunter, a chaplain in the United States Army, was a visitor to the offices of World-Pictures Brady-Made, last week, in search of material for the entertainment of the troops about to sail for France—a suggestion that brought a swift response from Director-General William A. Brady.

"I own only two pictures personally," said Mr. Brady. "They are 'The Whip' and 'Bought and Paid For.' Neither has ever been seen in France or England, and I will present you with two copies of each which you may pass along to the soldiers as far as you wish and as long as you desire. My only stipulation is that the picture plays shall not be used for any other purpose than the entertainment of the soldiers."

So the Rev. Mr. Hunter went his way rejoicing.

"Scandal" Will Be Constance Talmadge's New Picture

Although no official announcement to that effect has been given out it is understood that the first production in which Constance Talmadge will make her bow as a Selznick star will be a film version of the great Cosmo Hamilton serial, "Scandal," now running in the Green Book.

In verification of this fact it is pointed out that Director Charles Giblyn has been putting through the filming of "Scandal" at great speed despite the waves of hot weather and the desire of the star to get away from her work long enough for a tiny vacation. No vacation has been forthcoming. Following a period of hard work in the Selznick Studio, Miss Talmadge, her director, and members of the "Scandal" company have spent the last week at Greenwich, Conn., where the filming of scenes in the play has gone steadily forward on the country estates of Commodore E. C. Benedict.

Alice Brady Leaving World

Alice Brady has handed in her resignation to the World Film Corporation, in whose pictures she has been appearing for several years. It has been known for some time in film circles that Miss Brady's contract, signed for two years, was about to expire. The opinion seemed general that Miss Brady would renew her contract.

It is stated that Miss Brady will now appear in a number of independent productions, and it is also said that she will appear in a Broadway production sometime this fall.

Motion Picture News's informant added that the World star would in all probability appear on the stage under direction of her father, William A. Brady, thus giving rise to a rather unique situation as far as her leaving World Film is concerned.

Miss Brady's decision to leave World Film was followed by a friendly talk with the company's executives, and her resignation was taken in a perfectly friendly spirit.

Vandivert on Business Trip Through Country

R. M. Vandivert, general manager of Peter Pan Film Corporation, is visiting the various exchanges throughout the country, outlining sales plans for the territories. Mr. Vandivert is expected back in New York next week.

Chaplin Saves Child's Life—Medal Sought for Him

Andrew Carnegie is to hear of the bravery of Charlie Chaplin, who Friday a week ago dashed into the high waves breaking over the large rocks known as "The Needles," off the California coast, and rescued a seven-year-old girl, Mildred Morrison, of New Rochelle, N. Y., who had been washed off the rocks while she was watching the Chaplin company make scenes. The members of the company were at the beach to stage scenes showing Chaplin, as an escaping convict, with large shoes, cane, and everything, row a boat out to sea. Several atempts had been made to launch the boat from the rocks but each time the small craft was capsized. Because of this it was decided they would wait until the tide was going out and the waves, then breaking about twenty feet high, were smaller. Chaplin was the only one to see the tiny girl come to the surface and call for help, and he did not stop to tell others of the girl's plight.

Petitions, containing affidavits of the child's parents, who are here on a visit with friends, life guards of the beach who witnessed the rescue, members of the producing company, and other eye witnesses, will be forwarded to the Carnegie hero fund committee, setting forth that Mr. Chaplin risked his life to save that of a child, for had he not been an expert swimmer, and been fortunate in reaching the girl at the moment he did it is very probable he and the child both would have been dashed against the sharp rocks and badly injured, if not killed.

The Chaplin company is about half finished with the twelfth Mutual subject and it is now predicted all scenes will be made during the coming week.

High Cost of Pictures Closes Rochester Theatre

The motion picture situation has reached a crisis in Rochester, N. Y. One theatre, the Gordon, was closed to motion pictures last Saturday. It is the oldest feature house in the city, one which did a very profitable business when it first entered the field, and for years afterward, until the competition of the Regent and the Piccadilly made it impossible to continue.

Inability to obtain enough feature pictures at a price which would show a profit is given as the reason for closing this house, which will shortly open with vaudeville, as soon as the stage can be fixed up to accommodate the speaking acts.

As fast as new feature houses were built in Rochester they were combined under one management, that of the Regorson Company, which controls the Regent, the Gordon and the Piccadilly. Recently increased film rentals were asked which the Regorson Company refused to meet. George E. Simpson, manager of the company, made a trip to New York to fix up a contract, but it was not ratified, and on his return he was notified that the contract would not be approved according to the terms he suggested while in New York.

It is claimed here that the advances asked were so much that it would be impossible to show the pictures and make a profit. It was then declared impossible to find enough films to keep three feature houses going, which resulted in the plan to close the Gordon.

Elaborate Preparations Made for Virginia Convention

Plans are progressing rapidly for the first annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Virginia, which will be held at Ocean View, Va., August 30, 31, and September 1. Exhibitors from Maryland, District of Columbia, North and South Carolina have been invited with a view of becoming affiliated with the Virginia Association.

Several of the largest film producers in the country already are listed for booths, including William Fox, Metro, World, Paramount and others, all of whom have promised to have their stars in their exhibits and to take part in the "movie star" ball to be given on the night of Friday, August 31. It was originally intended to have the ball on the closing night, but many of the exhibitors and stars desired to return home Saturday evening, so as to reach their destinations during Sunday.

In the booths of the producers will be found all of the latest apparatus looking to the betterment of the film end of America's greatest business—the picture game. At this convention the picture men from the various states represented will perfect an organization looking to the betterment of their business and to improve relations between exhibitor and producer.

An elaborate series of interesting entertainments will be provided at Ocean View for the picture men. Besides sending invitations to every exhibitor in the district and the above-named states the governor of each state and the mayor of each city have, also, been invited to atend.

Co-operative Body Formed in San Francisco

Exchangemen and Theatre Owners Organize as United Motion Picture Industry of California—Officers Are Elected

AN organization of moving picture theatre managers and film exchange men has been formed in San Francisco under the name of the United Motion Picture industry of northern California. For the better acquaintance among members and to establish a social atmosphere together with their business relations, the organization will hold a series of monthly luncheons.

The association has enrolled the following members:

"THE LEADING MOTION PICTURE TRADE PAPER"

We don't have to say this about ourselves. Alfred H. McClelland, president of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, and manager of the New Film Corporation, says it for us. Here is an extract from his letter:

"I would not like to be without Motion Picture News even for one issue. It is a great help, keeping one posted on everything pertaining to the industry.

"I have read it since it was a very small magazine, and have watched it grow to be the leading motion picture trade paper."

Free Booklet on Fires for Film Makers

A booklet, "Safeguarding Industry," made up in the main of detailed instructions for the prevention of fire, is being mailed by the National Board of Fire Underwriters to 66,000 manufacturers, including film producers.

The board announces that in case any manufacturer fails to receive the booklet a request for it will be honored without expense. President Wilson wrote a letter, reproduced in fac simile in the booklet, as follows:

"Preventable fire is more than a private misfortune. It is a public dereliction. At a time like this of emergency and manifest necessity for the conservation of national resources, it is more than a matter of deep and pressing consequences that every means should be taken to prevent this evil."

Longacre Company Moves

The Longacre Distributing Company, distributors for Alice Howell Comedies, has moved from the seventh to the fourth floor of the Mecca Building.

On August 20th, the big subway and elevated station advertising campaign goes into effect. W. F. Kelly, the sales manager, feels that this campaign will go a long way in popularizing Alice Howell.

Revolt in Newark at Charge for Music

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New Jersey at a meeting in Newark Friday decided to abolish for the time at least the use of copyright music for illustrated songs. The reasons given are based on the attempt of the publishers to tax exhibitors for the music according to the seating capacity of their respective theatres.

Exhibitors have been allowed to use copyright music without being taxed, and they declare that the proposed change is a discrimination.

William Fox Gives Dates for Three Standard Pictures

"The Honor System," R. A. Walsh's cinemelodrama, will be the first release of William Fox's newly created Standard Pictures on August 26. Thus far, "The Honor System" has been issued only to certain cities near New York.

The second release of Standard Pictures will be "Jack and the Beanstalk," the Fox Kiddie feature, playing at the Globe theatre, Broadway. This will be sent out on September 2.

Two weeks later, on September 16, "The Conqueror," William Farnum's screen presentation of the romance of Sam Houston's life, will be released.

Herbert Brenon a Target for Letter Writers

Usurping Time-Worn Privilege of Stars to Be Mark for All Missives Expressing Buoyant Joy, Secret Hopes and Delight

HERBERT BRENON these days is being singled out by the letter writers, who seem to have taken a particular fancy to his pictures. It is a habit that grows on one, and in Mr. Brenon's case the number of the letters has increased from the scant dozen or so a day that hailed "War Brides" to a hundred or more daily that signify appreciation of "The Lone Wolf."

While each of these missives has an individuality all its own, the following will serve as a fair sample of one type:

"Dear Mr. Brenon: Four of us went to see 'The Lone Wolf.' That was at least two weeks ago, and we are still talking about it. And almost in the same breath with the pictures at the McFadden Loan Collection. They both satisfied and delighted us.

"The points we wished you to know we liked were these—though when I come to write all this I feel profoundly weak in words and of a certain temerity:

"The story begins directly with vigor, there is happily lacking all attempt to advertise the leading man or woman—in fact, it goes off like a beautiful race. The wording of the whatever-you-call-it explanations was enough to interest and at the same time permit the spectator to use a bit of his brain. In an every-day drama at no time does the stage manager come out and personally address the audience in order to explain that the lady is mad because she is jealous or weeping because she is tired.

"Thank you so much for the pleasure we have in thinking of 'The Lone Wolf.' —Four of us to one of You."

It will be noted that this letter—and there are others like it—differs from the proverbial communication to the stage star. It is analytical in tone. Though many of the messages come from women they are not like the typical mash note. It is said the letters are all as dignified as the one quoted and aim to be sincere expressions of thanks for pleasure received. Mr. Brenon says:

"It is an extremely healthy sign for the future of the motion picture that a director should receive as many expressions of approval from the theatre-going public as are to be found in my mail every day. It is needless to say that I value these letters most highly, for they are the direct opinion of the public which I am trying to please.

"It is likely that exhibitors are interested in such expressions to a director. It is becoming more and more the practice of exhibitors to judge pictures by the director who makes them rather than by the star who appears in them. The number of exhibitors who follow this plan in booking their pictures is becoming greater every day.

"This applies more to the out-of-town exhibitor than to those in New York, for in the latter instance, on account of the usual Broadway showing of the big special attractions, it is easy enough for the manager of the house using second and third run pictures to run downtown and judge for himself the merit or lack of merit of a big production. But the exhibitor living outside of New York is in a far different position and he is forced to use other means in forming his judgment of the value of a production to his theatre."

Paralta Officials at Preview See "A Man's Man"

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, and other officers and directors of that corporation, have seen a run of the first print of J. Warren Kerrigan's production of Peter B. Kyne's "A Man's Man."

This production will be shown in seven parts. The first two reels relate the incidents occuring in the United States and five reels picture the events of the story occurring in the imaginary Central American republic of Sobrante. There are battle scenes in the last two reels.

"A Man's Man" will be released through the Triangle Distributing Corporation in September. Prior to the release a special invitation showing will be made.

No More Scenarios Just Now, Says Selig

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, again announces that his company is not at present in the general market for scenarios. The company is willing to consider synopses for features carrying big comprehensive themes, but are overstocked with stories. The Selig Company is said to have a large vault filled with unproduced manuscripts, short stories and novels written by the world's best authors.

Hanlon to Assist in Production of Peter Pan Subjects

The Peter Pan Film Corporation has secured the services of George W. Hanlon to assist in producing Peter Pan releases. Mr. Hanlon has been engaged in the show business for a number of years. He will direct most of his efforts toward perfecting material for the Motoy Comedies.

Mexican Concern Buys Two Apollo Pictures

Harry Raver, president of Apollo Pictures, Inc., has just disposed of the Mexican rights of several of that concern's pictures. They will be handled by the Compania Latino Cinematographica, whose New York office is at 145 West Forty-fifth street.

The deal was consummated after a lengthy negotiation between Mr. Raver and Felipe Palenque, president of the Compania. The two productions involved are, "Rosie O'Grady," in which Viola Dana is starred, and "The Golden God," an Alma Hanlon picture.

These will be released through Mexico immediately. The titles of the pictures have been changed to meet conditions, and one rather amusing paraphrase is noted, "Rosie O'Grady" being released as "Rosita O'Grady." "The Golden God" is "Dios D'Ioro."

Draft Hits Western Studios of Universal Hard

Producing forces at Universal City, as well as many other studios, have been disorganized to a more or less extent this week, as many men have been called by the examining boards. It is estimated that Universal will lose at least fifty men who have either been drafted or enlisted in the Navy or Army. A partial list of those who will leave Universal are Francis McDonald, Earl Page, Charles Dorian, Elmer Mitchell, Carl Birch, and Jack Vosburg, actors; Scotty Dunlap, assistant director; C. T. Keister and Raymond Hitt, accounting department; Jake Cull, cameraman, and a number of others.

Director Craig Hutchinson of Universal failed to pass the physical examination because of a weak heart and J. G. Blystone, director general of L-KO Comedies, was refused because of the same ailment. Wallace Reid of the Paramount-Artcraft program passed the physical examination and has been excused from service for six weeks, as he has a wife and baby dependent. Jay Belasco leaves Christie and Director Horace Davey goes from Selburn Comedies, which are made at Horsley Studios. All other producing units will be represented more or less, but the names of those drafted cannot be given, as no report has been made by the studios.

Ogden Completes Plans for Future Productions

The Ogden Film Corporation, whose first production is "The Lust of the Ages," has completed extensive plans for future operations. Their first feature was produced at Ogden, Utah. Plans have been completed for the acquisition of studio facilities in the East, where, at least, four of the eight productions which will be produced during the year will be made. The second production will be made in the Eastern studio, yet to be decided upon, while the third production will be in the process of making at the studio in Ogden. Details as to the character of the supporting cast or of the story have not been announced. Lillian Walker will be featured in all productions by Ogden. Lester Park, general manager of the company, will divide his time between the Eastern and Western studios.

Emily Stevens in New Play Is Girl Crook

Emily Stevens is at work on her first production under the new agreement between Metro and Oliver Morosco, by which she gets six months more for screen work before going on the speaking stage and touring the country.

Mary Murillo adapted the new picture play from a story by Charles A. Logue, and George D. Baker is directing it. Earle Fox is leading man and others in cast are Frank Currier, Ricca Allen and Paul Everton. Miss Stevens is Nan Kennedy, who, given the alternative, picks a year of life with the magnate she had tried to rob instead of twenty years in prison, and is astonished when he does not exact the penalty expected .

It is said to give Emily Stevens the opportunity she had in "The Slacker."

Shake-Up Hits Czar Breitinger's Employees

Frank R. Shattuck, new head of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, has given all three offices, at Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Harrisburg, a shake-up. It is noticed that the heads lopped off are those of appointees of J. Louis Breitinger, czar-like chairman, who was forced to resign.

Joseph Berrier, of Harrisburg, is transferred from the post of chief clerk of the board to that of inspector, the new chief clerk being Charles E. Bell. J. A. McLaughlin is first assistant clerk in place of R. E. Read, removed. Thomas Watson is chief inspector, vice Henry W. Lewis, removed, and Mary Leatherberry is clerk in place of Francis Sears, who recently enlisted in the United States Army. R. W. R. Work becomes chief operator in place of Samuel Johnson, who enlisted.

Other changes include the appointment of Maude M. Ely as second assistant chief clerk; R. F. Costello, advanced to inspector; William E. Connor, inspector; E. Fred Dummell and Daniel McDonald, operators, and James J. Brennen, janitor.

Enid Bennett Sues Triangle on Contract Clause

Complaint has been prepared by Los Angeles attorneys and will be filed in the Superior Court in the next few days, in which Enid Bennett will sue the rescinding of her contract with the Triangle Film Corporation. It is stated that Miss Bennett's contract contains the same clause as appears in that of William Hart—namely, that pictures in which she appears shall be made under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. In addition to asking that her contract made with New York Motion Picture Corporation be rescinded, the complaint will also ask for an injunction to prevent the Triangle Film Corporation and the Triangle Distributing Corporation from interfering with her work or the release of any pictures in which she appears.

Miss Bennett recently returned from New York, it is said, with the intention of assuming a position at the Thomas H. Ince Studio, where she would play in subjects for the Paramount program. She will delay work until matters pertaining to her former contract are settled by the courts. Her complaint, it is stated, will not ask for damages.

At the Triangle Studios it is stated that Miss Bennett had reported there for work upon her return from New York, but no story had been prepared for her nor any director or players assigned for her next production.

Soldiers in Chicago See Mutual War Pictures

Major General Thomas H. Barry, U. S. A., commanding officer of the Central Department U. S. A., and the members of his staff were the guests of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, at a preview of pictures showing the landing of the Pershing expedition.

The view was Wednesday noon at the Mutual executive offices, Consumers' Building, Chicago.

"Hamlin Plan" of Booking Gets Well Under Way

"Associated Theatres Incorporated," Formed at Minneapolis, Adopts Co-operative Method Whereby High Cost of Distributing Is Cut

WITH the formation of "Associated Theatres Incorporated" on August 14 in Minneapolis, the "Hamlin Plan" of booking, a co-operative project, got fairly under way.

Two hundred theatres are enrolled. Actual business activities will not begin until there are a thousand theatres as stockholders. At the Minnesota meeting the following officers were elected, each of whom is also a member of the board of directors: President, H. L. Hartman, Mandan, N. D.; vice-president, Forest Secor, Forest City, Iowa; treasurer, Henry P. Greene, Minneapolis, Minn.; secretary, William S. Smith, Menominee, Wis.; chairman board of directors, Charles W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.; general manager, Thomas J. Hamlin, Minneapolis, Minn.

Fiscal offices were opened at once in the Lumber Exchange Building, Minneapolis, but the actual opening of the proposed large central Mineapolis exchange and various sub-stations for inspection and shipping may not take place until December, according to Mr. Hamlin.

President Hartman is also president of the North Dakota State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Vice-President Secor is secretary-treasurer of the Iowa organization of Exhibitors and Exchangemen. Treasurer Greene of Minnesota is a director of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest. Secretary Smith is a prominent Wisconsin exhibitor and his brother-partner was a secretary of the early Wisconsin exhibitors' organization. Chairman Charles W. Gates is vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest. General Manager Hamlin was the founder of Amusements, a territorial theatre trade weekly of Minneapolis.

"We have incorporated for $100,000 under the laws of South Dakota as 'Associated Theatres Incorporated,'" declared Mr. Hamlin. "We have no connection either directly or indirectly with any other organization or group in the motion picture industry.

"No exhibitor is expected to subscribe for more stock than what he would ordinarily pay for ten days' film rental and no theatre can hold more than $1,500 worth of stock.

"Neither myself or any member of the board are drawing a cent of salary and the entire expense for organizing will not equal 10 per cent.

"We expect to do a film rental business alone of fully $50,000 a week," continued General Manager Hamlin," and are incorporated to produce, buy, sell, lease and rent film, equipment and supplies, to buy, sell and operate theatres and to book films, vaudeville, tabloids and road attractions."

Balshofer, Though Injured, Continues Work

Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation and producer of the Harold Lockwood features for Metro Pictures Corporation, is recovering from injuries sustained when his automobile was recently struck and almost wrecked by another machine at the corner of Vermont avenue and Jefferson street, Hollywood, Cal. The producer's machine was struck on the left-hand side and thrown across the street against a telegraph pole.

Even though laid up, Balshofer is passing the time in editing and cutting a film entitled "Under Handicap," a miniature cutting room having been installed in his apartment, also a portable projection machine.

Vitagraph's Outdoor Serial to Get Trade Showing

Vitagraph gave a trade showing at the Strand theatre, New York City, on Monday, August 20, of "The Fighting Trail." All of the prominent exhibitors of the New York territory have received engraved invitations, describing it as the "most melodramatic serial ever produced."

It was acted in the great out doors of the West, eliminating all fake studio settings.

Vitagraph has arranged to show four episodes of the serial taken from all parts of it. An explanation will be made at the showing that the entire serial will be screened for any exhibitor who may desire, in the projection room of the company at 1600 Broadway.

Death of Charles W. Travis, of Gaumont

Charles W. Travis, who died last week, had made a reputation with Gaumont as an excellent character actor.

Among his productions were "The Devil's Darling," in which he was the devil; "The Card Players," "The Idol of the Stage," "As a Woman Sows," "I Accuse," "According to Law," "The Quality of Faith," "Flames of Vengeance," and "Armadale."

"The Eternal Magdalene" Is Maxine Elliott Play

Maxine Elliott's second picture is "The Eternal Magdalene," by Robert McLaughlin, Cleveland author and playwright, Goldwyn announces.

This is the production directed by Arthur Hopkins, who, by a coincidence, is also from Cleveland, his first literary experiences having been as a newspaper reporter on The Plain Dealer in that city.

It will be recalled by the many thousands who saw the play that it is not a religious drama, but an essentially modern one in which there is a prototype of the popular Billy Sunday and a series of personalities and episode paralleling the everyday people and themes surrounding all of us.

"Egged On," Latest Comedy of Victor Moore

Victor Moore releases, August 20, his latest comedy by Lois Zellner called "Egged On."

Vic is entrusted with a gun-powder formula which has been put into egg shells to take to the American munition manufacturers. It is supposed to be the most deadly weapon of its kind invented, so in order that nothing should happen to the eggs, Vic puts them in a hand bag which he keeps close to his side.

On arrival in the States he loses the bag and his wallet full of money. He fails to raise money working as a sandwich man, but meets an heiress who had been a passenger on the boat he came over on. Invited to dinner in a restaurant, Vic makes many blunders and finally returns to his hotel only to find his bag and wallet gone. There is said to be a "howling" finish to the picture.

Interpretative Dancing Feature of Bray Pictograph

In the 82nd release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine on the screen," Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn will introduce Paramount audiences to Denishawn. Here Miss St. Denis and Mr. Shawn are teaching their pupils the wonders and beauties of interpretive dancing in an environment wholly in accord with the spirit of the dance.

"Efficiency via Express," is a graphic story of the development and operation of one of the most important industries of this country. The Bray Studios Inc., producers of this release, were priviledged to have the co-operation of the greatest of all express companies.

Besides acting as agent for some large feature film corporations and buying and selling to the trade, Mr. Roskam is doing film cutting, editing and titling.

Rex Beach's "Auction Block" Gets Final Polishing

"The Auction Block," by Rex Beach, is now undergoing final polishing process preparatory to distribution through Goldwyn, under an exclusive arrangement recently made.

In the cast are Rubye De Remer as Lorelei Knight, Tom Powers, Florence Deshon and Florence Johns. Mr. Beach, his associate, Benjamin B. Hampton, and their director, Larry Trimble, selected the members of the company.

Comedian Max Linder Sails Home to Paris

Max Linder, who came to California early this year, to make comedies for Essanay, departed for his home in Paris last Monday where he expects to recuperate until, in February, he returns to America to fulfill his contract with the Essanay Company.

Since giving up his work before the camera, Linder has almost wholly recovered his health. He is still suffering from extreme nervousness and believes that in France he can best recover as there he has many friends and acquaintances and these will help to make his life more pleasant. Then too, Mr. Linder wishes to be there to supervise the building of his new quarter-million dollar theatre which will be opened about January first. This is on the Boulevard and will be named "Cinemax."

Attitude of American Exhibitors Association Outlined

Affiliation with N. A. M. P. I. Offered, But Stipulations Made—Officers Confer—Prompt Exhibitor Response Puts Body on Paying Basis—Pettijohn Devotes Part Salary to Association

OFFICERS of the American Exhibitors' Association, as a result of several conferences held in New York, last week, outlined the attitude of the body toward the National Association, sharply defining the lengths to which it would go in its affiliation, if the application to be taken in were accepted.

Other developments of the week were the unsought for proffer by Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the association, of a portion of his salary to be devoted to the interests of the organization; the establishment of a "complaint bureau" to which exhibitors may report difficulties and grievances, and the announcement that the association, just one month after its birth, was on a paying financial basis, this status having been attained through the response of exhibitors throughout the country during the past ten days.

President Jake Wells, Vice-President Guy Wonders, Treasurer William Fait, Jr., H. B. Varner and General Manager Pettijohn conferred for several days during the week, and the developments outlined, and others to come, grew out of the meetings.

Letter to N. A. M. P. I.

The letter to the National Association, in full, is as follows:

In order that the attitude of the American Exhibitors' Association toward the National Association of Motion Picture Industry may be clearly understood, and that the directors may have definitely in mind our position with reference to what has been termed "our application to affiliate with the National Association of Motion Picture Industry," I am directed by our directors to write you the following:

First—The American Exhibitors' Association, on July 20, 1917, tendered, through Wm. A. Brady, not as the president of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry but as the designated official, by reason of his selection by President Wilson, our hearty co-operation and services to help carry on the work set aside by our government for the motion picture industry during the present crisis. We are building a business organization of exhibitors to the end that this may be effectively done and results obtained.

Second—We care not whether we have one or fifty votes, either as directors or members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, because voting inside the industry cannot interest us.

Third—We are asking nothing of you, and are offering only our affiliation and assistance in a stand with the other branches of the industry for what is healthful and against that which unjustly attacks.

Fourth—On the other hand, we will not at any time, by any unit vote or combination of votes, permit ourselves to be bound to support any act, measure or effort that is not for the best interests of real exhibitors of America, who comprise our membership, nor for or against any faction in any other branch of the industry that may hereafter develop.

Fifth—We desire to have it clearly understood that our services are tendered, and that no application is made at this time for votes, or for any change in the by-laws of your organization.

Sixth—We ask that the directors at the meeting August 27, 1917, either promptly reject or accept our proffer of affiliation, assistance and co-operation in such manner as our position may be clearly and definitely interpreted by our officers and entire membership.

Purpose of Complaint Bureau

The institution of a "complaint bureau" was made with the idea of caring for the difficulties which ofttimes arise between exhibitor and exchange man or producer. As outlined in the bulletin shortly to be issued by the American Exhibitors' Association and sent to every exhibitor, its purpose will be to receive and investigate any grievance reported by any exhibitor, whether he be a member of the association or not. If the complaint is found to be justified, the facts will be published in the association's bulletin, which will be issued weekly, under the signature of the general manager. In this way it is believed other exhibitors will be saved from similar troubles and an adjustment will in many cases be reached.

Pettijohn's Offer

The move of General Manager Pettijohn in turning back a portion of his salary to the association, and the motives prompting this, are outlined in his letter to Treasurer William Fait, which reads as follows:

SERVICE THAT IS FOR YOU! WILL YOU USE IT?

¶ The Exhibitors' Service Bureau is not a mere broadening out of old trade paper service ideas. It is something new.

¶ The Bureau places the services of experts in every branch of motion picture work at the command of every exhibitor reader of Motion Picture News. Let us hear from you—your kicks, your individual problems—let us help you solve them.

¶ Have you a big feature booked on which you would like special aid? Have you competition that is worrying you? Have you difficulty getting publicity material on some one of your programs? Would you like some expert advertising aid in opening a new house? Would you like to try more extensive lobby displays—if you only had a little help at the start?

¶ No matter what it is—lay the case before the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. We want it to be all that the name implies— it's only up to you.

President Trigger Resigns at Meeting of Local 1

Asked to Explain "His Chicago Conduct," Severs His Connection with the Organization; Aligns Self with American Exhibitors' Association

THE reply of Samuel H. Trigger to the dictum of a recent meeting of members of Local No. 1, M. P. E. L. A., that "he explain his Chicago conduct" was his resignation last Tuesday of his office of President, and his position as a member of the local.

The decision to request Trigger's explanation of his action in leaving the Chicago convention, as arrived at by members of the New York local, was told of in MOTION PICTURE NEWS of August 18.

Trigger's speech of resignation follows:

"It is a most unpleasant task to be asked by gentlemen purporting to be my friends to explain my conduct.

"This is the first time in my life that friends have questioned my God-given right to exercise my conscience and judgment.

"As your President, I entered the hall at the Chicago convention in your behalf and for you.

"I was not permitted to vote, and I was not permitted to speak either as your National Vice-Chairman or as your President.

"Was that the treatment you wanted me to have, and did you expect me to suffer such insults? These are two questions, my friends, for you to answer.

"Not being permitted to take part in the deliberations of the convention, refused the right to voice your sentiments and your desires or to vote on any measure, I realized I was not a delegate and left the convention. For this act I have no apologies to offer. That I have aligned myself with the American Ex-

Vitagraph Shares Bigger Profits Than Ever

More Money in Checks, as a Total, and Larger Number of Employes Get a Portion—Out for More Yet Next Year

THE distributing organization of Greater Vitagraph, through its general manager, Walter W. Irwin, last week distributed to the members of its selling organization what is clamed to be the largest profit sharing fund that has been divided since the inauguration of the profit sharing plan two years ago.

While the fund itself was larger, the amount received by each member of the selling organization was a few cents less than the amount received at the previous high record point, owing to an increase in the number of employes in the distributing end. Owing to this increase in the number of employes, the share of each was a trifle smaller than last profit sharing period, which ended on April 28.

The period for which the fund was just divided ended during the hottest part of the summer, on July 28 last. Figuring on all precedents, instead of being the largest profit sharing period, that just closed should have been the smallest period of the year.

But Greater Vitagraph has upset all precedents in the distributing end of the film industry inasmuch as the company failed to experience any summer slump in business. For a period of five weeks, business did shave off a trifle, but there was no such loss as thirty and forty thousand dollars a week in business, as has been experienced by the larger film distributing companies in the past.

The post summer business already has started with the Greater Vitagraph sale force each succeeding week showing large increases in business over its predecessor, and every prospect of its continuating.

The most recent profit sharing checks to be distributed were accompanied by personal letters written to the recipients by General Manager Irwin, in which he congratulated each member of the sales force upon the work done during the preceding thirteen weeks and urged each one to greater efforts during the present period.

As a result of receiving the large profit sharing checks, every one of the twenty-six General Vitagraph branch managers called meetings of their respective sales forces and set an arbitrary quota for each territory, which, if reached, will mean another hundred per cent. increase in Greater Vitagraph's business by January 1, 1918.

General Manager Irwin bases the present rapid increase in the Greater Vitagraph business upon two essential points—first, the class of productions now being made at the Greater Vitagraph studios under the personal supervision of President Albert E. Smith, and—second, the intensive sales methods being utilized by every member of the Greater Vitagraph sales organization.

One result of the recent distribution of profit sharing checks is that nearly every roadman in the employ of Greater Vitagraph now has his own automobile and all utilize the cars freely in covering their territory.

What About the "Fly by Night" Distributor?

S. R. Kent of General Film Asks This Question, After It Is Admitted Much Has Been Said About the "Wild Cat" Producer

By S. R. KENT

AFTER pretty thoroughly covering the national exhibiting field by personal investigation (and this is not the first time I have done so) I am confirmed in the belief that most things the matter with motion pictures can be cured by the exhibitors themselves.

Much has been heard of the industry suffering from "wild cat" producers, but not so often does the demoralizing influence of transient distributors excite comment. The exhibitor has been the victim repeatedly of the irresponsible distributor. He has been an exclusive victim, yet the exhibitor has not started to cure this ailment of the motion picture business.

I believe the exhibitor can get results if he gives the matter direct thought and attention. So far he has persisted in accepting the newly sprung-up and transient distributor upon equal terms with the old-established and proven organizations. If the exhibitor showed the proper caution about doing business with distributors who arise over night and declare off-hand that they can distribute, such concerns would not overrun him and disappoint him again and again with unreliable service.

If the exhibitor would insist, like an ordinary business man in other lines, upon at least some evidence of qualification, and blindly commit himself to any film concern that opens an office, he would do much to stabilize the industry as a whole. The unfit would not be so tempted to start inadequate distributing organizations, and the exhibitor would not have to quit them so often.

A recognition of their common welfare among exhibitors would have made impossible such an appalling percentage of breakdowns in distribution. Just enough support is given practically every doubtful proposition to insure that some exhibitor will become entangled and left flat without product when it runs its course. And then we have the motion picture industry charged with another failure.

Every other large industry has been able to stabilize its merchandizing. And this has been done always by the merchant, the dealer. Substantial dealers refuse to patronize a new jobber or manufacturer at once and there's no tangible reason why the exhibitor should.

The exhibitor pays the bill in the long run, since every dollar spent by the various distributing companies must originate with the exhibitor. The exhibitor therefore has right in his grasp the direct means to stabilize the industry. He can lay out the dollar in a way to bring him peace, prosperity and security, and to insure it to his fellow exhibitors as well.

Immediately upon assuming the office of general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, I prepared cost estimates for the various work planned.

Considering that the organization is new, that many expenditures of monies will necessarily be made the first year that will not be repeated, coupled with the fact that thus far all funds have consisted largely of individual exhibitors' contributions in addition to dues, have decided the following:

That, as your general manager, I will return to you, as treasurer, each month, the difference between my salary as fixed and guaranteed at Chicago and the sum of one hundred dollars per week.

I have been so unselfishly supported in the work to date by our officers and individual exhibitors who have given their time and money to this cause, as to feel that I want to REALLY be one of them and "do my bit." The money thus saved can be used to good advantage for other purposes, and all I ask in return is a continuation of the support I have had, and your belief that my heart is in this effort to build up a Business Organization of Exhibitors that will BE SOMETHING and DO THINGS.

I am sending a copy of this letter to President Wells, and I take it that I have authority to do the above without official sanction of our directors.

My enclosed statement shows a substantial balance and I earnestly desire to maintain it.

Firm Financial Basis

The report of Treasurer Fait, rendered to the directors and officers last week, showed that the response from exhibitors had been so heavy and dues had come in so promptly that there was little doubt the association would find itself within a few days securely on a paying basis.

Paul West Punctures Scenario Fraud Bubble

Famous Players-Lasky recently received a scenario, purporting to be written by Arthur Zelliott, P. O. Box 596, San Francisco, and inclosing this note:

"To Whom It May Concern: I have reviewed 'Electrofires.' It is a strong, original and logically developed story and I heartily commend it for screen production. (Signed) Paul West."

Paul West has written the following warning for publication in MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"Will you, for the benefit of scenario departments which may be imposed on by the Arthur Zelliott, and to help me protect what little reputation I have made as a writer, announce that I have never previously heard of this Arthur Zelliott, let alone given him the right to use my name?

"It is possible, of course, that he has been imposed on by some crook using my name. If this is so the publication of my letter may put a stop to the practice and protect other gullible dupes from him."

Paralta Issues Comprehensive Book Setting Forth Plan

Paralta Plays, Inc., has just issued a sixty-three-page booklet in which is set forth the purpose and aim of the Paralta plan of distribution. Because the Paralta plan has been so widely commented upon in film circles the booklet is timely.

A hasty survey of the contents shows to what pains the Paralta Company has gone in order to present their subject lucidly and thoroughly. A careful reading convinces one more than ever that the Paralta plan is based on sound reasoning and extensive experimentation and research.

The evils of the present "system" are exposed at length. The latter section is devoted to an exposition of the Paralta method.

What the plan means to the exhibitor is explained in detail, including the protection from unfair competition, the advantages as a money saver and the privileges it offers.

"The Paralta Plan" is available to all exhibitors who are interested, it may be secured from Triangle Exchanges where Paralta plays are distributed.

Bud Fisher to Enter Officers' Training Camp, Plattsburg

BUD FISHER, known to the millions for his Mutt and Jeff caricatures and more recently for his entry into the motion picture field with his cartoons, leaves for Plattsburg this week where he will enter the officers' training camp.

Only a little more than a month ago Mr. Fisher entered the picture field and organized the Bud Fisher Film Corporation. In this short time he has placed his product with hundreds of film buyers and established exchanges in all parts of the country. He has displayed keen executive ability and expresses the opinion that he can leave his business and enter the service of the country without a wheel stopping in the machinery of the organization which he has established.

Before leaving Mr. Fisher announced that, with the exception of a few remote territories, the entire state rights' field has been disposed of for his new series.

Harry Raver Chooses Cast for Play by Local Lawyers

Harry Raver announces a special production of "The Public Defender," by Mayer Goldman and Frank Harris, of the New York bar. This will be the first of a series of pictures each built up around a public theme.

Mr. Raver says he has an exceptionally strong cast. Frank Keenan will be the district attorney, Robert Edeson the public defender, John Sainpolis will play the "murderer" on trial, while Alma Hanlon will be the girl who moves heaven and earth to save him from the electric chair. Florence Short will have the part of the adventuress.

Burton King, for a long time Mme. Petrova's director, will stake the production. While it is not propaganda, Mr. Raver says every public defense society in the United States has promised to assist.

First Five Clara K. Young Pictures Decided On

Cast Picked for "Magda" and Work Progressing—Rights Finally Acquired to "Marionettes"—Two Other Subjects Are Also Named

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG has selected Thomas Holding as her support in "Magda," to be her first independent production in pictures. This play has been scheduled instead of "The Marionettes," as first announced.

Holding was brought to this country by Hugh Ford, appeared in the Famous Players productions of "The Eternal City" and as leading man for Pauline Fredericks, covering a period of three years. Mr. Holding also played the lead with Jane Gray in "The Fighting Chance," "The Great White Trail" and others of this successful production.

Others in the cast are Edmund Fielding, George Merlo, Edward Kimball, Alice Gale, Kitty Baldwin, Maude Ford and Valkyrian, all well-known artists.

The difficulty which necessitated the dropping of "Marionettes" as Miss Young's first play was surmounted last week, it was announced, and she will now appear in the piece immediately after the completion of "Magda."

A cable through the French Authors' Society to the author of "Marionettes," Pierre Wolf, resulted in the purchase of rights to the subject. These rights, it is understood, were claimed some time ago by the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Plans have already been laid for Miss Young's third, fourth and fifth photoplays. The third has not yet been decided upon, but the fourth will be "The Savage Woman." For the filming of this the company will go to Porto Rico.

The fifth production will be "The Japanese Nightingale," and this will be done in California.

MONTHLY INDEX

The monthly index of releases, which usually appears in the first issue of the month, will be published next week.

New Jersey Exhibitors to Aid "Four Minute Men"

The Motion Picture Exhibitor's League of New Jersey, in Newark, Friday appointed a committee of five to aid the National Defense League in the organization of the State into zones for the purpose of co-operating with the plans of the "Four Minute Men."

Philip Bornstein, manager of the Criterion theatre, is the chairman of the committee. The league decided to hold its State convention in Newark at Achtel-Stetters, on Wednesday, October 3.

"The Spy," Fox Patriotic Play, at Globe Theatre

William Fox will present "The Spy," George Bronson Howard's sensational expose of the nation-wide workings of the German spy system in this country, in which Dustin Farnum appears in the stellar role, at the Globe theatre, beginning Monday night, August 27. "Jack and the Beanstalk" will close there on August 26. "The Conqueror," which was announced to follow "Jack and the Beanstalk," will be seen later on Broadway.

The United States government has appropriated millions of dollars in recent months to fight the remarkably efficient German spy system in America.

It is no secret that the Kaiser has upward of 10,000 trained agents in America, and they have been in America for months before the war, operating not only as government secret service men, but as agents for German commercial interests.

"The Spy" is released as a special production, under a separate contract, by William Fox, and bookings can be fixed now with any branch manager of the Fox Film Corporation.

Arthur S. Friend on Firing Line at Washington

Arthur S. Friend, who was appointed chairman of the Motion Picture Food Commission, to co-operate with the Government as a representative of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has departed from New York to take up active work in Washington.

Mr. Friend, who is treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is to be associated personally with Herbert C. Hoover and is a member of Mr. Hoover's staff in Washington.

Mr. Friend will divide his time between the New York offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Washington where he has already established offices of his own.

As a representative of the motion picture industry in the handling of the food situation, Mr. Friend will attend various conferences in Washington together with Mr. Hoover and the other authorities immediately interested in the food situation.

Wallace Reid in Another War Play, "The Hostage"

War is the theme for "The Hostage," Wallace Reid's picture to be released by Paramount in September. Beulah Marie Dix, who wrote the internationally famous war sketch, "Molloch," has again taken the war note as her subject.

Dorothea Abril in the part of Nathalia is Mr. Reid's new leading woman. She is one of the Paramount ingenues and her work in "The Little American" with Mary Pickford is a matter of recent remembrance.

Fox Company Guests of Bar Harbor Society

Millionaire Colony, Pleased by Director Adolfi's Charities, Entertains Annette Kellermann and "Queen of the Sea" Cast

WILLIAM FOX sent his company screening "Queen of the Sea," a new Annette Kellermann production, to exclusive Bar Harbor, Me., summer home of society millionaires of New York and other cities.

The most exclusive families of Bar Harbor gave their sanction by forming "rock parties" to visit the locations being used by the Kellermann company in the making of "Queen of the Sea." "Rock parties," it may be explained, consist of getting out to the location as early as the director and cameramen, eating luncheon from generously filled automobile hampers and sitting on the rocks watching the making of the picture.

Director Adolfi announced that seats would be sold to the spectators at a nominal charge and that the proceeds would be given to the hospital and to the Red Cross. Hundreds of dollars have been raised for the fund and the end does not yet appear increases in business over its predecessor to be in sight.

Ernest Lorillard, head of the house of tobacco fame, invited the entire company and Miss Kellermann to a monster clambake. The company found Mr. Lorillard piling clams upon a huge mass of steaming seaweed, while Herbert L. Satterlee carried wood to keep the fires going. The wife of Mr. Lorillard and the beautiful Mrs. J. B. Dickson of New York peppered and salted hundreds of spring chickens which were broiled on birch wood embers.

Tending these fires were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wainwright and Mr. and Mrs. John G. Ogden. Mermaids, mer-men and millionaires were soon on the most friendly terms.

Mrs. Satterlee and her children and guests came down to the bake, and when everything was cooked the millionaires waited on the movie people, handing them steamed clams, corn and broiled chicken.

This hospitality appears to have broken the ice and Mr. Adolfi has been obliged to decline many invitations on behalf of his company.

Government Rules for Film Men During the War

The Committee on Public Information—headed by George Creel and Kendall Banning, director of the Division of Pictures—has issued rules for the guidance of motion picture producing companies and photographers and artists generally.

In the four-page pamphlet published by the government is all the information reasonably required regarding the kind of pictures that may be taken and distributed during the war.

All persons desiring to take photographs are requested to apply to the Committee on Public Information first, and this committee will forward the application at once through the proper channels, avoiding delays sure to occur if any other course is pursued.

Pictures not admissible are of government fortifications, army or navy property, or military equipment; close-ups of construction details of tests, new weapons or equipment of the army or navy; movements of troops that show localities or new military formations; locations of mine fields or location, number or identity of warships; views that tend to arouse prejudice against friendly nations; scenes abroad that have not been passed by censors of friendly nations, and, generally, any picture plainly requiring official consideration.

It is stated that no photographers will be allowed to accompany the army abroad except the official government photographers. Motion picture films will receive immediate consideration, it is stated, and will be returned with the written approval of the committee or with suggestions for changes. But duplicate prints of all such pictures, whether made with or without permission, must be submitted to the Committee on Public Information.

Lillian Walker's Picture Not Propaganda, Says Goldburg

Because the story of "The Lust of the Ages" is concerned with the hunger for wealth, rumors have been set adrift that the picture is a caste propoganda for the purpose of inciting another struggle between labor and capital. At the office of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, Jesse J. Goldburg, the exploitation sales manager, had this to say:

"We do not picture a struggle between labor and capital, but merely attempt to characterize the insane love of gold over all human needs. None will question the propriety of such a theme—not even the wealthiest man of our country."

Two Jobs for Ralph Morgan Simultaneously

A taxicab dressing-room has been pressed into service for the accommodation of Ralph Morgan in Chicago. He is playing Joe Bascom in "Turn to the Right" evenings and matinees at a local theatre, and at the same time taking the leading masculine role in a Wholesome Films production, "The Penny Philanthropist."

Few persons wonder nowadays if they hear of a speeding taxi, shades drawn tight, with a human elbow or perhaps a foot protruding. They know it is only Morgan on the way from one job to another.

M. J. Weisfeldt, general manager of Wholesome Films Corporation, announces that in addition to "The Penny Philanthropist" production is soon to begin on "Everybody's Lonesome," also by Clara E. Laughlin, and a new serial by Guy McConnell. Wholesome Films has completed production of "Cinderella and the Magic Slipper."

hibitors' Association needs no explanation except that I am glad to do my bit in this organization of business men that really stands for something, and that I believe will accomplish something for you and for me as exhibitors.

"I now hand to our Secretary my resignation as President of this local. This act I will also explain. I should not continue as President of a local that is affiliated with a National organization that I do not believe in. A few of you have indicated that you prefer a new President. You should have one. This resignation I owe you, but my personal liberty to exercise my best judgment at all times I do not.

"Now, boys, that my unpleasant task is over, let me just say this in conclusion. Forget our political differences, and let's be the same old friends and pals we have always been.

"I care not for presidencies, but my friends I love. As fellow exhibitors, continue to do as you have done for fifteen years—call on your old daddy day or night—and even if I have turned my sixty-fifth milestone, you will find me so full of enthusiasm for my friends that you can still call me "Pal."

"To those of you who join me in the American Exhibitors Association I say, God bless you. To those of you who do not, I say, God bless you, too."

North Appointed Production Manager of Vita

Wilfrid North, long identified with the production of Vitagraph features, has been appointed supervising director at the company's Brooklyn plant by President Albert E. Smith.

Mr. North's motion picture career has been almost exclusively confined to Vitagraph and during the life of John Bunny he directed many of the comedies in which the famous comedian won fame. For the last three years he has been directing Vitagraph features, including all those in which Lillian Walker appeared. Among his works are "Salvation Joan," "The Ordeal of Elizabeth," "The Kid," "Kitty Mackay," "Indiscretion," "The Dollar and the Law" and "Green Stockings." He also was co-director with J. Stuart Blackton of "The Battle Cry of Peace."

Foursquare Offices Opened in Boston

M. H. Hoffman has just returned to New York after a trip to Boston to establish New England headquarters of the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange at No. 16 Piedmont street, that city.

"When the division manager is announced," said P. V. R. Key of the M. H. Hoffman, Inc., "the trade will realize that Mr. Hoffman's choice has been extremely wise. This Hoffman-Foursquare is one of the important links in the combined chain which is circling the country, and much is to be expected of it.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

C. F. Schwerin, Selznick exchange manager for eastern Pennsylvania and West Virginia, was in New York last week. He will spend a few days at Atlantic City.

Allyn B. Carrick of the Coronet Film Co. leaves for London this week in the interests of his organization. Mr. Carrick arrived from London only recently.

Felix Feist, sales manager of World-Pictures, and S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theatre, left early Tuesday morning by automobile for a few days' fishing in New England.

Jack Lait Tells How Fox Picks Scenarios

Jack Lait's story of William Fox, in the American Magazine, now on the newsstands, is an excellent character study of "the world's greatest showman." It tells for one thing how Mr. Fox chooses scenarios, as follows:

"William Fox has a private barber shop in his office. Every afternoon his staff barber arrives, and Mr. Fox retires to the barber chair. While the tonsor thus plies his job, a young woman enters, and the plot begins; she brings the plot with her and she begins it.

"Seated in a far corner of the room, she begins to read scenarios. She has been selected because she has a metallic, unemotional voice that rarely fluctuates and never quivers.

"And here is how he accepts scenarios:

"'The ones I can remember when I get in bed, hours later, in the dark, are the ones I want. I don't weigh them by standards, arbitrary values or any other one thing. But I know that those which registered on my half-sleeping brain hours before, and still stand there in relief, are the ones that will register on the brain of the audience in the theatre when portrayed."

Photoplay Magazine Presents "Stars as They Are"

Series of Twelve Pictures to Be Released for State Right Distribution, Containing Intimate Glimpses of Players "Off Screen"

James R. Quirk

PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE SCREEN SUPPLEMENT, a novelty in motion pictures, will shortly be offered the state rights buyers of the country by the publishers of Photoplay Magazine. The new offering will consist of twelve one-reel subjects, released one per month over a period of a year. Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement will present to the fans odd and unusual glimpses of their favorites in their home life, making up for important roles, enjoying their favorite forms of recreation, and doing the hundred and one things that the fans hear about their doing, but now, for the first time, are to be actually presented in motion pictures.

Picture to yourself the contents of Photoplay Magazines come to life and you will have a fairly accurate idea of the nature of Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement. "The Stars as They Are" expresses in slogan form the type of offering soon to be launched through state rights buyers all over the country. Such screen celebrities as Mae Marsh, William S. Hart, Henry Walthall, Lucille Lee Stuart, the Drews, Antonio Moreno, Bessie Love and hosts of others are presented in unusual poses. One issue will present perhaps the only screen view in existence of Charlie Chaplin in street clothes—the real Chaplin—just as he looks off the screen if you were to meet him. The box-office possibilities that lie in such subjects will, it is confidently felt, be instantly recognized and taken advantage of by every exhibitor.

James R. Quirk, publisher of Photoplay Magazine, in discussing Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement, in his office, 350 North Clark street, Chicago, said:

"I am sure we have something wholly new—wholly different—to offer the exhibitors of America. It is not an idea that was conceived in one moment and executed the moment afterward, but the result of an idea which has been growing gradually and rounding into more and more perfect form as time passed. We could have launched our first release months ago, but we refrained from doing so until we were sure of our ground—until we had collected material for months in advance and knew that the high standard we hit in our first release could be consistently maintained and even improved in subsequent issues. Right now we have on hand material enough for our first nine releases, and our cameramen are supplying it at a rate that will easily enable us to keep that far ahead of our release schedule."

EXHIBITOR SERVICE BUREAU

A department devoted to the problems of every theatre manager

Two Exhibitors Complain of Rental Boosts

Attitude of Many Neighborhood and Small Town Managers Stated in Letter to Motion Picture News—Better Knowledge of Sectional Conditions and Graduated Price Scale Suggested

A DAY'S mail brings two letters from exhibitors who complain of the increasing cost of picture services through new methods of release. The two letters throw considerable light on the situation, one of them coming from a New York City neighborhood house and the other from the owner of a small town theatre.

Sidney Rothschild, manager of the Paradise theatre, 360 East One Hundred and Sixty Seventh street, writes:

"Every time I read an advertisement in any of the trade papers by the film companies of the wonderful things they are going to do for the exhibitor, I always get ready for another boost in the rentals. When is this going to end and where are our profits? They are already small and they will pretty soon be wiped out. Maybe the producer can get along without the small man, but if a feature is to run a few days or a week on the big circuits and then be laid on the shelf, I cannot see where anyone is to gain. You know as well as anyone that the one subject of importance is one of profits."

From a Small Town Manager

Victor Allen Warren, owner of the Star theatre, Massena, N. Y., writes more fully of the higher priced star policy:

"It is with some anxiety and concern that we small town exhibitors are watching the mainstays of our business being taken away from us. The popular plan seems to be to take a star whom we have worked hard to popularize, adopt a new method of release and boost the price three or four times and then give us a lot of advice that we have tried two or three years ago and expect us to invest from $40,000 to $50,000 for the sake of taking in $10 and passing them over $10.50.

"With our limited population and everyone in our town already coming, what reserve have we to draw upon and what margin have we for the decrease created by the war, high cost of living and various causes for depression in our business? It is a matter of close figuring with us to make both ends meet and one or two dollars each way counts on our daily receipts. One by one many stars have been placed beyond our reach.

"In response to inquiries by our patrons as to why they do not see the popular faces, we have very frankly put the matter up to them and asked them if they desired us to run these pictures, paying three to five times more rental, which means that we would have to raise the admission price to them.

"While we like to see everyone prospering and receive adequate compensation, this measuring the ability of the stars would seem to be an unhealthy condition and causes resentment among a large following of picture patrons. The result is that they will not pay increase prices and they will not patronize the one and two reelers that we are now obliged to run freely, and we can only look for a large decrease in the attendance to result. Possibly this is a wise policy on the part of the producers, but it certainly seems that it would re-act in the long run. It would seem as if they could secure the large prices in the centers of large population and have a graduated reduction in the prices that we have been in the habit of paying."

All Not Rialtos and Strands

Mr. Warren strikes the very keynote of the attitude of many exhibitors. There is complaint that many producers seem to be going on the principle that every theatre in the country is a Rialto or a Strand of New York and that all of the theatres can pay the increased prices for pictures. They appear to be forgetting that in every city, say, like New Orleans, where there are six or eight high class houses, there are from sixty to eighty neighborhood houses and that a great percentage of the theatres are in the smaller towns, fully 30 per cent. of them controlling the field in the lesser communities without fear of competition.

Recently in New Orleans one of the newer companies which took over one of the most popular stars of the screen undertook to introduce the new service there. The first run rights were sold successfully and then the proprietors of the neighborhood houses undertook to pay the production. The first run exhibitor was able to use it a week, the neighborhood houses for only a day, but the neighborhood houses have been following the policy of playing all of the productions that were used downtown to retain their patronage. The first run exhibitor had a varied scale of prices, according to the cost of the production to him, but the neighborhood houses could not charge more than the customary dime. The result was that they lost money on the showing and many of them cancelled the service, while others retained it because they believed that they had to do so. Business on such a theory is impossible, though the exhibitor might make a go of it if he has only one of these pictures a month and recoups his losses during the rest of the time. But if he is to have attraction after attraction on the same basis, the result is certain.

The exhibitor cannot go before his audiences in person and tell them why he cannot get certain productions nor can he explain the cost question. As Mr. Warren says,

Service to Everybody

TERRY RAMSAYE, Director of Publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation, congratulates the MOTION PICTURE NEWS on the establishment of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau and gives his views of what he believes such a department can accomplish in meeting a demand that is not supplied from other sources. He writes:

"Publications devoted to the motion picture industry have too long neglected the matter of service to the exhibitor. I have maintained for a long time, fundamentally, the motion picture trade paper was to be of service to the exhibitor, to train him as a showman and to show him explicitly how to exploit the productions as they come into the market. While the whole industry may have been and may still be permeated with inefficiency and waste, steps have been taken by the distributing and producing ends in the last couple of years to eliminate loss.

"Production and distribution are now down to a reasonable degree of efficiency. But the industry will not be successful in any permanent sense until the exhibitor of motion pictures begins to get a much greater percentage of possible revenue out of the productions he shows in his theatre. Two, three and seven day runs are coming, and coming fast. The News has advocated them and I think the industry owes Mr. Johnston much for the stand he has taken and the energy with which he has driven home to the exhibitor the necessity for longer runs; but the exhibitor cannot run his pictures longer than one day until he learns how to make money with longer runs."

Straight from the Shoulder

Hot and Cold Facts Interesting to Every Exhibitor

WHAT has been your biggest problem of the current year?

What has been the greatest need that you have felt in the successful conduct of your theatre?

What has been the most serious matter that has menaced you and what do you think the motion picture industry has left undone that it should have done for you?

Bring your needs and your criticisms to the EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU and we will try to help you solve your own problems and we will seek to put your good ideas before the entire industry that the industry may better itself.

This bureau does not want to deal with theories and possibilities. It wants to deal with facts—not only with the cold facts, but the warm facts as well. This department is devoted to the exhibitors' needs and to that alone, but the bureau wants to bring out the fullest cooperation of everyone connected with motion pictures.

Each week this department will print articles on your side of the industry seeking to bring out the best ideas and the most successful methods, but it wants to go further than that and to consider individual cases, to take up specific facts. We are going to print here accounts of successful things that exhibitors have done, so that others may profit by them. But more than that we want to know where you have failed and what you need.

Elbow to Elbow

WE believe that we can help you to prevent a "re-booking" of errors. We feel sure that in this confraternity of ideas, with the theatre owners of the country uniting here in their demand for improvement and the producers and distributors offering their aid, that genuine SERVICE will come. And it will not be the sort of service that will be merely some theorist's ideas of what you should have done. It will be the careful and intelligent digest of what others have done, what good business methods in other branches of industry suggest, what those best trained in the practical side of the film world have learned in their years of study and in their continued investigations.

Bring us the specific problem.

Have your pictures been as good as the other fellow's and have you failed to advertise them properly to get the full results from them?

Have you complaints that your exchange or your producers have failed to cooperate with you, or is it a case where you have secured the material of cooperation and did not know how to use it?

Have you had trouble or have you failed to get the sort of pictures that your patrons demand? And do you want to remedy those mistakes?

There are so many of these questions that occur that one cannot begin to list them here.

Doctors to Ailing Theatres

ONLY a few months ago there appeared in the Saturday Evening Post a series of articles on chemists of industry—the men that helped to solve the problems of various branches of industry. The men who take the waste out and add the efficiency are filling important roles in the world today. The greatest manufacturer does not hesitate to call them into consultation, and pays big prices for their assistance and advice. They are filling the demand of doctors of trade. This is the work that THE EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU seeks to fill for you. And it is free and quickly available.

This bureau wants to go further than merely diagnose your case and tell you what the theory of your business illness is; it wants to give you the concrete medicine in actual form—to work out for your definite case a remedy that will remedy.

Don't say that this is not possible because it was not done before. Ten years ago a manufacturer would have said that it would be impossible to call in a consulting chemist and cure his plant, for there were no such things as industrial chemists then. And there has not been a genuine service bureau that devoted itself to caring for the needs of the exhibitors. This is going to be one—if you will simply come to us with your needs.

Our Sincere Ambitions

WE want to tell you how to pick the pictures that your section needs.

And to tell you where you can get them and how.

And how to use them after you do the actual booking.

We want to show you how to develop to the maximum the possibilities of your territory, how to exploit the pictures and how to show them. We want to show you how not only to get the biggest revenue out of not only one picture for one day, but out of all pictures for the whole future.

And at the same time write and tell us the pleasant sides of your record for the year, the successes that you have put over and how you accomplished them. They are not only going to be a record of your own success but they are going to help the remainder of the industry and you know that when you do this you help yourself.

This is not a one-man game or a one-theatre business. Let us all get together to make it stronger and safer.

This is SERVICE for you in capital letters—not only with a capital "S" but with every letter of it emphasized.

HERE'S OUR HAND TO YOU, READY TO HELP YOU OUT. SHAKE!!

Name of Your Theatre Is an Important Point

Movement Spreads to Forget the Days of the Nickelodeon and Use a Word That Will Be Dignified and Distinctive and Inspire Confidence

"WHAT'S in a name?"

Evidently a great many of the moving picture theatres think there is little, but there is certainly a movement throughout the country toward eliminating the meaningless, unattractive, and substituting in their place something that indicates the character of the house, its location or its particular appeal.

Rose, Pearl, Jewel and such words are names, but that is just about all. As a matter of fact the houses might as well be known by number as to use such a plan. And then there are Bijou Dream, Dreamland, Ideal, Pastime and a lot of similar titles that belong in the same class.

Naming of theatres seems merely to have followed the mere lines of imitation. For instance, since the success of the Strand theatre in New York the name has spread through the country until there is scarcely a hamlet without its Strand. And to carry the imitation further along imitators have picked names that mean nothing in their localities. To find the word Knickerbocker, which is typical in New York, covering the front of some house in an Indiana town is about the height of foolishness. One might wonder whether the name refers to the fact that the theatre is a little fellow that has not had time to grow up.

A great share of the names of moving picture shows have been taken from the old nickelodeons, and they served fairly well in the cheaper forms of amusement, but certainly they have no place now that the picture business has become a serious undertaking and the showmen of the country are trying to put their business on a high scale and improve the class of amusement that they are offering.

The Dreamworld Incident

Dreamland is typical of that class of houses. A humorous incident occurred some years ago in a large Southern city. One owner about to start a new house decided that he would call it the Dreamland, but a competitor who was also erecting a new house decided he himself wanted that name and he used it. But then a peculiar state of affairs existed. The sign painter had already started to work for No. 1 and the word "Dream" had been used, so not to let good material go to waste, he made his house the Dreamworld. But that was not all. Exhibitor No. 1 was determined that he wasn't going to let anyone get ahead of him on the "Dream stuff" and so he built a new house and promptly called it the Bijou Dream. The three theatres, standing very near each other, are to this day the cause of the greatest confusion in the patron's mind. And the poorest sort of business policy is to puzzle your patron.

The words are confusing for advertising purposes, but of course that was not thought of in the days when moving picture shows were started and when the owners merely counted on side-show methods and plenty of gaudy pictures in front of their houses to get the business. But now that the houses so named must be advertised to compete with their rivals and the owners are finding now that they are not getting the full worth of their publicity, because they cannot impress sufficiently strong on the public at which of the three theatres the pictures they are advertising are showing. Theatre managers naturally do not like to change the names of their houses, but it is far better to switch to one that is distinctive and means something rather than continue in the rut.

Backing Choice with Reason

However, when the managers to whom we refer went to build other theatres they used distinctive names that meant something. For instance, one of their houses is called the Tudor and the theatre is finished in the Tudor style of architecture. The name is at once fitting and absolutely fixes the name of the theatre in the minds of even the occasional patrons. Another theatre built later was called the Newcomb after a large woman's college in the same city.

Among the best classes of names are those which refer particularly to the city in which they are located, and often success has been found in adopting the county name where it was one of dignity. Especially in cases where the counties are named after heroes, you will find the word being used in cases for various classes of business. In Hamilton County there will be the Hamilton National Bank, the Hamilton Hardware Company, etc.

Another class, and especially attractive for neighborhood houses, is taken from the location of the theatres, either from the streets on which they are located or from the name that is used for that particular section of the city. Suppose your house is in the Lakewood section of the city. Wouldn't that name be a great deal fuller of meaning than the Ideal? Wouldn't it immediately locate the theatre in the minds of the people of the whole city? Wouldn't it appeal to the pride of the people of that section of the city, and wouldn't the name have dignity?

Names That Guarantee

There is another class of name that tends itself to give confidence in the industry. For instance, has there ever been a theatre called the Standby? Doesn't that word form your personal guarantee to your patron that you will give the best in pictures and use the best exhibition methods? There are dozens of such words that will suggest themselves to you, or take your dictionary down some evening and hunt through it for some good, plain, English word that will express your determination to have the best theatre in your section.

There are many theatres which are simply known by the name of the owner, and where such a name is distinctive, away from the Brown, Jones or Smith, and where the names are easy to remember and easy to pronounce, they serve well. On this point, it is well to remember that the name should be one that the patron can pronounce easily and on which all will agree.

The use of foreign names is bad. In one case a French word which is variously pronounced is used. "I never like to pronounce the name of the theatre to a friend," one woman told the writer, "for she is just as likely to turn around and correct my pronunciation." It's almost a case of the name bluffing the patron.

Exhausting Your Bubble

Use of the name of the film service that the theatre was carrying at the time of its construction has been popular, but it had the great fault that the theatre, for one cause or another may change service and lose the only thing that made the name worth while. For instance, in one city we know of Triangle, Paramount and Universal theatres and it so happens that each theatre has switched about in its service since that time. And again, many of the names of film companies are not more attractive than the Rose and Pastime class. Use of the names of players themselves has the same objection as the change.

Of course the greater share of the theatres of the country have the class of names that this article has condemned, but it has been pointed out that this has been because of the peculiar development of the industry from its early "cheap show" days. It is too much, probably, to expect that owners of any of the established theatres will change, but if you are buying out a house where you do not consider its name a valuable asset or where you are building a new theatre, plan the name of the house with the care that you are planning everything about the theatre.

Then we will have theatres whose names are distinctive, something that one will connect with their surroundings, something that lends dignity to the house, not a name that immediately recalls the days of lurid lithographs and the rattly old grind organ.

C. R. Martineau Issues Statement to Exhibitors

C. R. Martineau, who becomes president of Manhattan Local No. 1, M. P. E. L. of A., through the withdrawal of Samuel H. Trigger, has issued the following statement:

"I take this opportunity to pledge my support to the National League and all its officials, and will use my best efforts to promote a closer bond of friendship between all local exhibitors whether in the organization or not.

"It will be my greatest desire to protect the individual members from unfair trade methods and abuse, and at the same time to work for the best interest of the entire industry.

"I will endeavor to see that all differences between branches of the industry and exhibitors are properly arbitrated. I will be at the service of the exhibitors at all times and will do my utmost to assist them in protecting their interests."

"Parentage" Producer Urges Courtesy as Asset

Frank J. Seng, producer of "Parentage," offers some wholesome advice in the second issue of the Parentage Messenger when he impresses on exhibitors the worth of courtesy. And this is one of the things that is worth while impressing not only on the exhibitor himself but everyone in his employ. Here are a few paragraphs that merit attention:

"More than efficiency, courtesy is the mainspring of business—YOUR business. Courtesy is not something to put on and take off at will—it is life—real life. If it is not from the heart, it is not courtesy.

"Your patrons expect courtesy from you —from the girl in the box office—from your ticket taker—from your ushers and musicians. They want courtesy across the telephone, in your program, in your advertising mail.

"Courtesy is not a smirking, hand-wringing, bowing attempt at goodness. It is a spirit that must radiate out from the heart and head and hand each moment of the day. It is confidence—enthusiasm and calm to encourage, inspire and attract others.

"But even more important—Courtesy is good, better and best business. It gives atmosphere and class to your theatre."

Nebraska Exhibitors Condemn Deposits

The second quarterly convention of the Nebraska branch of the M. P. E. L. A. was held at Grand Island August 8. Reports were heard from delegates to the national convention. Resolutions condemning the deposit system were adopted. The parcels post system of delivering films, the music tax and other matters of interest were discussed. The membership of the league has shown a healthy growth since the last meeting, held in Omaha.

JANE GREY

A story of the Northland by James Oliver Curwood

POLI'S THEATRE, AUGUST 13, 14, 15

Poli's theatre, Cranton, Pa., used some attractive cards in connection with the showing of the Jane Grey production of "Her Fighting Chance" by coupling the showing up with the recruiting campaign. While the production, of course, has nothing to do with the European war, here was an excellent idea to capitalize the title and Poli's put it over in excellent shape.

"Blackball" Plan Suggested for Offensive Films

Prompted by an editorial appearing in the Washington Star and scoring offensive pictures, with a recently issued comedy as the text, E. R. Pearson of the K-E-S-E service comes forward with a novel suggestion to afford patrons an opportunity to vote on the offerings without the trouble of filling out slips or writing letters.

Mr. Pearson suggests that exhibitors place at their exits baskets containing quantities of red, white and black balls or marbles and close to it an opaque hopper through which the request of the following slide could be carried out:

HELP US PLEASE YOU

White balls indicate your approval.
Red balls indicate your dislike of our offering as an entertainment.
Black balls indicate your disapproval from a moral standpoint.
Please vote as you go out.

"If, as the Washington Star states, a great many people are in reality opposed from a moral standpoint to many of our present-day moving pictures, but are not afforded an opportunity for expressing disapproval except in public, the exhibitor who adopts this method would have a great advantage over his competitors," comments Mr. Pearson. "Besides, as the plan becomes more operative, the deathknell of pictures that do not satisfy a patron's conscience would be sounded."

Empress Theatre Believes Luxury Good Policy

Exhibitor Wilfred Ledoux of the Empress theatre, Omaha, has just had a carpet costing $3 a yard laid along the aisles of his theatre. This is just one of the features making this theatre one of the most luxuriously furnished in Omaha.

"It is a good investment to cater to the luxury of your patrons," said he. "The picture must be good, yes, but in some theatres I have known the best picture ever made could not make a first-timer return to the house. We change every time a carpet begins to show wear. We redecorate often and keep the theatre in first-class shape all the time, and we make money by doing so."

Theatres Redecorate for Goldwyn Openings

Goldwyn Pictures report that many of the leading theatres which will show their attractions are being remodeled and refitted in order to celebrate the changes in policy.

R. G. Larsen, manager of the Boston theatre, has issued the edict: "New pictures and therefore a newly decorated theatre." This house, which seats 3,000, has one of the largest and finest lobbies in the country, and this is being entirely done over and a type of pictorial and electrical display installed that promises to be a distinct novelty.

Manager Edward A. Zorn of the Temple theatre, Toledo, announces that he will close his theatre long enough to refit and redecorate his house before showing the first of the Goldwyn productions.

Mrs. L. H. Webb is refreshening the Goodwin theatre, Newark, with the same purpose in view.

Vitagraph Makes Cuts, Papers Will Use

Vitagraph is following a new scheme in its cuts through the outline process. The cuts which are offered in connection with the Bobby Connelly production of the first of the new series of pictures are especially attractive and feature the youthful star and his little leading woman, Aida Horton. Vitagraph uses both lettering on its cuts, showing that the directors of the service department know what the newspapers of the country want. Newspapers in the principal cities will not use cuts carrying large trade marks of the producing companies, and there has been much money wasted in supplying these.

Credit Should Go to Rembusch

Frank J. Rembusch, leading Indiana exhibitor, last week issued a statement contradicting published reports in which Louis Blumenthal was given credit for drafting the resolution on deposits while at the Chicago convention.

Mr. Rembusch states he is chairman of the deposit committee and drew up the resolution in question in full.

Essanay Makes Especial Appeal to Newspapers

Essanay calls attention to important changes being made in its publicity service with the especial object of furnishing the photoplay editors with suitable material. Frank acknowledgment is made that the matter furnished in the past has not measured up to newspaper requirements and that hereafter the publicity department will adhere to the suggestions and requests made by the photoplay editors and the users of Essanay pictures.

One of the steps in the reorganization is an exclusive service that is being furnished to leading newspapers. By sending the matter to only one publication in each city duplication is prevented and the confidence of the photoplay editors in the material sent them is assured.

Essanay News has been divided into departments which are expected to supply the needs of all the exhibitors of Essanay pictures, one of the features being breezy little stories and "shorts" together with a column of items called "Film Facts." The publicity department reports that the clipping bureaus show that a large amount of this publicity matter is being used since the change in policy.

Bank Gives Free Shows for Entire County

In connection with the celebration of the thirty-first anniversary of the institution's founding, the First National Bank of Minneapolis, Kan., last week gave a motion picture show to an entire county. Minneapolis is the county seat of Ottawa County and has about 3,000 population. The rest of the county has about 30,000 inhabitants. In order to call attention forcibly to the value of thrift, the officers of the First National Bank rented the Reel theatre and booked "The Dollar and the Law," a Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, for a day.

Prior to the date of the celebration, invitations were sent to every householder in the county inviting them to be the bank's guests at the showing of the picture and also at a luncheon.

Exhibitor Puts His Own Guarantee on Films

V. H. Oxford, of the Bradford Amusement Company, Bradford, Pa., is giving the personality idea to his theatre. "Our personally selected subject" is the catch line that he uses in his advertising and he impresses on his patrons that he knows what a picture is before he offers it to the public. He believes in being familiar with his productions in advance and is able to tell his patrons about them in advance of their showing.

"This is the best idea that we have ever used," Mr. Oxford reports. "I had confidence in my productions and did not hesitate placing our guarantee on them."

This sort of attention is flattering to the audiences because the patrons believe that they have the real interest of the management. However, theatre owners following this plan should see to it that their films are of merit, for there will be a quick come-back.

Here is one of the advertising suggestions offered by Artcraft for the latest Douglas Fairbanks picture. It has the advantage of simplicity, a minimum of text matter and brings to the attention of the reader the name of the star. It gets right down to the personality idea, and while this style of advertising is not suitable to all productions, it is just the sort that is needed for a player like Fairbanks.

In case of a group of stars who have a great following and who are recognized as appearing in a particular type of pictures, the main thing to put before the public is that you have a new production in which this player is appearing. This is an example where the star himself puts the production over and naturally is not suited to the films where the empasis is to be placed on the character of the play.

This advertising is furnished by Artcraft to exhibitors through the Exchange men.

Know Your Ad Foreman, Good Advice

Paramount Progress gives the exhibitor some valuable advice in telling him to get acquainted with the ad foreman on the newspapers that he is using. It's just a hint along co-operation lines, as the Progress says:

"Usually the foreman is better fixed to know what looks right than you are. He may not be the ad expert you are and he may not know how to write the copy which he pulls, but once the copy is written its odds on that he knows how to splash it in the most effective type and position."

There's just one thing to be borne in mind in this connection. Remember that the foreman likes to get early copy and if you get the matter to him in advance you are going to get a lot better results. The fellow who shoots his copy in at the last moment and then makes a lot of changes is not going to get the best sort of co-operation from the foreman. Get in the habit of being just a little ahead of time and then the day that you want something done at the last moment, it will be easy for you.

To Fight Proposed License for Theatre Music

A special meeting, held Tuesday, August 14, at the rooms of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, New York branch, No. 218 West Forty-second street, was called by Lee A. Ochs, president, to take action against the demand of The Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Mr. Ochs in a notice sent to the exhibitors of New York has called for a $3 assessment for each theatre towards a fund to fight the society named. According to the call injunction proceedings are to be instituted to prevent the enforcement of a "tax" of $30 to $300 a year on each theatre in the form of a license to use the society's music. A further object is to apply to Congress for a change in the copyright law that will permit the use of music upon payment for orchestral copies.

The $3 checks from the theatres are to be sent to the office of the president, Lee O. Ochs, 1587 Broadway, or to the secretary of Manhattan Local, No. 218 West Forty-second street.

Theatre Gathers Tobacco for Soldiers

Nate Erber, manager of the Lincoln Square theatre, Decatur, Ill., pulled a clever idea in connection with the tobacco funds that are being raised for the American soldiers in France. This idea was not used at the request of any organization. Mr. Erber simply read in the papers that the boys at the front were short of tobacco. He bought $10 worth and placed it in front of the theatre, with a neat card telling what it was for. Before closing that night there were 500 packages of cigarettes, cigars and smoking tobacco deposited. The donation was turned over to the Red Cross for shipment.

This idea caused more talk than anything that has been attempted in Decatur.

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production.)

"Mr. Opp," adapted from the novel by Alice Hegan Rice, has been produced by Bluebird Photoplays, under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, who directed the production of "God's Crucible," "The Greater Law" and "The End of the Rainbow," three photoplays which have been highly praised by the press and the millions who have seen them on the screen. Mr. Reynolds' latest production "Mr. Opp," is a story of simple, homely life. Returning to his home town to settle the estate of his stepfather, he found that he had been left the old homestead and the care of his young sister who, because of a severe sickness had been enfeebled in mind and gave evidence of being a mere child. The town was backward in development, and Daniel started in to boost. He established a local paper and by his glowing editorials he induced outsiders to come and invest their money. In the meantime Mr. Opp had fallen in love and as in all of his other adventures, he met with failure. He is left with his feeble-minded sister but is consoled by the fact that he has always endeavored to do the right thing.

Lillian Walker, Screen Star, in Spectacular Photodrama, "The Lust of the Ages"

(Ogden Seven-Reel Production.)

"The Lust of the Ages" is a remarkable photodrama depicting the unhappiness that follows the greed for gold. From the earliest ages this picture tells you to the present and shows that though times have changed and the world has become civilized the same greed for money which characterized our predecessors in the ancient day, is still as much in evidence as it was then and is the cause of much of the unhappiness that is prevalent to-day. The story was written by Aaron Hoffman and produced by the Ogden Film Corporation under the direction of Harry Revier. Lillian Walker, who will be remembered as the "girl with the dimples" and who is an old favorite with the picture-loving public is in the featured role. She has the part of Lois Craig, a young girl who writes a book entitled "The Lust of the Ages" and by it convinces a young financier that his greed for wealth, power and prestige will eventually bring unhappiness into his life. She loves him but tells him that unless he can forget his greed for gold she can never marry him. In "The Lust of the Ages" you will see some of the finest bits of photography ever projected on the screen. The picture is marvelous for its unique method of presenting a short history of the ages. Miss Walker has never been seen to a better advantage and she is ably supported by a strong supporting cast. The picture was taken in the beautiful country around Ogden, Utah, and presents some beautiful exterior scenes. "The Lust of the Ages" is a spectacular photodrama and one that will hold your attention from first to last.

The management of the ——— theatre recommend this picture in the highest terms and urges all to see it when it is shown on ——— of ——— week.

"Transgression," with Earle Williams Featured, Mystery Drama Involving High Society

(Vitagraph Production)

How is your frame of mind for a rattling good mystery story with such screen stars as Earle Williams, Corrine Griffith, Billie Billings and Denton Vane, caught in its web?—good mystery from start to finish. J. Stuart Blackton and Cyrus Townsend Brady collaborated in writing this mystery story, and it has been transferred to the screen by Vitagraph under the direction of Paul Scardon. It's a corker !—you don't want to miss it. Stephen Page (Earle Williams) is mayor of a big city. His brother, Hal (Webster Campbell), is in love with Caroline Shrafton (Billie Billings), a woman who lives by her wits. Because he is wealthy, she casts aside her fiance, Burt Staley (Denton Vane) for him. There is trouble and Staley is killed. The mayor arrives and Hal confesses to the murder. Hal is secretly taken from the city and sent in hiding. A year later the mayor is engaged to marry Marion Hayward (Corinne Griffith), daughter of the district attorney. The district attorney is preferring charges against a crooked political band, the leader of which is the husband of Carline. She goes to the mayor and threatens to expose his brother unless he prevents the prosecution of her husband. The mayor refuses. Now comes the mystery. "Transgression" will solve this mystery for you in a very novel manner. There is a startling climax and one that will convince. The interest throughout is well sustained and there is everything contained to please an audience.

"Transgression" will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Earle Williams and Corinne Griffith are featured.

Little Mary McAlister in "Pants"—Proves Wealth Can't Buy Happiness

(K-E-S-E Five Reel Production)

Little Mary McAlister, who as the star of the "Do Children Count" series has won a reputation as one of the most talented of child actresses, is to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in a five-part feature entitled "Pants." This little actress performs before the camera with all the confidence of a seasoned actress and interprets the most difficult roles with strong, dramatic feeling. In this picture she takes the negative side of the question, "Can wealth bring happiness?" and in a very convincing manner shows her audiences that even though all the wealth in the world is laid at the door of a person, if other conditions are not equal, happiness will not result. Betty is a little girl who has everything that money can buy, but she hasn't companionship. What a child wants most of all —other children to play with—is denied her. She runs away from her home and joins a group of poor children who are having the time of their lives on the beach. The children splash in the water and have a glorious time for one afternoon. Betty thought it would be fine fun to exchange clothes with one of the little boys in the party. Dressed in boy's clothing, she is easily mistaken for a boy, and when evening comes and she is not home, her maiden aunt notifies the police and a general alarm is sent out. That same evening the father of the boy with whom she had exchanged clothing enters the home of her father, driven to desperate means by hunger. About the same time the police arrive with the boy, whom they have mistaken for Betty. The events which follow this discovery and what Betty does when she appears later brings this picture to a happy climax.

See Little Mary McAlister at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Pants," a five-part feature.

Bessie Love in Screen Drama of The Emerald Isle—"Wee Lady Betty"

(Vitagraph Five Reel Production)

Bessie Love is the typical little Irish girl in her latest picture from the Triangle studios, titled "Wee Lady Betty." This is a fascinating love story from the home of the shamrock. If you saw Miss Love in "The Sawdust Ring," her last picture, you will see her in "Wee Lady Betty," which is coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. It is a story of Ireland, told with all the humor of the Irish. There are ghosts, too—regular Irish ghosts—and the scenes showing the Emerald Isle will take you back, if you are Irish, and will give you a desire to go there whether you are Irish or not. "Wee Lady Betty" presents a picture that one and all will enjoy from the first scene to the last. Its production has been handled skilfully by one of Triangle's best directors, and it can be said of this picture that it gives Bessie Love opportunities to present a part that fits her youthful simplicity to perfection and permits her to romp through this story of Irish legends and mannerisms with all the freedom of her girlish nature. With Miss Love in "Wee Lady Betty" are some of the most capable screen artists of the Triangle forces. There is every reason to believe that you will leave the ——— theatre after the showing, having been given screen entertainment of merit. This picture with Bessie Love in the leading role is highly recommended by the management of the ——— theatre. It is a sure cure for the "blues." Come and see it and Miss Love.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week Bessie Love in "Wee Lady Betty," a story of the Emerald Isle.

June Caprice in a Fascinating Story of Holland, "Every Girl's Dream"

(Fox Five-Reel Production.)

"Every Girl's Dream" is the title of the latest vehicle in which winsome June Caprice is seen in the featured role. She has the role of the llittle Dutch girl whose foster parents do their best to make life unhappy for her. The scenes of the story are laid in Holland, the land of the dykes and a more picturesque bit of screen work would be hard to find. Harry Hilliard, Kittens Reichert and Marie Harris are cast in the principal roles. William Fox has given the little screen star every opportunity to display her talents in this story of the Dutch. There is a love romance contained and even though the foster parents of the little Dutch girl make every effort to prevent the girl's realizing her dream of love, Cupid wins in the end and there is happiness forever afterwards. Miss Caprice since her first appearance before the camera, a little more than a year ago has won her way to the hearts of millions. She always pleases and always puts her best efforts into her work. Whether she is impersonating the small town girl, the girl of the tenements or the society belle, she always wears the smile that wins. In her latest picture she is fascinating as the daughter of Holland, the girl with the smile. She loves and nothing can prevent her from realizing her dream. She wears the wooden shoes of the Dutch girl and leaves the impression that she is as much at home as though she were in ballroom slippers.

If you want to see June Caprice in one of the most fascinating roles she has yet interpreted before the camera, come and see her in "Every Girl's Dream," a story of Holland, to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"Babbling Tongues," with James Morrison Featured—A Great Evil Exposed

Circumstantial evidence has been the means of sending many a man to an ignominious death. Unfounded criticisms passed without malicious intent have been the means of sending many men and women into social exile. Because of an inconsiderate remark passed concerning the character of this or that person, many who those who are the exemplification of goodness, have been branded with the mark of public disgrace and they have been ostracized from society. "Babbling Tongues," an Ivan production under the direction of William Humphrey, takes up this great evil and gives in pictures a concrete example of the injury persons given to gossiping propensities visit upon those who come within the range of their unfounded criticisms. These remarks not only bring unhappiness in the particular instance cited but bring death in their wake and a righteous husband and a true wife are made to suffer unjustly. James Morrison and Grace Valentine are the featured players in this unusual production treating of a great evil. Others in the cast are Arthur Donaldson, Paul Capellani, Louise Beaudet, Gladden James, Carolyn James, Carolyn Birch, Richard Tucker and Robert E. Hill. There is a powerful dramatic story told in strong dramatic way by artists of the screen. There has never been anything just like this production before, and by this is meant that the main theme has never been taken up with the same force of presentment, as it is in this production. There is a vital interest for all contained, and all will be the better for having seen this picture and having learned the lesson which it seeks to bring out.

"Babbling Tongues," with James Morrison and Grace Valentine in the featured roles, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"Veiled Woman" Attempts Kennedy's Life in Late Chapter of "Neglected Wife"

(Pathe Serial, Two Reels.)

"Embittered Love" is the title of the late chapter of "The Neglected Wife." In the last chapter Norwood was left in a burning building, the den of Doyle and his henchmen, which had been set on fire during a fight between his men and Norwood. Margaret goes with a policeman and Norwood is rescued from the flames. Doyle thinking that Norwood has been put out of the way, devises new plans to avenge himself on Kennedy. Mary receives another note from the "veiled woman," telling her that Kennedy has visited again the apartment of Margaret and that her husband is to be punished for ruining her (the "veiled woman's" life, Kennedy tells Mary that he knows nothing of the "veiled woman's" life. Mary visits Margaret and informs her that she must leave town. Margaret writes Kennedy that he cannot see her again. The "veiled woman" follows Kennedy to his office and attempts to kill him. This late chapter of "The Neglected Wife" series, is an important link in the chain of events that is gradually drawing about the character of the "veiled woman."

The late chapter of "The Neglected Wife" series, titled "Embittered Love" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Your Idea—and Ours

Suggestions offered by producers and exhibitors and the News' Service comment on them.

GENERAL FILM reports that many of the exhibtors are using a de luxe edition of the works of O'Henry in connection with the showing of the films. The Imperial theatre, Montreal, is one of the latest to follow this plan, Manager Golding offering the volumes to the writer of the best essay on the proper place of O'Henry in literature.

The trouble with this idea is that it will not have a sufficiently general appeal. The ordinary spectator will conclude that the problem is one for the "high brow" and will not enter the competition. A much better plan would be to base the prizes on some advance offer that concerns the story like this: "Suppose a girl that you never saw before came to you and asked: 'Will you marry me Monday?' What would you do?"

Here you have a special appeal not only to the ones who have read the particular O'Henry story, but you also get the interest of the general public. All sorts of exploitation, as a general rule, are better based on human interest rather than the knowledge that you presume your possible patrons have.

ESSANAY'S publicity department offers the suggestion for baby contests as a publicity stunt along with "Skinner's Baby," featuring Bryant Washburn. Readily admitting that the idea is an old one, it is suggested that this will bring much free space from the newspapers. We do not believe that it will do so. In any houses except those of the purest neighborhood houses and those in the smaller towns, the idea is going to cheapen the theatres. We remember all too well in our early days when we were one of the judges in a baby contest and we remember with much regret the many things that were said to us by the mothers of the losers. Essanay suggests that where the picture is run for but one day as would probably be the case where the idea is of value, that the babies should be on the stage. In the first place, a considerable percentage of the theatres have no stage space, and in the second the exhibition is likely to tire those in the audience with the exception of the parents. Vote by the audiences is suggested as the manner of deciding the contests. Our objection to this idea is that while it may draw many patrons to the house to see the picture, it will leave too great a share of them displeased. It will not build for future business, and any idea that exploits the pictures of the day for the pictures of the future is a bad idea.

Another idea is the suggestion that the manager should admit babies in arms free. This might be a good suggestion for a special matinee, but it would hardly be an inducement to the ordinary patrons. As much as we all, theoretically, love the "kiddies" we don't like to be surrounded by a bunch of squalling youngsters.

The special appeal of this picture ought to be in the appeal to parents' pride, to the human side of the picture. Essanay offers a good idea in featuring pictures of babies in the lobby displays and in the advertising. Photographs and drawings are all right in picture exhibitions, but the personal human exhibition idea is going to discourage more patrons than it draws.

"A continuous laugh for an hour and a half" is an attractive catch line offered for this picture. That will bring more patrons than any contest that you may use.

KEEP off the "fakes" in the publicity matter that you use. There is nothing that gets an exhibitor in so bad with the newspaper and with the public as to print some story that is obviously untrue. One of the current press sheets brings us an account of the leading man being shot at by outlaws. Says the publicity man: "Garbed in the official uniform he was riding through a wilderness toward the camera when two outlaws in hiding there began firing at him." Can you imagine outlaws picking the front of a moving picture camera before which to pull off their deeds of base wickedness? This is the sort of moving picture publicity that hurts the theatre. Publicity men are hurting their product when they try to hand this out. We have omitted the name of the company sending out this story because we want to give warning.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Brady's Challenge is $10,000 for Red Cross

Producer of World Pictures, Brady-Made, Stakes Amount on His Four Latest Pictures as Compared with Special Price Features

WILLIAM A. BRADY, announcing four new features to be World Pictures Brady-Made, issues the challenge:

"I will donate ten thousand dollars from my personal funds to the Red Cross if within a space equal to that consumed in the production of these four World Pictures the same number of special price pictures of as good quality have been made—the decision to rest with a jury of exhibitors. This is a challenge for a comparison between regular World program fair price features of five reels each and an equal number of special price pictures no matter how long or pretentious.

"The history of motion picture success," said Colonel Brady, "is, that the biggest and most enduring hits are screen adaptations of stories which have been highly favored by the public in the theatre.

"World Pictures will immediately present an altogether remarkable series of screen versions of dramas which have enjoyed big careers in the oral theatre. Between September 13 and October 15 we shall publish no less than four such productions, and I desire to invite the closest of scrutiny as to their quality.

"The first of this series is 'Betsy Ross,' the title role of which is acted by Alice Brady. This story, by H. A. Du Souchet, author of 'My Friend from India,' not alone had a notable stage career but was widely circulated in book form. It carries a strong dramatic plot and faithfully reproduces certain events of importance in the history of our country.

"The second of the quartette is 'The Corner Grocery,' in which Madge Evans is featured with Lew Fields. The original of this comedy, with serious touches, was produced by Adolph Philipp in New York, where it had a record-breaking run although under the disadvantage of being interpreted in a foreign tongue.

"Third in the set is 'Shall We Forgive Her?' the central personages of which are assumed by June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley, with John Bowers playing an important part. The stage version of 'Shall We Forgive Her?' was written by Frank Harvey, a very well known contributor to the literature of the theatre, and it has been played repeatedly throughout the country with unqualified success, and there's absolutely no reason why the screen adaptation should not be acceptable.

"Finally comes 'The Burglar,' with Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley and Madge Evans at the head of a particularly effective company. The story first appeared as a novel from the pen of Frances Hodgson Burnett, who was also the author of 'Little Lord Fauntleroy.' It was made into a drama by Augustus Thomas, and quite possibly contributed more to the popularity of that justly famous author than any of his other plays.

"I am willing to let my judgment of values stand or fall upon the assertion that 'The Burglar' is the best picture play in five reels that ever was published."

Additions to George Walsh's Company

Owing to changes which were imperative in George Walsh's forthcoming picture, "The Yankee Way," several additions have been made to the star's cast.

The new line-up will consist of Mr. Walsh, Enid Markey, Josef Dowling, Charles Edler, James O'Shea, Edward Sedgwick, Edward Cecil and Tom Wilson.

"The House in the Mist" for Edith Storey

Metro's Play from a People's Magazine Novel Is Said to Have Adventure and Mystery Piled on Mystery in Its Plot

EDITH STOREY, in her first Metro production, will be starred in "The House in the Mist," an adaptation of a story in an August issue of the People's Magazine, Street & Smith publication. Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy, who wrote "The House in the Mist," are the authors of "The Matrimaniac," and other previous hits.

A six-reel special production will be made of "The House in the Mist," work on which will begin immediately at the Metro studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, New York, under the direction of Tod Browning, whose first pictures for Metro have been "Peggy, the Will o' the Wisp" and "The Jury of Fate," with Mabel Taliaferro as star.

"The House in the Mist" is frank out-and-out melodrama—a real mystery story—with a wonderful girl as its heroine. The story opens in the Adirondack Mountains, and later changes to the mountains of Virginia, varied by scenes from metropolitan life.

A girl (Carma Carmichael) is kidnapped from her summer home in the Adirondacks and taken to Virginia. Quincy Carmichael, Carma's uncle, takes an interest in Jack Carrington, a young man who tried to rescue the girl, and failed.

Adventure follows adventure and mystery piles upon mystery in an absorbing succession of events, illuminated by the courage and sweetness of Carma herself, and the determination of Jack. The solution is a wholly unexpected one, leading up to a magnificent climax. "The House in the Mist" is a photodrama that will command the attention from start to finish.

The role of Carma Carmichael is assigned to Edith Storey, and Bradley Parker will play Jack Carrington. Others in the cast are Harry S. Northrup and Frank Fisher Bennett. James J. Dunne will assist the director.

Charlie Chaplin in Fearsome Mountain Leaps

In the next Mutual-Chaplin special, nearing completion at Lone Star Studios, Los Angeles, Charlie Chaplin is an escaped convict who takes refuge in the Sierra Madre mountains. There are many outdoor mountain pictures.

The manner in which Chaplin evades capture not alone furnishes unlimited situations for the creation of laughter, but the fearlessness of his leaps from lofty cliffs and his climbs up steep embankments is almost unbelievable.

Chaplin reveals in his new picture his versatility as an athlete. In carrying out the new and strenuous stunts, he is not assisted in any manner by trick photography or mechanical devices. He has merely called upon the ability which he has held in reserve.

Juanita Hansen at Best in "Devil McCare"

Many words of praise are emanating from the Horsley publicity offices regarding the work of Juanita Hansen in "Devil McCare," a five-reel comedy-drama featuring Crane Wilbur.

This subject will be released through Art Dramas. It is the fourth of a series of Western pictures produced by Crane Wilbur under direction of Lorimer Johnstone.

$5,250,000 Program for the Year Announced by Mutual

President Freuler Discloses Big Plans in Firm Belief of Prosperous Season—Two Productions of Magnitude Each Week—Mutual President Believes in Long Runs

TWO features a week will be marketed to exhibitors by Mutual, beginning September 3. The year's production will mean an outlay of $5,250,000.

Such was the announcement made last week by John R. Freuler, president of Mutual. At the same time he announced the schedule of releases up to and including October 22. Coincidentally, Mr. Freuler expressed his belief that the coming fall and winter would, despite war time conditions and high prices for living, be most prosperous.

Prosperous Season Coming

"The collection of pictures, now complete and ready for delivery to our half a hundred exchanges represents a year of planning and effort and the most careful consideration of the picture market," observed Mr. Freuler.

"I am convinced that the motion picture theatres will find this fall and winter a particularly prosperous season. The circulation of money is lively and despite high living costs the people who constitute the big majority of motion picture patrons have more money to spend than ever.

"This is evidenced by the success of motion picture theatres, which are rapidly increasing their standard price of admission from ten cents to fifteen cents. Also the picture theatres are now not only presenting better pictures more worthy of the price, but they are putting them on with better music, better advertising and better showmanship.

Long Runs Best

"An important factor in the betterment of pictures is the longer run which they are getting at the better houses. In the days when a daily change of program was the general practice pictures could not be made as well as they are now made because the daily change policy on the part of the theatres forced high selling costs and service costs, meanwhile unnecessarily limiting the earning power of the picture for the theatre.

Laboratories of American Co. Open to Trade

Manager Nehls of Chicago Firm Announces Plant Can Handle 1,500,000 Feet of Film Weekly—Central Location Big Point

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that the huge laboratories of the American Film Company, Inc., are to be thrown open to those in the trade desiring printing and developing of the highest grade. The American plant in Chicago has a weekly capacity of over 1,500,000 feet of film and is equipped throughout with the very latest type of apparatus for the handling of both negative and positive.

The trade is aware of the reputation earned by the American's productions for technical perfection, and the same staff which supervises the handling of prints of Mary Miles Minter, Gail Kane, William Russell, Juliette Day, Helen Holmes, Charlie Chaplin and Margarita Fischer subjects will have charge of all the commercial work done for patrons of the company.

When interviewed at his office in the Chicago laboratories of the American Film Company, Inc., 6235 Broadway, Manager Richard R. Nehls, said: "In the past ten years the American plant has been asked many times to undertake the printing and developing of other films than those made in the American studios. Manufacturers of film, state rights men, and others have implored us to handle printing and development work for them, but we have always had to refuse. The demand became so insistent that we finally decided to yield to it, now that our plant capacity has reached the point where, practically speaking, it has no limit. We appreciate the fact that producers who have spent thousands and thousands of dollars for stars, directors, stage settings, noted authors and expert cameramen, are eager to ensure their printing and developing being worthy of the rest of their production, and now, for the first time, we believe they can make sure that it is so. Accordingly, we are throwing open our immense facilities to those in the trade seeking technical work of the highest class and permitting our staff of experts to supervise the work of outside concerns as if it were our own.

"American film productions have always been praised for their tinting, toning, printing and developing. They are uniform in quality throughout. Every stage of the work is handled by experts. Ten years of experience is back of every print we turn out to-day. Our mechanical equipment is unexcelled. Every bit of apparatus in our huge laboratories is of the very best. The films that are offered us for development and printing will be handled by the same corps of experts that handle our own productions—the American pictures, starring such favorites as Mary Miles Minter, Gail Kane, Juliette Day, William Russell, Margarita Fischer, and Charlie Chaplin.

"In addition to all of the above advantages—the central location of the American Film Company's plant alone would justify any film manufacturers in placing his development and printing work with us, purely on account of the saving in time and money in shipping his prints to the exchanges. Much time and money can be saved by printing and developing in Chicago."

Mrs. Vernon Castle Doubled in 90-Foot Jump

FOR the first time Mrs. Vernon Castle, the Pathe star, has been "doubled." It was not at her suggestion, either, but at the request of director Frank Crane of Astra. The stunt Mrs. Castle was called upon to do was far too perilous for her to be willing to take the responsibility of having a high salaried star laid up from injuries.

Mr. Crane with the Mrs. Vernon Castle company is now at Saranac Lake in the Adirondacks filming a feature, the climax of which is the leap for life on the part of the star from a ninety-foot cliff into shallow water below. Mrs. Castle expressed her regret that if the decision was taken to "double" her it would mean her record of never refusing to take a chance would be marred. "Marred be hanged," said Mr. Crane, "My record would be marred if you were laid up in a hospital for six weeks."

Somebody told the director of Miss Gertrude Martell, holder of the New York State girl's swimming championship for the 60 yard dash. She consented to do the jump and made it successfully.

Mae Murray's First Bluebird "The Princess Virtue"

"The Princess Virtue," upon which Robert Leonard began production last week, is to be the first Bluebird in which Mae Murray is to be starred. From a story written by Louise Winter "The Princess Virtue" is to be picturized and it has been put in scenario form by Fred Myton of the Bluebird staff of writers.

Miss Murray has a very unusual role with plenty of opportunity to display her talents. The principal support will be Wheeler Oakman, Paul Nicholson, Jean Hersholt, Gretchen Lederer, Clarissa Selwin and Harry Von Meter.

Special artists and decorators have been assigned to the Bluebird studios by the management to devote their undivided attention to the dressing and decorating of the sets.

During the making of the picture, Director Leonard will take his company to Coronado, Catalina Island, Santa Barbara and San Francisco and at least three weeks will be spent way from the Bluebird.

Nigel Barrie to Play in All "Bab" Stories

Nigel Barrie, who won fame in New York as a dancer with Joan Sawyer, has been engaged by Famous Players for the part of Carter Brooks in "The Celebrity," the "Sub-Deb" story by Mary Roberts Rinehart now being filmed with Marguerite Clark in the tale of Bab. Mr. Barrie will play the part of Carter Brooks in all "Bab" stories.

He was born in India, the son of Irish parents, and his name is Scotch, pronounced Nyjel, with the accent on the Ny.

No Amateurs Among Bill Hart's Cowboys

In the supporting cast for "The Narrow Trail," his first Ince-Artcraft photodrama of frontier life, Wm. S. Hart will have more than a score of the cowboys who have contributed notable bits of realism to many of his productions.

Some of these rugged "types" Hart regards as his very own, as they have appeared with him continuously ever since he made his debut as a screen actor under the direction of Thos. H. Ince.

Many Thrills in Mollie King's Pathe Serial

Mollie King says her new Pathe serial, "The Seven Pearls," to be released early in September, has more thrills to the yard than are to be found on a battlefield.

"In the plot my foster-father is a high Turkish official," says Miss King. "The Sultan orders my father's execution and I secure a reprieve from him and am given six months to find the pearl necklace, or if I fail to enter the Sultan's harem or forfeit my father's life.

"In our search for the pearls Mr. Hale and I go through earth, fire, water and air. I am sent up in a balloon tied by a rope which is being eaten away by acid and Mr. Hale comes up to me in a dirigible. We make a parachute descent, but fall into a lake and have our troubles there. The villain attempts to drown us in a specially prepared cellar of his house and sets his house on fire over our heads. We go into an abandoned mine and find in it a den of counterfeiters and have an interesting time with the gang."

To Film Chinese Comedies

Six one-reel comedies, translated from the Chinese by Robert B. Carson, will be the initial offering of the Screen Craft Photoplay Co., launched last week by George W. Shepard, the head of a big lumbering concern. Mr. Carson will also direct the making of the pictures.

The star will be Charlie Fang, who appeared in the serial "The Great Secret." Fang is a native of Canton, China, and was educated both here and in his own country. The first picture will be made shortly, but no set method of distribution has been announced as yet. William Wagner of the Frank Powell forces will be in charge of photographing the first release.

After the six films are completed a series of twelve five-reelers will be made.

Adding "Lots" to Fox Plant in West

To make room for the increasing comedy output of the William Fox organization, two more "lots" and stages have been added to the vast grounds the company already occupies in Hollywood, Cal.

"Too Much War in Films"—Albert E. Smith

President of Vitagraph Pledges Himself to Avoid War Subjects and Bring Brightness Into His New Pictures

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, holds that it is the duty of the producer of motion pictures to bring brightness and happiness into the lives of the people, and therefore to avoid war subjects as much as possible. In a recent interview he says:

"Now, I feel the policy of Vitagraph and every other motion picture manufacturer should be to make pictures that will take the minds of the people off the war and their troubles, make them laugh, and in that way make them happy. That is to be our policy, at any rate, although we stand ready, of course, to do anything that the Government may suggest to advance the national propaganda for patriotism.

"Generally speaking, though, I think we should seek for subjects as far detached from the war as it is possible to get them, because with the organization of the new national army by the draft the war has been brought right into the homes of ten million American families.

"My idea is to produce romances—not problem plays, but clean stories with a light atmosphere and a laugh lurking here and there in their literary folds.

"I do not think that we shall be able to get away from the war pictures entirely, because, apparently, every author and scenario writer in the world has his or her eye focussed on the great struggle, and the market is being flooded with such stories.

"Another thing. The rapid strides towards artistic perfection of photography which the motion picture industry is making will enable us to give these stories the proper treatment. Had this war come five or six years ago, before motion photography was developed to its present splendid standard, it is more than likely that a great deal of fine human interest material would have been lost to the generations that are to come.

"With all the resources that we can command, Vitagraph shall strive to give the public henceforth pictures that will bring brightness into the lives of people rather than gloom. Our pictures will be builded of 'sunshiny' tales, and when the war does creep into one, it will be so far in the background that its presence will hardly be felt."

"Little Miss Optimist" Is Not All Curls and a Smile

VIVIAN MARTIN'S first star picture for Paramount, "Little Miss Optimist," was written especially for her by Gardner Hunting. Luckily the character is not one of the saccharine "glad" parts that have pollyanned across the stage of late. There is enough of shadow to form a big contrast and the story gives evidence of having something besides curls and a smile.

Miss Martin plays the part of a girl newsie, Maisie-Rosie. Early parts of the picture show the delivery door of a big morning newspaper with the heroine struggling with real newsboys for her share of papers. As a newsie she meets Deal Hendrie, son of a wealthy family but practically starving because of his decision to be a musician against his family's wishes.

Maisie's brother Ben, employed as weigh master by a coal company is falsely accused of falsifying weights by Samuel Winter, an employee of John West. Subsequently West finds out that Winter has made false records, summons him to his room and is killed by Winter, after a terrific struggle.

The subsequent action is swift. Winter is finally arrested, Ben comes back to life and Hendrie, who has befriended the little optimist through all her trouble, confesses his love for her.

Douglas Back on Coast

W. A. S. Douglas, president of the Lasaida Film Company, producers of Baby Marie Osborne five-reel features for the Pathe program, has returned to the David Horsley Studios from an extended business tour of the East. Mr. Douglas has been in close touch with the developments taking place in the the Eastern film world and reports an era of unprecedented activity in picture production.

Multitude of Inquiries for Russian Pictures

N. S. Kaplan Reports Big Response to Announcement of Early Release; Negotiations Under Way for First View on Broadway

SINCE the announcement by N. S. Kaplan that his Russian repertory of films would soon be ready for release, it is stated that hundreds of communication have been received from exhibitors. Kaplan is enthusiastic at the response to his exploitation in the trade papers of these films.

"I am amazed," he said last week, "at the reception given to our general announcement. I had thought that the exhibitors of America would be interested to know what was being done in Russia to further the art to which they are devoted, but I had no idea that the response would be so general. My desk is covered with letters and telegrams asking for particulars regarding the system of release that we shall follow in presenting Russian Art films to the American trade. To all of them I have replied that I do not know; the reception given to the first picture which we present on Broadway in a few weeks will determine our plan of action. We have in Russia a motto or saying: 'Be sure you're right, then go ahead.'

"It is the intention of the Russian Art Film Corporation to be sure it is right before it goes ahead. The tremendous task of sorting and assembling for the American production the greater part of the fifty negatives which I brought from Moscow has been completed. From half a dozen the final choice will be made as to the initial production. We don't say that it will be the best picture of the lot—in fact, we believe that it will not be—but we promise that it will be representative of the generally high level of the art as it has been developed by the famous Moscow Art Theatre in Russia. We shall let the critical authorities and the exhibitors who know what their patrons want tell us what our policy shall be.

"There is no intention in the offices of the Russian Art Film Corporation to erect an elaborate foundation upon which to market Russian Art films, and then to find that while we have the material to put up the superstructure our foundation is all wrong. We don't presume to tell the man who is in close touch with the people the methods he shall use to reach them with Russian Art films. Rather we welcome his knowledge to tell us what methods we shall use."

Negotiations are now under way for a first showing of the Russian repertory in a Broadway theatre. Should there be delay in obtaining the theatre desired as early as present plans contemplate, a trade showing will be given. The theatre showing is preferred by Mr. Kaplan because of the opportunity it affords to obtain the professional and the lay verdicts at the same time. It is upon these verdicts that the distribution policy of the Russian Art Film Corporation will be determined.

Boy Scouts on "Knights of the Square Table"

D. W. Pollard, scout executive of the Los Angeles Council of Boy Scouts, has written to George Kleine as follows:

"'Knights of the Square Table' is one of the best, if not the best, Boy Scout photoplays ever produced and we feel it will be received by the Boy Scouts and public throughout the country. The balance of your entertainment was interesting, clean and instructive. If this is a sample program to be carried out by your company, it is our opinion you may be assured of the hearty support of the Boy Scouts of America."

Wedgwood Nowell Back to Old Love—Triangle

Wedgwood Nowell, who has been starred and featured by the Bluebird during the past year, has joined the Triangle forces at Culver City, Cal. Prior to his association with Bluebird, Mr. Nowell appeared on the Triangle program, his latest move therefore being a return to his former studio.

In "The Railroaders" George Fawcett Has Lead

George Fawcett, who was Judge Silas Whipple in "The Crisis," plays the principal role in "The Railroaders," a forthcoming Selig drama. According to the Selig announcements the new play compares favorably with "The Spoilers," "The Crisis" and "The Garden of Allah."

The role for Fawcett is that of Caleb Conover, who rises by the force of his strong will from the position of a railroad section boss to a multi-millionaire whose political influence controls an entire state.

The Selig Company makes special claims regarding the magnificent staging, particularly in the interior of the Conover mansion.

In support of Fawcett are Thomas Santachi, Bessie Eyton, Frank Clark, Fritzi Brunette, Frank Elliott and others. Colin Campbell directed "The Railroader."

To View the "Tanks" See Pathe's Pictures

The title of Pathe's war pictures, "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," is well chosen. The huge monsters are shown at rest, being groomed, being oiled and being painted "à la camouflage."

Their crews are crawling in and out, and we read that the men operating the tanks—large as the machines are—are the shortest and thinnest of the "Tommies." Tall men would have to sit or stoop and fat men might be stuck in trying to get out or in.

Photographs in the magazines do not indicate how large the tanks are, but these pictures do. They crawl like huge turtles and their appearance as they move is terrifying. We do not wonder that German soldiers, when they first saw them, took to their heels.

One sees them straddling trenches, getting over shell craters and smashing their way through barbed wire fence barricades. They are seen getting mired where it seems they must stay mired, but they go on after a time, getting out of the mud by their own power.

Initial Elsie Ferguson Film Is Completed

With the completion of the big Algerian street scenes for Elsie Ferguson's initial picture, "Barbary Sheep," early last week, the production of this super-photoplay drew to a close at the Famous Players-Lasky Studio in Fort Lee. For practically two months work on this production has been in progress under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, and it is announced that the film is the most elaborate ever staged at this studio in New Jersey.

For the big street scenes in which two thousand persons took part a complete Algerian village was built, and on the last day of the production of the film several thousand "fans" from New Jersey and New York gathered on the streets and nearby roof-tops to watch the unusual proceedings.

Advance reports are that Elsie Ferguson will prove a revelation to screen fans in this production. Her supporting cast includes Lumsden Hare, Pedro de Cordoba, Macy Harlem, Alex Shannon and Maude Ford. Robert Hitchens is author of the piece.

"The Outcast" on Screen as It Was on Stage

Dell Henderson, who directed "The Outcast," the first Empire All-Star Corporation production for release through Mutual, says the part of the public that believes plays have to be materially altered for screen showing will get a surprise.

The settings for the picture were taken from the Frohman storehouse and the costumes used in the Frohman production were faithfully reproduced. Mr. Henderson says he would ask nothing better than all plays to require so little change. He adds, "A good story is a good story whether for stage, magazine or screen."

Title for Valeska Suratt Play

Valeska Suratt's newest William Fox feature, on which work was begun a short time since, has been titled "A Rich Man's Plaything." Randolph Lewis wrote the story and Carl Harbaugh is the director.

Annette Kellermann in "Queen of the Sea"

William Fox Announces More-Than-Million Dollar Sub-Sea Production on Which Work Has Already Begun at Bar Harbor

"QUEEN OF THE SEA" is the title decided upon for the new sub-sea picture in which Annette Kellermann will be presented by William Fox as premier for the season of 1917-18.

Miss Kellermann and a company are now at Bar Harbor, Maine. Work will begin under the direction of John G. Adolfi. The new picture, of which George Bronson Howard is the author, will be, it is announced, entirely different in action and story to "A Daughter of the Gods," another of his masterpieces.

In the making of "Queen of the Sea," Mr. Fox will have the co-operation and assistance of the Smithsonian Institute and the United States Fisheries Commission, at Washington, and the British Museum. Scenes will be taken at the bottom of the ocean by means of a patented submarine apparatus which is expected to furnish something extraordinary in the way of entertainment.

Mr. Fox will personally oversee the production of "Queen of the Sea." He promises that it will excel in sumptuousness anything ever seen on stage or screen. He was the first producer to spend $1,000,000 on a production—"A Daughter of the Gods"—and plans to make the new Kellerman film a more-than-million-dollar picture.

William Fox says he intends the "Queen of the Sea" shall surpass not only anything he has ever made, but shall be the absolute last word in motion picture production. He is aiming at a high mark, as is shown by his statement that the new Kellermann film must eclipse such productions as "A Daughter of the Gods," "The Honor System," "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "The Conqueror."

Well-Known Stage Star Joins Metro to Lead in Big Play

CAMILLA DAHLBERG, who originated the role of Bianca, in "The Great Lover," with Leo Ditrichstein, has been engaged by Metro Pictures Corporation to play the important part of the woman spy in "Draft 258," Metro's new patriotic photodrama, which has already been placed in production. Mabel Taliaferro is the star under whom Miss Dahlberg will work in "Draft 258," which was written by William Christy Cabanne and June Mathis.

Miss Dahlberg has starred both in Europe and America, in "La Main," a pantomime version of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," which was later portrayed in another form by the dancer, Anna Pavlowa. She appeared before many representatives of royalty, including three emperors.

Miss Dahlberg appeared in pantomime versions of "The Taming of the Shrew," Ibsen's "The Doll House," "Salome," and Portia in "The Merchant of Venice." Coming to America she was engaged by David Belasco to appear in "Years of Discretion," later playing in the Ditrichstein production.

From pantomime to motion picture work was an easy progression. "The Heart of Nichette" and "After Many Days" were among her first screen appearances. "The Seven Sisters," "In the Bishop's Carriage," "Caprice" and "Tess of the D'Ubervilles" were other productions. For Metro she appeared in "A Million Dollars" with William Faversham.

Strong Brady Cast in "The Marriage Market"

"The Marriage Market," shortly to be published by World-Pictures Brady-Made, will have one of those star casts for which this producing concern has become well known. This will include Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley and other very well-known players.

The play is adapted from a widely circulated novel published under another title.

Left and Right: J. Warren Kerrigan in Action in His First Paralta Production, "A Man's Man," to be released through Triangle in September; Centre: Eleanor Crowe, who has Ingenue Role in Kerrigan's Second Paralta Production, "Turn of a Card"

Clubs Want to See "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship"

Members of three theatrical clubs have asked to attend a pre-release date private showing of Taylor Holmes' first film made by Essanay under the title of "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship." It is to be distributed through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service.

Mr. Holmes, on the speaking stage, was widely known. He starred and made a hit in "His Majesty, Bunker Bean," and has also to his credit high scores in such comedies as "The Third Party," "The Million" and "The Commuters."

Klein - Edison - Selig - Essanay's Greater New York City branch office will stage a private showing if it is decided that there is to be one given for the benefit of the three theatrical clubs mentioned above.

Love Plot in "The Martinache Marriage"

In "The Martinache Marriage," second of the four-reel "Falcon Features" produced by General Film, the heroine is discovered as a neglected little flower girl in the Paris streets. Injured by the car of Horace Martinache, a wealthy American, she is befriended by him and placed in the way of becoming educated and cultivated. He departs for home. The story then shifts to several years later.

Eric Martinache, a philandering nephew of Horace Martinache, returning from a trip abroad, falls in love with a young opera star, Sara St. Ypriex, who is on the ship. He ushers her to his haughty mother's house as his affianced, a circumstance which brings consternation. Horace Martinache is enlisted to break up the romance. How he drifts into a chivalric proposal of marriage to her to bear out the traditions of his family for fair dealing is dramatically worked out, as well as the development of the love of the two for each other, the girl then proving to be the child of the Paris streets whom his kindness had given a chance in life.

The cast obtained by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer includes Margaret Landis, Philo McCullough, Mollie McConnell, Leota Lorraine, Julien Beaubien, Vincent Beresford and Frank Brownlee.

Gripping Battle Scenes Filmed for "The Conqueror"

The William Fox Studios expended $5,000 for cannon and musket ammunition used in battle scenes in "The Conqueror," in which William Farnum appears in the historic role of General Sam Houston. The location was Cahuenga Canyon, near Los Angeles.

For a fortnight 450 Mexicans, about as many Sioux Indian braves, and a hundred men and women dressed as frontier settlers of 1830, with full 600 horses, were used to reproduce the battles of that day.

Director R. A. Walsh had nine iron cannon cast. They were precise duplicates of the historic artillery used by Houston. The cannon burned up $2,000 in munitions. Fourteen other cannon were of wood, and with chemicals, flare puffs were created for the cameras to register. Hand grenades not unlike those used in Europe today were exploded almost constantly for days. The nine real cannon were allowed 500 shots each and the "extras" with muskets had unlimited blank cartridges.

William Fox describes the production as a vivid picturization of the heroic life and romantic times of General Sam Houston. It is the first Fox "Standard" picture in which William Farnum has starred.

John Brown's Birthplace in New Metro Feature

John Brown's birthplace figures in a new Metro production with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in leading roles. The famous abolitionist was born near Winsted, Conn., it seems. Flashes taken near the old town show Cold Spring, Highland Lake, Colebrook River, Second Cobble and Lake Wonksunkmunk.

One of the local sponsors for the selection of Winsted as a "location" for a motion picture feature is Louis Stone of the Evening Citizen, who sends out the picturesque snake stories that put Winsted on the map, and who organized the "Bald Headed Men's Club."

In the play Bushman takes the part of "Two Gun" Carter. The whole company, horses and all, will be shipped by rail to Ramapo Mountain for ensuing scenes. Maxwell Karger directs the production.

The Girl with the Yawn and the Girl in the Pajamas is Margaret Landis. Vincent Beresford Devours the Poetry. Both Scenes Are from General Film's "The Martinache Marriage," Directed by the Horkheimers

"Extras" Make Record Harvest at Fox Studios

Almost 5,000 principals and "extras" were employed in one day at the William Fox studios in the West by the various directors of pictures in the making.

J. Gordon Edwards, director of "Cleopatra," had in one of his scenes 3,000 men and women. Richard Stanton, who had just finished "The Spy," with Dustin Farnum, had on his set 250 "extras."

The other crowds were working under C. M. and S. A. Franklin on Fox Kiddie Features and Tom Mix and Charles Parrott on Foxfilm comedies.

Mary Garden Delays to Avoid Submarines

Mary Garden intended to leave France in time to start work in the Goldwyn Studios the first week in September on "Thais."

The liner she was to sail on has been forced to postpone departure several days. That will bring Miss Garden to America just that many days later than she hoped. A cablegram from her to Goldwyn says:

"The message I am bringing to America must wait. But that will only make it better. Have written you today. With every good wish."

This is Miss Garden's second reference to a message for America. What it is nobody on this side of the water knows.

Back to Stage with "What Happened to Jones"

George Broadhurst, one of the most prolific as well as one of the most successful of native playrights, whose plays have enjoyed considerable vogue in their screen versions, is to revive shortly at the Forty-eighth Street theatre, New York, his famous farce, "What Happened to Jones."

Like his more recent plays, "Bought and Paid For," "Today," "The Law of the Land," and "What Money Can't Buy," "What Happened to Jones," written twenty years ago, has been done in pictures.

Battle on Pyramid in "Woman God Forgot"

The battle scenes for "The Woman God Forgot" attracted great crowds to Santa Monica this week. The settings were built high in air as the actual fighting was supposed to be on the sides of a pyramid. Some of the actors fell and struggled for two hundred feet down this pyramid. Artcraft says the scenes out-thrill anything except "Joan the Woman."

Cecil B. DeMille, director, on a high platform and with megaphone and a telephone transmitter attached to his chest, directed the big scenes several hundred feet away from the set, where his view of the entire proceedings was perfect. Not an opportunity for a thrill missed his attention, and on several occasions he rushed special camera men to points of vantage for close-ups of startling bits of realism.

On another platform, near the one on which Mr. DeMille stood, was seated the star, Geraldine Farrar, and her personal staff. A telephone line connecting her with the director was attached to her chair and on several occasions she offered suggestions.

Three of the First Goldwyn Productions

Goldwyn Announces Its List of Productions

Offers Abundant Proof That Performance Has Equaled Promise with This Vigorous Young Organization—Outlines Work Ahead

WHEN Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, almost a year ago, announced its intention of making a large number of costly productions, perhaps as many as a dozen, in advance of its first release the following September, there were many expressions of doubt heard.

Exhibitors throughout the country will be interested to receive the first complete announcement of Goldwyn's accomplished production work. Thus far the completed Goldwyn Pictures are:

Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," by Margaret Mayo; Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine," by Margaret Mayo; Maxine Elliott in "The Eternal Magdalene," by Robert McLaughlin; Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn," by Basil King; Mae Marsh in "Sunshine Alley," by Mary Rider; Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb; Mae Marsh in "Fields of Honor."

Pictures now in the making at Goldwyn's New Jersey studios are the following: Mabel Normand in "Joan of Flatbush," by Porter Emerson Browne; Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn; Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," by Edward Childs Carpenter.

Early in September, Mary Garden, returning from France, will begin work in "Thais," by Anatole France.

The new organization, so quickly built to full stature by Samuel Goldfish, Edgar Selwyn, Archibald Selwyn and their associates, has kept pace in performance with its rather guarded promises made during the months of preparation.

Organization has been effected throughout the United States. Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., of Canada, is actively operating in the Dominion. Arrangements are virtually completed for prompt operation of Goldwyn organizations in England, Australia, South America and other more distant lands.

"The Spreading Dawn," by Jane Cowl, Is Completed

Jane Cowl's first Goldwyn play, "The Spreading Dawn," has just been completed. The final scene is a theatre fire, with the rush and panic of spectators, in which several hundred extras took part.

A theatre and expensive settings were built especially for this scene at Cliffside, N. J., opposite New York City. When this was burned the fire could be seen from many points in the big city, on the opposite side of the Hudson. The blaze was at night and the glare of the fire and specially placed lights were the aids of the camera.

Orme Caldara was engaged for Miss Cowl to play the leading male role opposite to her as in "Within the Law" and "Common Clay." In addition there are Henry Stephenson, Charles Hammond, Edith McAlpin, Lettie Ford, Marion Knapp and Antoinette Erwin in the cast.

Crane Wilbur Rescues Dogs from the Pound

Crane Wilbur in his forthcoming Art Drama "Unto the End," in the part of Jim, rescues a boy's dog from the pound, and, placing the rest of the dogs in the place in the tonneau of his car, carries them all to his home.

In the dining room he seats one dog in each chair at the table and orders the horrified servants to serve the hungry animals.

The property man succeeded in getting a motley array of canines from the Los Angeles dog pound. The picture they present, together with the action in which they are used, forms a delightful part of the production.

Madge Kennedy's Next Is "Nearly Married"

Madge Kennedy's second Goldwyn production will be the stage success, "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn, Goldwyn having purchased this farce comedy during the current week.

"Nearly Married," when presented several seasons ago in New York, had an all-season run at the Gaiety theatre and went on the road also. At the time of its stage presentation it gave Bruce McRae a role and also brought Ruth Shepley into notice.

Fairbanks and Company at Laramie for Next Play

Douglas Fairbanks and his company have made the long jump to Laramie, Wyo., for a location in which to take the outside scenes in "'Fancy Jim' Sherwood." This play Fairbanks describes as a real on-the-level, rip-roaring Western comedy-drama written around the exploits of the "Hole in the Wall" gang of cattle rustlers.

It is the intention to take a complete ranch in which to house the company, made up mainly of cowboys who have lived the life on the range in Montana and Wyoming.

The "Douglas Fairbanks special," so it is said, included two Pullmans and three freight cars to carry the effects of the company and twenty-one horses, including "Smiles," the one Fairbanks rode in "Wild and Woolly."

In the company are Eileen Percy, Frank Campau, H. A. Strickland, Fred Burns, Rhea Haines, Joseph Henaberry, Millard Webb, James P. Hogan, Victor Fleming, Harry Thorp, Glen MacWilliams, "Slim" Paget, "Shorty" Brooks, Ed Burns, "Skinny" McPherson, "Monte" Blue, "Spike" Robinson, Granville Sully, Edgar Newhan, Dick Crawford, Bob Chapin, Billy Emerson, Edwin Tanaka, James Warrington, Billy Shea and Henry Malstead.

John Fairbanks, manager and Benny Zeidman, publicity representatives, went along.

Belle Bennett Takes Role Meant for Louise Glaum

Belle Bennett, at Triangle's Culver City studio, stepped from the settings for "Judgment of the Guilty" into those for "Gonda" with scarcely time to change her costumes.

"Gonda," which is described as colorful as "The Flame of the Yukon," was intended for Louise Glaum, but this star, after finishing "Idolators," was taken ill and is ordered by her doctor to rest a week or so. Miss Bennett has taken the vampire role so well that it is said Walter Edwards, director, is delighted. In the cast are Jack Livingston, Jack Richardson, Lee Hill and William Ellingford.

Filming of "Cleopatra" Ends With Battle Scene

Spectacle Described as One of the Greatest Ever Produced—25,000 Used in the Fox Piece in Which Theda Bara Stars—Many Big Scenes

LAST scenes for the Fox Theda Bara spectacle, "Cleopatra," were filmed last week on Newport Bay, sixty miles south of Los Angeles, when several thousand men were used as soldiers and sailors in the battle of Actium, one of the four big events depicted in this photoplay. The making of these scenes was a gigantic undertaking because it required transporting the men, costumes, properties and implements of warfare for the scenes. The nearest railroad station to the location is a distance of ten miles and from here auto trucks accommodated the needs of Director J. Gordon Edwards and his staff.

The scenes made at this point show the camp of soldiers of Cleopatra and Antony, which consisted of Romans, Egyptians and Nubians, and also the encampment of Octavius Cæsar. Thousands of horses with chariots and other vehicles were required, together with thousands of tents.

In the sea battle approximately eighty boats were used, and according to the script the Cæsar fleet was victorious after Cleopatra sailed away with a portion of her men when incorrectly informed that Antony had been killed. Two hundred fifty thousand feet of lumber was used to mask the boats and transform them into the type used in 31 B.C. The boats were equipped with catapults and the scenes made at night showed these machines throwing fire-balls from one boat to another until eventually practically every vessel of the two fleets caught fire. Some spectacular water night scenes were filmed. The battle of Actium was one of the first naval battles of any great consequence in the world's history and Director Edwards sought to reproduce this according to the best reports in history.

Other big events of the spectacle include the encampment of Cleopatra and her army on the desert after being driven out from Alexandria by Julius Cæsar. A location near Oxnard on the Mojave Desert served for these scenes. Another shows the forum of the senate at Rome when Antony delivers his oration over the body of Julius Cæsar. Still another series of big scenes is that of the banquet where Cleopatra induces Antony to join forces with her that they may become rulers of the world. Figures given out at the studio estimate that between 25,000 and 30,000 people appear in this production.

The battle of Actium scenes required eight days for filming and almost every day four auto trucks were needed to carry the lunches required for the men from the railroad station to the filming location. The payroll on the last day required $35,000. This amount was all in silver dollars and was given to the men as they boarded the train for Los Angeles after completing their work. From ten to eighteen cameramen were used on the scenes every day, the amount of film exposed exceeding 100,000 feet.

Thousands of people daily drove to Newport Bay from Los Angeles to witness the scenes. The autos parked along the roadside on the border of the bay extended for several miles, and the Palisades, which surround the bay on all sides, were covered with machines at every point where an advantageous view could be had.

Harold Lockwood's "Under Handicap" a Seven-Reel Feature

FRED J. BALSHOFER, president and general manager of Yorke-Metro, has decided to produce the Harold Lockwood picture, "Under Handicap," as a seven-reel special feature. Originally it was intended to be a five-reel production.

The development of the story proved to the producer there were possibilities in the novel which could not be successfully handled in less than seven reels. This is because really there are three different scenes all of vital importance to the plot.

"In all of Lockwood's former pictures," declared Balshofer, upon the completion of this feature, "he was never shown to the advantage he is in 'Under Handicap.' As the story develops he is seen in the atmosphere of New York society, and later, on the ranch, and finally, as a big factor in putting through a reclamation enterprise which forms the conclusion of the story.

"It has now been three months since we began the filming of this story, and I can say with all sincerity that the result of the work, as shown in the final run, has proved that the extra time devoted to the production of the feature was worth while.

"We can't make good pictures and make them in a hurry, if we are to achieve productions which are finished in every sense of the word. The making of this present picture has demonstrated the necessity for thoroughness in the editing of the film. We have shot about thirty thousand feet of film.

"The stupendousness of the task of cutting can be realized when it is stated we have done little else day and night for the last two weeks except assemble the reels of the picture, run them over and over in our projection room to eliminate every unnecessary scene, and bring the entire production down to a continuity perfectly smooth and including only scenes which mean something to the movement of the drama."

Paramount Finds Lots of Work for Charles Maigne

When the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation procured the rights to Robert Hichens' famous novel "Barbary Sheep," Charles Maigne was selected to transform the drama into screen form for Elsie Ferguson.

Some of Mr. Maigne's more recent contributions to the screen have been adaptations of George Middleton's "Her Strange Wedding," in which Fannie Ward starred, of Edwin Milton Royle's "The Squaw Man's Son," starring Wallace Reid, and of Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Bottle Imp."

All Norma Talmadge's Plays Will Be Taken from Books

Following the success of her recent screen adaptation of Cynthia Stockley's novel "Poppy" Miss Norma Talmadge has announced that in the future all of her scenarios will be written from books. The avowed intention of the young screen favorite is carried out in "The Moth," her newest photoplay taken from the novel by William Dana Orcutt, which has been announced to follow "Poppy" among the Norma Talmadge releases, and in "The Secret of the Storm Country," on which Miss Talmadge will begin work next week in Ithaca, N. Y.

"The Secret of the Storm Country" was written by Grace Miller White as a sequel to "Tess of the Storm Country" which is also familiar to the film public.

Miss Talmadge's decision in favor of the scenario taken from a popular novel is based on a close study of the way in which the general public has received her appearance in photoplays adapted from novels.

"The success of 'Poppy' primarily has convinced me that any story which has been widely read in book form will be doubly successful as a screen play. More than that—it will reach a far larger audience in celluloid form than it ever did between book covers," says Miss Talmadge in support of her theory.

A popular book or a popular drama necessarily reaches a more or less limited audience, while the motion picture is universal in its appeal and has the most cosmopolitan of audiences.

Ann Murdock Working on Fifth Picture, "My Wife"

Ann Murdock, who will be remembered as the last star made by Charles Frohman, is now busily engaged in rendering permanent—by the aid of motion pictures—the plays that made Frohman's name famous the world over.

She is working on her fifth picture, "My Wife," written by Michael Morton and directed by Dell Henderson, who has also directed three others of the plays that will shortly be shown to the public with Miss Murdock in the stellar role.

"Outcast," the first of the Empire pictures that the Mutual Film Corporation will release September 10, is one of the most dramatic and strongly appealing stories that has ever been written.

The other three are "The Impostor," "The Richest Girl," and "The Beautiful Adventure."

Selig to Produce "The Still Alarm"

"The Still Alarm" will be produced at the Selig studios, Los Angeles, under the direction of Colin Campbell.

Always a play of spectacular appeal on the legitimate stage, it will prove much more so in the screen version, where effects not possible to produce on the stage will be shown in realistic vividness. It will be necessary to build city streets and houses.

The cast will be headed by Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Fritzi Brunette.

Accessions to Universal's Comedy Company

Among the new players engaged to work at Universal City are Mattie Cummont and Henry Murdock, laugh-makers, who will be under the direction of W. W. Beaudine.

Mattie is the short, roly-poly woman who has been working recently with the Fox Company and with Max Linder. Henry Murdock has been working with the Kalem Company for a year or more, first with its Florida Company and more recently with Ham and Bud in California.

King Vidor, formerly scenario editor of the La Salle Company has been engaged to write for the oddly assorted pair.

Another new comedy man to join the Universal is Al Santell, who has been added to the directing staff to alternate with Craig Hutchinson in staging comedies.

Use Private Sunken Gardens for Cleopatra Picture

The sunken gardens at the home of former Governor Hazard were used for the Roman scenes in the William Fox production of "Cleopatra" now in the making at Los Angeles, Cal. Theda Bara, the world-famous star, appears in the stell role.

Mr. Hazard said that the pleasure of watching the picture being screened was more than sufficient to compensate him for placing the grounds at the company's disposal. The Fox studios, however, made a liberal donation to the Red Cross fund through the local bureau.

Woods Keeps His Assistant

Mary H. O'Connor has accepted a position as assistant to Frank E. Woods, general manager of productions at the Lasky studios in California. Miss O'Connor was for a long time assistant to Mr. Woods during his regime as general manager of Fine Arts, and it was at his special request that the Lasky Company induced Miss O'Connor to again become his assistant when he took up his official duties at the Lasky Studio.

Thrilling Stunts in Universal's "Red Ace"

Marie Walcamp Leaps from Racing Auto to Lightning Express; Swings Across Chasm; Dives Sixty Feet and Faces the Man-Beast

UNIVERSAL is about to launch a new mystery serial, starring Marie Walcamp, entitled "The Red Ace." The opening episode will be released October 8, following the conclusion of "The Gray Ghost." Jacques Jaccard is the author and director of the new thriller. The tale is of a lost platinum mine in British Columbia, the location of which is sought by the secret agents of a foreign government.

Marie Walcamp will be supported by Larry Payton, in the role of a private of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. L. M. Wells takes the part of Fouchard, the traitorous tavern keeper in a Canadian mining camp. Bobby Mack is the faithful messenger and bodyguard of the heroine. Charles Brindley impersonates Steele Heffern, posing as a gambler but is in reality the executive head of the foreign power's forces in British Columbia. Marian Shelby as "Dutch Kate" is apparently a waitress in Fouchard's tavern, but her real activities are not disclosed until the end of the serial.

Harry Archer plays the role of Dr. Hertzman, head of the foreign secret service in America. Noble Johnson as Little Bear is a faithful Indian, and Yvette Mitchel as Red Fawn, his sister.

In addition, there is a strange phantom, half man, half beast, who pounces on his prey from tree-tops and snatches passing riders from their saddles without seeming effort.

A troop of Royal Northwest Mounted Police, a settlement of half-breed Indians in a large native village, built especially for this serial, and the platinum mine, whose entrance is through the bottom of the mountain lake, add realism to the scenic outdoor settings.

Marie Walcamp, in the opening episodes, is required to jump from a racing automobile to the platform of a swiftly moving train; to swing across a chasm 123 feet deep on a tightly stretched rope, and finally to negotiate a 60-foot dive from an overhanging rock into Lost Lake. She is also given many opportunities to display her remarkable horsemanship.

Literary Publication Lauds Pictures as Reformers

Writers' Bulletin and Literary Review Passes Upon Merits of Pictures as Educators and Reformers—Praise for the Good Work That Is Being Accomplished

THE motion picture can "educate and reform as well as entertain," says the Writers' Bulletin and Literary Review in its editorial columns. Further on down the columns of this publication is found the following:

"The Humanitarian League and the People's Campaign League the first led by Misha Appelbaum, editor of the Humanitarian Magazine, and the latter by Mrs. Grace Humiston, an attorney-at-law, a modern Portia, with a sense of humanitarianism as well as justice, have been making a vigorous fight in New York State for the doing away of the death penalty, and the work of these leagues is extending in this respect to other states. Out in Chicago, Maibelle Heikes Justice, a writer who makes her home in New York City, is reported as being present at the working out of her photodrama, 'Who Shall Take My Life?' filmed by the Selig Company. Miss Justice formerly lived in Chicago. In getting material for her drama, she spent a day in the Death House of Sing Sing prison, the state prison of New York. Within the past few days word has come to us that the State of Illinois will abolish the death penalty. If Miss Justice's play has helped with this humanitarian work, then one writer at least may feel she has not striven in vain for humanity. The People's Campaign League has under way plans for presenting photoplays that will bring home to the public a realizing sense of the horrors of the old law of 'An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth,' under which many an innocent one has gone to his doom. All hail to the 'movie' which can educate and reform as well as entertain!"

Scrubgirl to Society Matron Is Pauline Frederick's Jump

Paline Frederick, makes a big jump from her last Paramount picture "The Love That Lives," to her newest one, "Double Crossed," recently completed and scheduled for release in September.

The leap is from the part of a scrub woman, toiling with mop and brush in a seven-story office building, to the young wife of a successful husband, playing about in Long Island Summer society.

The settings used for the Long Island home were made from photographic reproductions of a millionaire's home furnished by the owner himself to Director Robert Vignola.

Miss Frederick will be supported by Crauford Kent, of recent musical comedy fame, as a new leading man. Others in the cast include William Riley Hatch, Clarence Handysides, Harris Gordon and Joseph Smiley.

Dwan to Produce Pictures with Vital Topical Themes

ALLAN DWAN, who supervises all Triangle productions made in the East, is gradually putting into operation a policy of picture making, whereby he aims to specialize in pictures treating of timely issues touching on the every-day life of American people.

There is no intention of making costume plays, vampire pictures or historical productions at the Yonkers studio, over which Dwan is director general. It is his belief that there are enough live issues in the present-day life of average humanity to make dramatic material of the first order, and his beliefs are being substantiated by the scenarios which have come to his attention during the past month. At a time when motion picture directors, as a whole, are complaining of a dearth of photoplays, this supervisor is quoted as saying that his only difficulty is in making a selection from so many available offerings.

As indicative of his general policy of production, "The Food Gamblers," recently issued, is an example. It is entertainment that treats constructively of a national evil, and one which is receiving the attention not only of one class of people but of virtually every family in America.

"A Successful Failure," "The Man Who Made Good" and "American, That's All," three other productions from the Yonkers studio, all treat of some particular phase of business life as faced by young America.

Art Dramas, to Hold Catherine Calvert, Signs Contract

CATHERINE CALVERT, widow of the late Paul Armstrong, who has appeared in three U. S. Amusement-Art Dramas, has been signed to a long-termed contract. Art Dramas announces this is done in deference to a demand from exhibitors all over the country and to make sure that Miss Calvert will be in all forthcoming pictures.

So far Miss Calvert has been screened in "The House of Cards," "The Peddler" and "Think it Over," though the last has not yet reached exhibitors. In the first play she had heavy dramatic work, in the second a sympathetic part and in the third a touch of pleasing comedy. Miss Calvert says:

"The stage loses its glamor after a season or two, and the actress comes to realize its drabness and emptiness. Not so the screen. Work in the studio is always interesting and inspiring. It is a wider field of expression and gives one all sorts of opportunities that are lacking in either vaudeville or straight dramatic work."

Herbert Blache, president of the U. S. Amusement Corporation, was attracted by Catherine Calvert's work on the stage several years ago when she was starring in her husband's plays.

At that time he saw excellent screen material in her. The death of Mr. Armstrong at that time caused her to retire from the stage, and to make the announcement that she had said farewell to her profession.

Mr. Blache kept her in his mind, however, and several months ago approached her with an offer to star in his picture, "House of Cards." The lure of the art was too much for her to withstand, and she accepted. As a matter of fact she had been contemplating returning to public life for some time, she admits.

Her return was acclaimed by all those who had admired her on the stage, and her screen work was so excellent, in spite of the fact that she was without camera experience, that every one saw in her great possibilities, and these possibilities have not yet been disillusionized.

New Orleans Company to Produce High Class Features

THE Diamond Film Company is organized in New Orleans to produce motion picture features, each to be typical of the open sunshine of the South. Arthur B. Leopold attended to legal matters connected with incorporation and organization.

It is announced that only the most famous motion picture stars will be engaged for the casts of the companies to be used. R. M. Chisholm and Captain W. J. Hannon were authorized to go on to New York to choose in the film center a competent man for general director. They are after one of the best known directors in the country.

The company, which has a cash capital of $100,000, has purchased the complete plant and studio of the Nola Film Company, the largest studio and plant south of Philadelphia and east of Chicago. In fact, it is the third largest plant and studio in this country. It fronts 150 feet on Bayou St. John by 639 feet in depth, and is an ideal location and fully equipped with all the latest machines and devices.

With everything favorable for the making of pictures, this company expects to prove to the world that New Orleans is the spot for manufacturing and finishing pictures of class and distinction.

A first announcement says: "The climatic conditions are perfect and scenery of all kinds abounds. There is no question about New Orleans being an ideal place for the manufacture of pictures, as several of the most noted stars, including Clara Kimball Young, Anita Stewart, William Farnum, Bert Lytell, Hazel Dawn, Kathlyn Williams and others, came here looking for material, and all of the pictures produced from New Orleans and its atmosphere were an instantaneous success."

In the board of directors and stockholders, which includes R. M. Chisholm as president and L. S. Boudreaux, who are owners of the Diamond theatre property, are Captain W. J. Hannon, well-known capitalist of New Orleans; Captain James Ashton of the Illinois Central Railroad, John B. Warfield of Schumert & Warfield, C. L. Darragh, capitalist of Galveston, Tex., owner of the largest picture house in that city, M. H. Morrill and others.

The company will begin operation upon the return of Messrs. Chisholm and Hannon from the East.

Three Days of Stage Fighting for W. S. Hart

There are going to be some thrilling fight scenes in the William S. Hart first Artcraft production.

Prior to his leaving on location, Hart spent three days taking the fight scenes on the Artcraft stage. According to the number of battered heads and damaged hands, it would appear that the bad man of the movies has whipped everyone in the studio. Hart himself was knocked down several times, but escaped with merely badly battered knuckles and a very sore chin.

J. Stuart Blackton's Play Has Oyster Bay Location

Some of the exterior scenes for "The World for Sale," first feature picture to be produced for Paramount by J. Stuart Blackton, are being taken this week on Commodore Blackton's estate in Oyster Bay.

For the "sympathetic villain" part of Jethro Fawe in Sir Gilbert Parker's romantic tale, Mr. Blackton has chosen Norbert Wicki, a Polish actor, of prominence among the Poles. In the part of Jethro, the Romany Villain, Mr. Wicki looks as if he stepped directly from the pages of the book.

Mr. Wicki has scored previous successes with Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge and Alice Brady. His present part of Jethro Fawe is second in importance among the males to that of Conway Tearle, who plays the lead in "The World for Sale," and is said to offer Wicki wonderful opportunity for artistic work. Anna Little plays the principal feminine role.

Adirondack Mountain Pictures in "Behind the Mask"

Scenes for the coming U. S. Amusement Corporation-Art Drama, which is entitled "Behind the Mask," and in which Catherine Calvert is starring, were taken in the Adirondack Mountains, where a great portion of the story is laid, and are remarkable for their beauty. The excellent photography enhances them to a remarkable degree. The company making this picture spent several weeks in these localities taking exterior scenes.

Mme. Alice Blache, who directed the picture, had excellent material to work with in the story by Charles T. Dazey, which was adapted to the screen by Frederick Rath.

Craters, Trenches and Bombs on Old Lubin Estate

On the old Lubin estate, formerly the property of John F. Betz, brewer, at Betzwood, near Philadelphia, a location was found for battle scenes in "For the Freedom of the World."

Trench fighting, preceded by artillery battle, was given a realistic representation there the other day. Enlisted men from the United States Ambulance Corps, Allentown camp, took part. Trenches were dug on the top of one hill and on the one opposite craters were created.

Comedy Company Organized by Harry Garson

The Fun-Art Film Company has been organized by Harry I. Garson, who is also personal manager for Clara Kimball Young, to produce a series of two-reel pictures. Mr. Garson has signed a contract for five years with the well-known and youthful vaudeville team of Ray and Gordon Dooley. These comedies will be known as the "Dooley series," and it is Mr. Garson's belief that he has a real find in this team of clever artists, who are 19 and 20 years of age, respectively. The first release will be some time in September.

Ranchers and "Nesters" Battle in "Straight Shooting"

Harry Carey, widely known for his handling of western types, will make his first appearance in a Butterfly production on August 27, when he will be starred in "Straight Shooting," a drama of the cattle country. Molly Malone will be featured in Carey's support.

"Straight Shooting" has been written by George Hively and produced by Jack Ford. It tells the story of the warfare that used to be so common between the cattle barons of the "open range" and the incoming settlers, or "nesters," as they were contemptuously called.

Metro Has Actress Who Played Before Emperors

Emily Dahlberg has been engaged to take the part of a woman spy in "Draft 258," a Metro production in which Mabel Taliaferro is starred. Miss Dahlberg has appeared before many representatives of royalty, including three emperors. While she is still a clever artist, one of the emperors (Edward VII) is dead, a second (the Czar) deposed and the third (the Kaiser) is in distress.

Miss Dahlberg appeared in pantomime versions of "The Taming of the Shrew," "The Doll House," "Salome," and Portia in "The Merchant of Venice," "The Heart of Nichette" and "After Many Days" were among her first screen appearances. In the latter she played the heroine.

Light Reflects from Flashing Swords in This Play

One of the tense scenes in "The Spy," Foxfilm play, is that in which Dustin Farnum, in the character of Mark Quaintance, patriot, holds off a party of German spies in a furious sword combat, while his sweetheart escapes.

Quaintance has been rifling a safe in the dark when the enemy surprise him, so the action takes place in dim light. The flash of swords and of the white dress shirts gives a splendid photographic effect.

Lasky Companies Scattered at Locations

All the Famous Players-Lasky companies are away from the studios on the West Coast at present, but the carpenters are busy making up sets for their return.

Mary Pickford and company are in San Francisco; Geraldine Farrar, with Cecil B. De Mille and company in the Yosemite.

John Emerson Seeking Material for New Fairbanks Films

JOHN FAIRBANKS, head of the producing staff of the Douglas Fairbanks Film Company, arrived in New York last week. The purpose of Mr. Emerson's visit is to obtain original scripts and ideas for vehicle for Fairbanks. At the Artcraft office Mr. Emerson said: "We are in crying need for stories and ideas for stories. I have read hundreds of scripts submitted to us during the past week, but they are for the most part old material rehashed. I want to encourage the amateur writer; he has proved to be our best friend in the creation of Fairbanks vehicles. The stories for Douglas Fairbanks must be different from anything else which appears on the screen, and that's why we find it so difficult to get the desired material.

"We must have absolutely original ideas. We are willing to buy ideas, not necessarily scripts, but just ideas for stories. In this connection I might say that the product of the rank amateur scenarioist has proved to be the best material for Douglas. 'Wild and Woolly,' for instance, was the idea of an amateur, as were those for other Fairbanks-Artcraft pictures. Miss Anita Loos and her staff of writers are working night and day on forthcoming Fairbanks offerings, but the increased demand for these pictures compels us to work much further ahead than we ever dreamed of.

"Mr. Fairbanks and a big company of players, including the champions of the recent Cheyenne Rodeo, who were engaged by Douglas, are now actively engaged on the production of our next offering. On one of the greatest and most picturesque ranches in Wyoming, the big cattle state, they are producing what is readily expected to prove Douglas's greatest photoplay, a story unlike anything in which he has ever appeared, full of Western pep and action together with beautiful scenery."

As to the future activities of the Fairbanks organization, Mr. Emerson said: "Upon completion of the present picture, which, I understand, will be released within a month, we will do another subject in the West and will return to New York in the early Fall for a series of Eastern productions. The great demand for more Fairbanks-Artcraft pictures has necessitated a large increase in our producing staff and we are all working as hard as it is within human possibility."

"The Cinderella Man," Noted Play, for Mae Marsh

As the next vehicle for Mae Marsh, Goldwyn has purchased from Oliver Morosco and Edward Childs Carpenter, the author, the successful play, "The Cinderella Man," and without any loss of time Miss Marsh last week began work on the production.

George Loane Tucker will direct. His affiliation with the Goldwyn staff has been impending for a long time.

It is stated that Messrs. Morosco and Carpenter were averse to turning this play over to the screen producers, as it still is considered to have big money-earning possibilities in all parts of the country, and its rights in dramatic stock are valuable.

Miss Marsh, though barely through with her work in "Polly of the Circus," has entered into her new part with a vim, considering the role one of the most charming she has had in her career.

It has been the good fortune of this star to have had some of the most successful authors writing for her. Beginning work last January, her initial picture was the work of Irvin S. Cobb. Next came a love story entitled "Sunshine Alley" and then "Polly of the Circus."

"The Outcasts" Has an "All-Star" Cast

The Empire All-Star Corporation, releasing through Mutual exchanges, can claim that their cast in "The Outcast" is an all-star cast.

Ann Murdock is starring and David Powell supporting her, and others in the company are Catherine Calvert (the late Paul Armstrong's widow), Richard Hatteras, who came to America with Mrs. Patrick Campbell; Herbert Ayling, with Charles Frohman sixteen years, and Kate Sergeantson, who, it is said, has played more grande dame roles than any one else in her profession.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Pathe Puts Fun-Makers on Early Fall List

"Lonesome Luke" and Harold Lloyd Comedies on Program for Vacation Weeks—Rolin Productions and All Short

ACCORDING to an announcement from Pathe, the distributing company has scheduled for release during August, September and October a number of comedies produced by Rolin under the direction of Hal Roach.

They are: "Lonesome Luke, Mechanic," 2 reels, August 19; "Lonesome Luke's Wild Women," 2 reels, September 2; "Over the Fence," 1 reel, September 9; "Lonesome Luke Loses Patients," 2 reels, September 16; "Pinched," 1 reel, September 23; "By the Sad Sea Waves," 1 reel, September 30; "Birds of a Feather," 2 reels, October 7; "From London to Laramie," 2 reels, October 21.

The two-reel pictures are Lonesome Luke comedies, and the one-reelers will be known as Harold Lloyd comedies. These will alternate with the Luke two-reelers, till further notice, and Lloyd one-reelers will be announced for the open dates in October.

In the Harold Lloyd one-reel comedies the star is seen in a characterization entirely different from anything he has yet done. It is absolutely distinct from "Lonesome Luke."

In all these pictures Harold Lloyd is supported by Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard. Bud Jamieson also appears in most of them.

"Lonesome Luke, Mechanic," is said to be a side-splitting burlesque on the modern garage, with Luke using the gasolene pump as a fire extinguisher.

"Lonesome Luke's Wild Women" shows Luke and Snub in adventures at the Palace of the Shah on the "Isle of Gek."

"Over the Fence," is a baseball burlesque, in which Harold Lloyd, as a studious young man comes to bat in the nick of time and saves the game. The first part shows him as the enterprising proprietor of a tailoring establishment of the "We-Press-'Em-While-You-Wait" variety.

"Lonesome Luke Loses Patients" shows the incorrigible funmaker as the Doctor Killem, of an up-to-date sanatorium.

In "Pinched" he has many an embrace in the long arms of the law, is lodged in jail for a robbery he didn't commmit and escapes only after a series of laughable adventures.

"By the Sad Sea Waves" introduces Lloyd as a psuedo life saver, who makes good against his will.

Fox's Patriotic Play, "The Spy," Is Released Aug. 20

WILLIAM FOX has set August 20 as release date for his new play "The Spy," meant to be an exposure on the screen of the German spy system in the United States. The lesson is imparted in the form of a strong photodrama.

It was the appropriation of millions of dollars by the Government in recent weeks that led Mr. Fox to produce this feature. He considers it vitally important. Dustin Farnum appeared in the title role.

Mr. Fox says his purpose in producing the play is to sound a strong, clear note of warning to America; not to the authorities, for they are scouring the country for the foreign agents, but to the American people, who do not yet realize the grip which a vicious ring is fast obtaining.

To make certain that the message reached the goal for which it was intended, Mr. Fox got the story from George Bronson-Howard, author, who came into possession of his material while on a mission for the national government. Mr. Howard spent a year in Berlin and in Potsdam, where the German Emperor resides, and was in intimate touch with the workings of the Kaiser's agents.

Richard Stanton, veteran film maker, was in charge of the direction. The cast, in addition to Dustin Farnum, contains in the chief roles Winifred Kingston, William Burress, Charles Clary, Howard Gaye and William E. Lowry.

The story of "The Spy" is a vivid narrative of Mark Quaintance's patriotism. Mark is a clubman suddenly called on to prove his mettle. The Patriots' League, of which he is a member, finds that the United States is infested with thousands of spies and undertakes to learn who and where they are.

The Two Points of Highest Dramatic Tension Reached in the Standard Picture, "The Spy," in Which Dustin Farnum is Starred

Pathe's Program for Sept. 2 Excels in Variety

Baby Marie Osborne in a five-part Gold Rooster play, "Tears and Smiles"; Pearl White in the ninth episode of "The Fatal Ring," Mollie King and Creighton Hale in the first episode of "The Seven Pearls," "Central Colorado," twenty-first installment of the "Know America" Pathe-Combitone series; Harold Lloyd in a two-reel "Lonesome Luke" comedy called "Luke's Wild Women," a split-reel International cartoon and scenic, and the Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 72 and 73 make up the Pathe program for the week of September 2.

In diversity of subject matter, quality of content and box office value of the stars it would be hard to excel this program, Pathe says.

In "Tears and Smiles" Baby Marie Osborne is called upon to play a difficult part. The story is that of a child whose father dies leaving her in the charge of a treacherous stepmother. Not long after, cheated of her inheritance in favor of her half-sister, she is placed in an orphan asylum.

Ann Murdock's Walk in Empire-Star Release

Ann Murdock in "The Outcast," first of the Empire-Mutual features, to be released September 3, creates a walk all her own, when, as a homeless waif, she is invited to Geoffrey's apartment.

The girl feels shy, not because the presence of the man frightens her, but because she has never been treated with such courtesy before.

Consequently, bravado, swagger and underlying shyness all struggle for mastery in the girl's pseudo-jaunty walk down the room. Miss Murdock gets all these motives into her steps.

"A Man's Man," Paralta, for September Release

Reports from J. Warren Kerrigan's studio at Hollywood are very flattering to his first production, "A Man's Man." Paralta play for Triangle release in September.

Rupert Julian's Current Bluebird Releases

During the next year Rupert Julian will be given every facility to further contribute with credit to Bluebird program. The matter of expense and sources of his plays being omitted from consideration of the desired result. "Mother O'Mine," to be released as a Bluebird on September 3, will represent a fair example of what Bluebird hopes to accomplish with Mr. Julian's cooperation.

"A Kentucky Cinderella" was the real start of the new Julian series. Ruth Clifford was then introduced as his co-star. The Julian-Clifford combination will be continued indefinitely. Their next regular release will be "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller," announced as the Bluebird for September 10. This will be a mystery play.

"Julio Sandoval" is the production Mr. Julian is now proceeding with on the West Coast. Seven Oaks, Cal., was selected for locations because of the elements nature has there provided for the proper scenic equipment of Elliott J. Clawson's story.

Still another Rupert Julian Bluebird promised for issue later in the season is "The Desire of the Moth," in which Monroe Salisbury will be introduced as the leading man, who will play opposite Ruth Clifford in the Julian-Clifford stellar combination. This feature was shown to Bluebird executives during the past week, and was accepted as a combination of clever direction, engaging plot and adequate production.

George M. Cohan's Second Artcraft Released Aug. 26

George M. Cohan, in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," released Aug. 26, is Artcraft's second August offering, following Douglas Fairbanks in "Down to Earth," released August 12.

"Seven Keys to Baldpate" is the second production in which he has appeared as an Artcraft star, the first having been "Broadway Jones."

Cohan is supported by Anna Q. Neilson as his leading woman, and Elda Furry, Frank Losee, Corene Uzzell, Purnell Pratt and Carlton Macy.

Seven "Above Average" Paramount Productions

September Program Brings Stories by Popular Writers—First "Sub Deb" Play by Mary Roberts Rinehart Among Those Listed

REITERATION of determination to improve the quality of production and to place before the exhibitor under the new Star Series selective booking an even higher grade of photoplays, is made by Paramount in announcing the releases for September.

During the month there will be seven Paramount pictures starring Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Fannie Ward, Julian Eltinge, Mme. Petrova and George Beban. Among the authors of the August Paramount releases there appeared such names as Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, Owen Johnson, Wallace Irwin and George Broadhurst. The authors of the September productions are equally prominent, Gelett Burgess, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Charles Kenyon, Carolyn Wells, Beulah Marie Dix, Dolf Wyllard and Hector Turnbull being among those who contribute the basic stories for the month's selections.

September will mark the advent of Mary Roberts Rhinehart upon the screen as an author, the adaptation of the first of her celebrated "Sub-Deb" stories, starring Marguerite Clark, being scheduled for release in the latter part of the month. This production will be called "Bab's Burglar," and the titles of the others in the series will be announced later.

The first production for the month will be George Beban in "Lost in Transit" which was written for Mr. Beban by Kathlyn Williams, the well known photoplay star. Wallace Reid follows Mr. Beban in "The Hostage," a timely story written by Beulah Marie Dix, well known playwright and author of "Molloch."

Charles Kenyon, whose "Kindling," made him word famous as a dramatic author and who has already written successful productions for Paramount, is the author of "On the Level," in which Fannie Ward will appear. Pauline Frederick leaving her rags and tatters far afield, appears as a society belle in a powerful drama written especially for her by Hector Turnbull. It is called "Double Crossed," and has to do with political intrigue in high circles.

The next production in the list is "Exile," written by Dolf Wyllard. This is a story of the Far East starring Madame Petrova which has been staged in an extremely comprehensive and absorbingly interesting manner by Maurice Tourneur. Gelett Burgess and Carolyn Wells furnished the literary inspiration for Julian Eltinge's first screen appearance. Thus, "The Countess Charming," written especially by these two authors in collaboration for Mr. Eltinge, is of course, designed to give full scope to the dual personality of Mr. Eltinge which arises from his ability as a feminine impersonator.

As has already been stated, the seventh production to be listed for the month is Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Burglar," the first of the Mary Roberts Rhinehart "Sub-deb" stories.

Hoyt's "Trip to Chinatown" Release August 20

"A Trip to Chinatown," one of the merriest of the Charles Hoyt comedies, produced by Selig, is released on the K-E-S-E program August 20. Selig says not a laugh has been lost in picturization.

This is the comedy where a race track tout pursued by a policeman seeks refuge in a laundry, and trying the pipe, dreams of meeting a beautiful Oriental princess. He finds that the hated policeman is her slave. The tout has the policeman matched against a gigantic wrestler, a swordsman and a fierce lion. His hopes go wrong, the policeman wins over the three and the princess at once falls in love with him, while the tout flees—only to wake, finding the policeman still after him.

In the cast are William Fables, James Harris and Fanny Cohen. J. A. Richmond directed the production.

Essanay Announces Three Features for Sept.

Taylor Holmes in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," Mary McAllister in "Pants," and Jack Gardner in "Men of the Desert," Are Listed

TAYLOR HOLMES, the stage star, heads Essanay's schedule of feature releases for September in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship." Little Mary McAllister will follow him in "Pants," and Jack Gardner will complete the month's program of five-part pictures with the fourth of his series of Westerns, entitled "Men of the Desert."

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" will mark Taylor Holmes' first appearance as a screen star. Until he joined Essanay the comedian was a drawing card on the stage. His most recent stage production, "His Majesty Bunker Bean," ran an entire season in Chicago, duplicated that success on Broadway, then toured another season throughout the country.

Mr. Holmes won his popularity on his interpretations of subtle, homely, humorous roles, and Essanay has endeavored to afford him the same type of characterization in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship." The story, which was written by Clarence Budington Kelland and published in the Saturday Evening Post, is described as a comedy-romance in which an enterprising young man introduces strictly business methods in his love-making and wins out. Virginia Valli has the leading feminine role.

Trade showings of the picture are now in progress at all branch offices of the K-E-S-E Service. It will be released through this organization September 3.

"Pants," featuring little Mary McAllister, will be released September 10. This six-year-old star is now reported to be having a successful run in Essanay's current series, "Do Children Count?" She won the critics' favor for her work in the role of little Doris Strickland in "On Trial," the First National Exhibitors Circuit's initial production, and appeared previously in several of Henry B. Walthall's Essanay pictures. Her forthcoming production is the first five-reel picture in which she has been starred. The idea of the story is that it takes something more than wealth to make a child happy. The producers announce that all reference to sex and birth control problems have been carefully avoided, the aim of the picture being only clean and wholesome entertainment.

"Men of the Desert" will be released September 24. Like its predecessors, "Land of Long Shadows," "The Range Boss," and "Open Places," this picture presents a story of the red-blooded West. Mr. Gardner, who was formerly a musical comedy star, is supported by Ruth King, Carl Stockdale and Essanay's original Western company formed for this series.

Variety of Keystones Are in the Making—Early Releases

IN order to carry out promised innovations in comedy form of entertainment, twelve Keystone companies are hard at work at present turning out laugh-makers for Triangle.

Henry Kernan and Jay Dwiggins are exceedingly active in their pursuit of novel twists. Dwiggins is to write all his own stories and appear in the leading roles. The series to be made will be devoid of the slapstick stunts which characterize most of this brand of comedies. They will instead present human interest stories of farcical nature.

Other comedies now in course of production will present the old-time riotous sort of entertainment. Director Robert Kerr has just completed one of this type, with Bob Milliken, Fritz Schade, Claire Anderson, Jack Henderson and little Joey Jacobs, and is ready to start another with the same cast.

Aileen Allen, the diving nymph, who this week captured another medal for high diving at championship contest held at Ocean Park, Cal., will be featured in several aquatic stunts with the Keystone bathing girls in forthcoming releases.

The first September Keystone release is "A Shanghaied Jonah," presenting Billy Armstrong, Maude Wayne and Guy Woodward as the chief fun-makers.

Louise Fazenda, Charlie Murray and Slim Summerville head the company of "His Precious Life," scheduled for September 9.

The Keystone beauties will be out in force with the release of "Hula Hula Land" on September 16. Billy Armstrong, Maude Wayne and Guy Woodward are the featured players.

"The Late Lamented" is the lugubrious title of the September 23 issue, Mary Thurman, George Binns and Claire Anderson acting as the chief mourners.

A production built along the lines of "Oriental Love" is listed for the week of September 20. It bears the title of "The Sultan's Wife" and presents Bobby Vernon, Gloria Swanson and Joseph Callahan in an Oriental laugh mixture.

"Transgression" Set for Aug. 20

VITAGRAPH'S feature drama, "Transgression," is set for release August 20. Earle Williams and Corinne Griffith, who scored in "The Stolen Treaty," have the leading roles.

The entire five reels, according to Vitagraph's announcement, are filled with gripping situations and culminate in an intensely dramatic climax. The story depicts the struggle with conflicting emotions waged by the mayor of a great city, who wishes to be true to his obligations and at the same time to save his profligate brother from the consequences of a murder.

Earle Williams is the mayor, and Corinne Griffith the prosecutor's daughter. The vacillating, weak brother of the mayor is the part taken by one of the ablest of Vitagraph juveniles—Webster Campbell. Others are Florence B. Billings as an adventuress, and Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard and Edwards Davis.

"Transgression" was produced under the supervision of Paul Scardon, who directed Williams in many successful features, including "Arsene Lupin," "Apartment 29," "The Maelstrom" and "The Stolen Treaty."

June Caprice and Virginia Pearson in Current Fox Plays

Forthcoming Fox features include "Every Girl's Dream," a romance of old Holland, with June Caprice in the stellar role. This will be released on August 27, and in it Harry Hilliard appears opposite Miss Caprice. This is the dainty Fox star's first production under the direction of Harry Hilliard. In addition to Mr. Hilliard, Miss Caprice's support includes Kittens Reichert, Margaret Fielding, Marcia Harris and Dan Mason.

On September 9, Mr. Fox will release the latest Virginia Pearson picture. This is "When False Tongues Speak," a gripping story by George Scarborough, known to every playgoer as the author of "The Lure," "At Bay," and other stage successes. In it Miss Pearson is said to have abundant opportunity for the exercise of those artistic abilities with which she is so highly endowed.

In addition to an unusual and thrilling story, and a star of first magnitude for its interpretation, "When False Tongues Speak" was directed by Carl Harbaugh, which, in itself, is a guarantee of excellence.

Miss Pearson is supported by an admirable cast. This includes Mr. Harbaugh, Hardee Kirkland, Claire Whitney, Carl Eckstrom and William E. Meehan, famous as the comic crook in "Turn to the Right," who portrays another crook in "When False Tongues Speak."

Pathe Praises Thanhouser's "War and the Woman"

In "War and the Woman" Thanhouser contributes to the Pathe program a picture in which Florence LaBadie stars. It will be released as a five-part "Gold Rooster" play the week of September 16.

Ernest Warde, son of Frederick Warde, the famous actor, not only directed the feature, but plays in it. His honors are even as actor and director. Pathe says:

"For intensity of dramatic action, for excellent acting, for artistically staged production this picture is sure to be highly praised. Exhibitors showing Pathe Gold Rooster plays may be certain that their audiences will be highly pleased with it. It will undoubtedly play many 'repeats.'"

Features of General Program

General Film refers to its releases for the current week, as "bunched hits," in baseball parlance. On the program are:

The four-reel O. Henry "Broadway Star" feature, "The Defeat of the City"; a four-reel Falcon Feature, "The Martinache Marriage," with Margaret Landis and Philo McCullough; a new George Ade fable in two reels, "The Twelve Cylinder Speed of the Leisure Class"; Kalem's "Stingaree" adventure called "Through Fire and Water," with True Boardman, two reels; Kathlyn Williams in the Selig two-reel drama, "Pioneer Days," and Eugenie Besserer in the one-reel drama, "In After Years"; the Selig World Library as an educational one-reeler, and the Jaxon, Sparkle and Ray single reel comedies. In the Pokes and Jabs group, "Love Letters" has been substituted for "Jolly Tars."

Bessie Love and Jack Devereaux in Triangle Releases

Bessie Love in "Wee Lady Betty," a play of Irish life, and Jack Devereaux and Anna Lehr in "Grafters," will be on the Triangle program for the week of August 26.

Miss Love, whose characterization in "The Sawdust Ring," was credited as being one of the best recorded on Triangle film, has in "Wee Lady Betty," another part designed for her abilities as an interpreter of juvenile characters.

Frank Borzage has the chief role opposite Miss Love in this play, which was written by J. G. Hawks and directed by Charles Miller. The large cast of principals includes Charles K. French, Walter Perkins, L. Jefferies, Walter Whitman, Aggie Herring, Thornton Edwards, Alfred Hollingsworth and J. B. Lockney.

"Grafters," is a farcical treatment of swindlers who swindle themselves. Frank Currier, Irene Leonard, George Siegmann and Robert Crimmins are among the supporting players. Arthur Rosson, assisted by Dick Rosson, directed the production under the supervision of Allan Dwan. The play was picturized from a story by James W. Adams.

"Charity Castle," Mary Miles Minter, Sept. 3

"Charity Castle" is the American Film production announced for release September 3. Mary Miles Minter has the leading role. She has been given a contract by Samuel S. Hutchinson, head of the company. This picture was directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

As Charity, Miss Minter appears in a role different than any before given her—a combination role—that of an orphan, ward of a rich young spendthrift who knows the joy of living, and general peacemaker in aristocratic misunderstandings. That she is successful is the verdict of all who have had previews.

In the cast are Alan Forrest, Spottiswoode Aitken, Henry A. Barrows, Eugenie Ford, Aston Dearbolt, Robert Klein, George Ahern, Gordon Russell, and finally Clifford Callis, four, who plays the adopted child.

Crane Wilbur Picture Has Heredity as Theme

The second Horsley production on Art Dramas Program, which is entitled "Blood Of His Fathers," is a study in heredity and said to be filled with many gripping scenes. Crane Wilbur plays three distinct roles in his new production.

The story was written by J. Francis Dunbar, author of "Eye of Envy," and directed by Harrish Ingraham. In the supporting cast are Jode Mullally, Julia Jackson, Ruth King, Ray Thomson, Gene Crosby and Riche Carpenter.

The story is told in a prologue and four acts. The prologue takes place during the Civil War, and in it Wilbur is a disreputable captain of guerillas, who go about the country in the wake of the army, destroying and inflicting desecration on those in their path. A curse is laid on him by a girl he mistreats, and fifty years later the working out of the omen is seen.

Dramas and Comedies Vie on Universal Program

President Carl Laemmle Contributes a Skit for William Franey—J. Warren Kerrigan, Max Asher, Lee Moran and Others on List

"THE WINNING PAIR," a Gold Seal comedy-drama, featuring Ruth Stonehouse and Roy Steward, heads Universal's regular schedule of releases for August 28.

Monday, August 27, is Butterfly Day, as usual, signalized by the release of "Straight Shooting," in which Harry Carey is starred. Eugene B. Lewis as author and L. W. Chaudet as director are responsible for "The Winning Pair."

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will also be seen on the same date in a Nester comedy entitled "The Night Cap." This subject was written by Virginia Kirtley, who has recently become the bride of Eddie Lyons—in real life. It details the unusual consequences following a night "at the lodge," when Eddie and his pal return home to find that the former's wife has gone out for an evening's entertainment with her mother.

"Props, Drops and Flops," a two-reel L-KO comedy, will be the offering for Wednesday, August 29. Noel Smith and J. G. Blystone were director and supervisor, respectively, of this sketch of life behind the scenes of a burlesque theatre. In this unreal domain behind the footlights, the head property man reigns an absolute monarch over the destinies of manager, artists, stage director and other workers of humbler sphere. When the assistant property man rebels, chaos reigns until the fire department finally comes to the rescue with a watery, but effective, solution. The eighty-seventh issue of the Animated Weekly will be released on the same date.

J. Warren Kerrigan is the star of "Hands in the Dark," the feature scheduled for release Thursday, August 30. This tabloid thriller was written by E. M. McCall and William Parker and was personally directed by Henry McRae, production manager at Universal City. Kerrigan is supported by Edith Johnson.

William Franey will be seen on the same day in a Joker comedy, entitled "Why They Left Home." This burlesque was written by Carl Laemmle during a recent visit to Universal City. Franey is supported by Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti. W. W. Beaudine is credited with the direction.

"Scandal Everywhere," featuring Max Asher and Gladys Tennison, bears the date of Friday, August 31. A Victor comedy written by R. A. Dillon and produced by Craig Hutchinson, this production shows in a realistic manner the dire fate that overtakes a trifler with more susceptibility than discretion. The thirty-fourth issue of the Screen Magazine is released simultaneously with the Asher comedy.

On Saturday, September 1, Eileen Sedgwick and Fred Church will be featured in a two-reel Bison, entitled "Jungle Treachery," written and produced by W. B. Pearson and Rex Hodge.

Gale Henry and Milton Sims will also be seen in a Joker comedy known as "Busting Into Society," written by Tom Gibson and directed by Allen Curtis. The sixteenth issue of Current Events will make the third release for the day.

"The Divorcee" Heads Vitagraph's Program

Mary Anderson and Alfred Vosburgh in Flight from Reno's Sheriff on Horseback—"Chumps and Chances" Is One Comedy

VITAGRAPH'S release for the week of August 27th, "The Divorcee," is built around the theme of a pretty society girl who, in a mood of capriciousness, adopts the career of a "divorcee" in the exclusive Reno colony.

In the unraveling of the story, Mary Anderson as the pretender, and Alfred Vosburgh as the minister-cowboy, make a thrilling flight on horseback, pursued by a sheriff's posse who think that the minister is a stage robber.

Cast in the role of Wanda, the pseudo divorcee, Mary Anderson, is given full scope for the display of her ability, also the Mary Anderson pout and dimples.

The production was directed by William Wolbert who has surrounded the stars with a cast including such well known players as Pliny Goodfriend and Jean Hathaway.

The trials and tribulations of a young man who would marry his sweetheart despite her father's objections is told in a highly amusing manner in Vitagraph's slapstick scream for the week of August 27, "Chumps and Chances." Laurence Semon, who concocted the laughs with Graham Baker, and directed the offering, also plays the part of the persistent lover whom irate fathers, old maid aunts, locked doors, and divers other impedimenta fail to check and he's all there to the end.

"Bobby, the Pacifist," the fourth picture in Vitagraph's series of one-reel subjects featuring Bobby Connelly, is scheduled for release on August 27. It tells the story of a boy scout who follows closely the admonition of his pastor to "turn the other cheek."

The Vitagraph distributing organization announces that the "Bobbies" have met with an unprecedented booking all over the country, and that the popularity of the little star has proved so great exhibitors want the series to run indefinitely. Requests from exhibitors that the pictures be not limited have led to a determination on the part of Vitagraph to continue producing them without any definite number being fixed.

McGraw's Pictures on Film Tickle Baseball Fans

"One Touch of Nature," the Thomas A. Edison photoplay released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, in which John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, is featured, is proving a success, especially in cities where league baseball prevails. K-E-S-E managers make this report.

Louise Glaum and George Webb Caught in Three Scenes from Triangle's Feature, "Idolaters"—These Two Are Co-Starred

All Triangle Stars in Initial Fall List

Winifred Allen, Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum, Bessie Love Margery Wilson and Belle Bennett Are on Season Program

TRIANGLE opens the fall season with its full list of stars appearing in unusual stories, some of which have appeared in national magazines or in book form.

Notable among these is "The Man Hater," by Mary Brecht Pulver, published in the Saturday Evening Post of June 9th. It will reach the public in picture form on September 2nd with Winifred Allen in the leading role, and will be shown first at the New York Rialto theatre. Albert Parker directed the production under the supervision of Allen Dwan. The cast includes, besides Miss Allen and Mr. Meredith, Harry Neville, Jessie Shirley, Marguerite Gale, Robert Vivian and little Anna Lehr.

Dorothy Dalton will appear the same week in "Ten of Diamonds," adapted for the screen by L. V. Jefferson from the story by Albert Cowles. Jack Livingston, J. Barney Sherry, Billy Shaw, and Dorcas Matthews support the star. The story is designed to show how a woman's life may be directed by the man or men with whom she comes in contact. Jack Livingston has the leading male role. Other important parts are presented by J. Barney Sherry, Billy Shaw and Dorcas Matthews. Raymond B. West was in charge of the direction.

"Idolaters," starring Louise Glaum, is scheduled for the week of September 9th. It is similar in action to "The Wolf Woman." George Webb was secured for the leading male role opposite Miss Glaum, and Hugo Koch was engaged for another important part. Other prominent players who appear are Thomas S. Guise, Milton Ross, Dorcas Matthews, and Lee Hill.

The production was placed in charge of one of Triangle's best directors, Walter Edwards.

"The Sawdust Ring" indicated what Bessie Love could do in a worthy play well directed. Following "Wee Lady Betty," to be released August 26th, the little star set to work on "Polly Ann," scheduled for place with "Idolaters" on the September 9th program. The story of "Polly Ann" is described as woven with bright threads of humor, the star shining in the role of a happiness-giver.

Margery Wilson in her first starring play, "Mountain Dew," will come to the screen on September 16th. The locale of the story is Kentucky, the home of Miss Wilson. Julien Josephsen and Monte M. Katterjohn are the authors of the piece.

Belle Bennett, a new Triangle star, makes her bow in "The Judgment of the Guilty," by Edith Kennedy, on the same week that Miss Wilson appears in her first starring vehicle.

Roy Stewart and William Desmond are presented on the program of September 23rd. Stewart, in "Devil Dodger," is a Western gun man, whose daring gives him his satanic sobriquet.

Desmond, in the part of a young college man who turns detective just as an experiment, and because he is in need of a meal ticket, is the star of "Flying Colors," written by John Lynch.

"Broadway, Arizona" is the title of the next Olive Thomas play, now in the course of production. It will be released on September 30th on the same program with "The Tar Hell Warrior," featuring Walt Whitman.

Definite Schedule Announced for Art Dramas

"Think It Over," August 13, Then "The Little Samaritan," "Behind the Mask," "Blood of His Fathers" and "Peg o' the Sea," in Order

ACCORDING to the new schedule, exhibitors of the Art Dramas may look forward to a big variety of popular productions, headed by players of ability. Two Crane Wilbur-Horsley pictures are promised in close succession, and there will be also Jean Sothern, Marian Swayne and Catherine Calvert, in plays of distinction.

"Think It Over," due for release August 13, is a U. S. Amusement Corporation production, in which Catherine Calvert is starred, and supported by Richard Tucker and a cast specially selected for the various characters. This play is said to be a breezy, swift-moving comedy. It was written by H. Blache and directed by him.

This will be followed the next week by "The Little Samaritan," a much heralded play. With Marian Swayne as star, Joseph Levering as director, and Reverend Clarence J. Harris as author.

"Behind the Mask," another U. S. Amusement Corporation Art Drama, in which Catherine Calvert is starred, again supported by Richard Tucker, was directed by Mme. Alice Blache from the story by Charles Dazey.

The exteriors of "Behind the Mask" were taken in some of the most beautiful spots of the Adirondack mountains, and are said to be sublime in grandeur, forming an inspiring background to the action of the play.

The second Horsley-Art Drama starring Crane Wilbur will follow "Behind the Mask." This is "Blood of His Fathers," and it is a scientifically correct study of heredity. Mr. Wilbur plays three characters in the course of the narrative. "Blood of His Fathers" was written by J. Francis Dunbar and directed by Harrish Ingraham.

"Peg O' the Sea," a Van Dyke picture starring Jean Sothern, will follow this. Winifred Dunn wrote the story from which this is taken.

An untitled picture in which Catherine Calvert is starred will follow. The U. S. Amusement Corporation is at present working on the new play, and it is to be finished in a week or so.

"Unto the End," third of the Horsley Art Dramas starring Crane Wilbur, is the next in order. This is described as a somewhat tragic drama, deeply moving in its wealth of pathos. It relates a story of love which endures despite all obstacles and difficulties, until the death of the lovers. The last scene of "Unto the End" is said to be one of the most intensely emotional moments ever screened. The heroine, afflicted with leprosy, has been sent to an island in the Pacific—one of the Hawaiian group. Here her lover goes in secret, for no one is permitted to visit the dwelling of the living dead. He arrives to find her dying on the shore. Picking her in his arms, he enters the sea, and wades out toward the setting sun until he and his mate have been swallowed up by the waves.

THE WORLD MARKET

New Agreement Between Inter-Ocean and World

To Place World Subjects in Australasia for Another Year—Multitude of Deals During Week Include Half Score by London Office

A RENEWAL of the contract which has been in effect for three years was signed last week between the Inter Ocean Film Co. and the World Corporation whereby for another year the Inter Ocean will place one World subject each week in Australasia.

The unusual volume of business transacted last week by the exporting firm was pointed out by executives as showing the commercial advantage of having offices both in London and in the United States. In this manner, it was shown, the market can be closely combed and as a result scores of deals closed at the opportune times.

From the London office was received a cable to the effect that shipments had been made to Russia of "As Man Made Her," "The Hungry Heart," "Friday, the 13th," and several other pictures.

An unusual deal was the placing of a print of "The Crimson Stain Mystery" in the British West Indies, islands of Trinidad, Marvados and Danemara.

Reports from Brazil indicated that this serial has been meeting with big success there, and the Inter Ocean was requested by a customer to send an extra print for use in the northern counties.

The Knickerbocker three-reelers have struck a popular chord in Japan, according to report, the subjects being of just the length to please the Oriental mind. Recent shipments of these subjects include "Who Knows," "A Daughter of the Woods" and "The House of Mystery."

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" and "The Fourth Labor of Hercules," an educational subject, were placed in Scandinavia by Inter Ocean during the week, and Black Diamond comedies were closed for Japan.

Special care is being taken by the officers of the Inter Ocean Company in selecting films for Spain and the Latin American countries, it having been found that the popular demand in this territory is quite discriminating. Shipments last week included two World subjects, "The Family Cupboard" and "The Beloved Adventuress." "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" was closed for the Dutch East Indies.

Big shipments of Speer Carbons were made to India, New Zealand, South Africa and Spain, and other deals are pending.

Party of Big Foreign Buyers Are Active in New York

A GROUP of foreign buyers whose activities practically cover the world in this branch of the industry gathered in New York last week. On Tuesday they gathered at the Brockliss offices, 729 Seventh avenue, and later motored to Bayonne, where they saw the King-Bee comedian, Billy West, at work.

Madame A. Charles Schuepboch

The party was organized by Mr. Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., and consisted of Mr. Wainwright, the largest buyer for the English cinematograph trade; Mr. Mattsonn, the representative of the trade for Scandinavia and Northern Europe; No. Ono, representing Japan and the Far East; Mr. Cropper, who buys for the Middle West in the United States, and Madame Schuepbach, the buyer for the Mundusfilm Company, of Paris, and the whole of Europe, if necessary. Nat Spitzer, the general manager of the King-Bee Company, and Mr. Bernstein, the president of the same corporation, acted as hosts with Mr. Garrett, who is known intimately to all.

Madame Schuepbach returns to Europe in about a month to look over the English market. Although she has only been here ten days, she has already acquired the rights to "The Barrier," "The Submarine Eye," "The United States Navy," and the Ditmar animal subjects, and is contemplating several other large orders. Mr. Garrett is her special representative.

Who will take up the Motion Picture News Cigarette Campaign in your locality? Have you sent for your card?

Brockliss, Ltd., Gets Foreign Rights to Walt Mason Films

The A. Kay Company announces that it has consummated a deal with the firm of J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., whereby the latter secures the exclusive foreign rights to the Lion Comedies and the picturized versions of the Walt Mason stories.

The Lion Comedies, which are of a slapstick nature, are made by Master-pictures of Houston, Texas, under the supervision of Harold J. Binney, who for many years has been active in the production of comedies. Until recently he was connected with Mack Sennett with the famous Keystone organization. He left the latter to join the Masterpictures Company which was organized for the purpose of confining itself to the production of high class comedies of one-reel length. A number of these comedies have already been completed.

The Filmcraft Corporation, which has arranged with the George Matthew Adams Service to picturize the Walt Mason stories and rhymes, recently entered into an agreement with the A. Kay Company to give the latter the world rights to their product to be known as the Walt Mason Stories. Although the contract between Filmcraft and the A. Kay Company was drawn and signed last week, the foreign rights have already been disposed of to J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., of England and this country. Considering seriously that the A. Kay Company had only gotten the world rights to Filmcraft's product only a week ago, it is considered truly remarkable that the foreign rights have been so quickly sold.

The firm of J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., is considered one of the leading expert film concerns in operation to-day.

Inter-Ocean Heads Learn That Joseph Fisher Is Safe

Friends of Joseph Fisher will be pleased to learn that he has reached his home in Cape Town, South Africa, but in doing so went through a terrific ordeal.

Henry J. Brock, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, having learned through the daily papers that the "City of Athens," the ship that bore Fisher away from American shores, had been sunk, immediately cabled to his family in Cape Town to learn the facts.

The reply received was: "Ship sunk; Moore and self rescued. Terrible experience. Lost everything."

Fisher had been in New York for the past eight months, representing his own concern, Fisher's Bioscope, Ltd., of Cape Town. Hard luck of every nature has recently followed him, culminating in the sinking of the "City of Athens." Since leaving Cape Town he had heard of the death of his mother, and then, with a mission to purchase films for a circuit of seventeen theatres, received a cable indicating the deal had fallen through. To cap this, he was stricken with typhoid fever while in New York.

Fisher took back with him many American film subjects, also a large shipment of Speer Carbons and other valuable incidentals. Although insured, a considerable loss will be sustained due to the length of time required to replace the lost articles.

To Announce Plans of New Company Shortly

Samuel Cummins, New York, film broker, will announce in a fortnight, the plans and details of the new company he is forming to handle foreign and domestic films. The plans and working of this enterprise are, it is stated, entirely new to the film world, and it will bring together the foreign and domestic buyers on a closer relationship.

Cummins reports from present negotiations that the state rights market is becoming very active again, and looks for the biggest season for open market pictures the coming fall.

"T" to Make Plays Suitable for Foreign Market

H. O. Davis Announces New Policy, with Slogan of "Yankee Plays for the World"—Points Out Errors in Past Marketing Efforts

ADOPTING a motto of "Yankee Plays for the World," H. O. Davis, general manager and vice-president of Triangle, announced last week that that concern intends to invade the foreign exhibiting market on a larger scale and along different lines than ever before undertaken.

Decidedly an aggressive one, the campaign will be based upon Mr. Davis's personal investigations of the field and his belief that the war has stimulated rather than retarded the European and Oriental amusement demands. Distinctive Americanism will be so outstanding in the product, it is promised, that the stamp will be as recognizable as the brand.

"One of the chief reasons why American producers have failed in their efforts to get safe and sane export business," said Mr. Davis, "is that they have persisted in giving foreign exhibitors and foreign cinema patrons a product they can obtain of better quality and more cheaply at home. We have been trying to make French plays and Japanese plays and East Indian plays in the United States when we knew nothing of the customs, likes and dislikes of these peoples. Even if this were not true, we have been offering the foreign consumer nothing that he could not obtain from the producers of his own country, and every nationality prefers to patronize home industry.

"It would be just as logical for American exhibitors to go to France, Japan and India for their American pictures as for foreign exhibitors to buy from us something they can get from their own producers.

"However, it is not reasonable to believe that American producers can compete with foreign producers in their own fields, and the Triangle Film Corporation does not propose longer to try. We will endeavor to lend the industry in supplying the already brisk demand for a distinctly Yankee, if I may use the term, film play that does not encroach upon the foreign producer but fills a well established place of its own.

"The American business drama, the so-called Western plays, the comedy drama and the good, old 'melodrama' are four types of screen productions that the foreign producer cannot make as well as we can, and these forms of drama never fail to attract and retain the interest of the masses in almost every country under the sun."

The Triangle's new policy, as outlined by Mr. Davis, also embraces many innovations in distribution and improvement of product which will be announced later.

Planning Production Plant in the Far East

Charles Margelis arrived July 19 in San Francisco, aboard the Pacific Mail Line SS. "Ecuador," after a seven months' sales tour in the interests of Thomas H. Ince's production, "Civilization," during which he successfully placed this film in every important territory in the Orient and Far East, traveling thirty-six thousand miles, and placed seven complete copies of the production for the Harper Film Corporation. Mr. Margelis received while en route to San Francisco a wireless message of congratulations from J. Parker Reid, Jr., directing manager for the Harper Film Corporation, on his successful sales campaign.

Mr. Margelis is now completing arrangements to take an expert motion picture photographer and technical man with him to look over the ground in view of establishing a production plant somewhere in the Far East; and inasmuch as his connections are there, they will enable him to make films of things a camera eye has never seen.

Negative Saved from Fire Which Destroyed Noble Studio

Director Jack Noble announces that the fire which recently destroyed his studio buildings at City Island, did not destroy the negative of feature which had been under production for several weeks prior to the time of the fire. The buildings were practically destroyed. The studio was formerly the property of Harry Carey.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Christie Wants Term "State Rights" Dropped

Irresponsible Producers and Handlers of Independent Pictures Should Have Proper Designation—Independent Men Are Divided Into Three Classes

CHARLES H. CHRISTIE, business manager of the Christie Film Company, Los Angeles, who lately left the Pacific Coast, on a country-wide trip to the exchanges handling Christie comedies, and who is now in New York City, has analyzed the open market situation and concludes that the men engaged in the field may be divided into three classes.

First there is the man who makes pictures for distribution on a plan closely corresponding to the regular programs. The second is an independent operator designated as a specialist—a man who undertakes to handle only a few features worthy of the name, and who concentrates on the sales end of the product with a sincere desire to render service while the picture retains its popularity. The last operator in Mr. Christie's classification is the irregular state rights buyer. The man coming under this head puts on with little capital and practically no credit a picture falling below the average standard and uses questionable methods in its exploitation.

"The phrase 'state rights'," says Mr. Christie, "should no longer be used in connection with the legitimate sale of pictures. It is a reminder of the days when a poorly made picture was foisted on the exhibitor by men who looked upon the film business as a means of making money quickly, with no intention of giving honest value in return. Because of this evil recollection and because the words state rights do not adequately represent the idea of territorial division in open market sales, I feel justified in using the term 'irregular state rights buyer' to cover the transactions of the uncertain and unreliable operator in the field today.

"The man who makes pictures for the independent market, releasing subjects at certain intervals, like a program, is to my mind, the most important man in the open market.

Methods That Inspire Confidence

"There is a stability in his methods which inspires confidence. In the first place, he must have backing on a large scale. This means that the man has entered the business with the serious idea of putting before the public something worth while. It resolves itself into a simple business proposition. He knows that the only way to do this is to employ only experts. But it takes means to obtain their services.

"Now, the man who makes a picture with limited capital is handicapped at the start. He is unable to engage the best talent, whether star, director or cameraman. The people who know their business can only be secured with attractive offers.

"Consequently, the man who falls back on people of mediocre ability produces an inferior picture—the kind which ought to be shelved before seeing the light, and which is generally shelved for good very shortly after its inferior qualities become known.

"Such a producer is able to make one picture for an irregular state rights buyer who, by a cynical disregard of recognized business ethics, induces a few unsuspecting persons to exhibit the film—to their sorrow. But he never has a chance to make another poor picture. For the irregular buyer knows that these exhibitors cannot be approached again by the same crowd. These operations have been made possible by what may be called The Man with the Small Bankroll.

Wallingford Methods

"This individual is someone who has heard of the alleged enormous profits to be made in pictures. His state of mind makes him a willing listener to rosy tales of quick returns on a small investment. The picture, in most cases, is badly made by people who have no great knowledge of the business.

"The Man with the Small Bankroll is disappointed to learn that nobody who handles good pictures will try to market them. Then the irregular state rights buyer enters and performs the function. He sees, from his peculiar viewpoint, possibilities in the subject. Questionable methods of advertising—like designating the cast an 'all-star' organization when, as a matter of fact, the players are unheard-of people not much above the amateur state—will, according to his views, put the picture over. Of course, the irregular state rights buyer is able to get the picture for a very low sum from the disgusted Angel, who, embittered by his experience, goes away, making noisy complaints against the lure of the silent drama.

"Of course, no sympathy is wasted on a man who wilfully invests his money in something he knows nothing about. He has gone into the proposition with his eyes open, deliberately making a distinction between business and speculation.

Eliminate the Piker

"But here is where the best element in the industry is interested in The Man with the Small Bankroll—he must be eliminated for the benefit of good picture making. With him removed as the first cause, the irregular state rights buyer will have nothing of poor quality to offer, and the manufacture of pictures will be put on a sound business basis.

"Of course, in speaking of the man who makes one poor picture, I am not referring to the legitimate producer who makes an occasional subject for exploitation by the independent method. He makes pictures for the exchangeman I have designated as the specialist.

"However, to my mind, the best results in the open market are obtained with films produced by large, well equipped studios conducted by seasoned veterans for release corresponding to program issues. When pictures of this kind are marketed by reputable exchanges there is no question of the exhibitor and the public receiving the best that can be offered. The men I mean are like E. H. Emmick of San Francisco, H. L. Charnas of the Standard Film Service in Cleveland, Harry Schwalbe of Philadelphia, J. L. Friedman of the Celebrated Players in Chicago, Allen Brothers of the Famous Players' Exchange in Toronto, Harry Nolan of the Consolidated Film Corporation in Denver, and R. C. Cropper of the Standard Film Corporation in Kansas City.

Colonel Levy Buys Territory for "Deemster" in Ten Minutes

IT took Colonel Fred Levy, president of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, Ky., only ten minutes to convince W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, that he wanted the Kentucky and Tennessee rights to "The Deemster." Colonel Levy, it is said, has the reputation of being one of the quickest buyers in the country. He decides quickly and when he entered the office of the Arrow Film Company recently to get figures on Hall Caine's photodrama, he lived up to this reputation.

The figure was given him by Dr. Shallenberger, and Colonel Levy remarked that it "was fair" and called for contracts which he ordered sent to his hotel for his signature. The Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, is rated as one of the most substantial organizations in the independent field operating in the South. It controls Charlie Chaplin future releases and "On Trial," through affiliation with the First National Exhibitors Circuit. It also has the rights for southern territory to "Joan, the Woman," "The Whip," "Garden of Allah," "Neptune's Daughter," "Battle Cry of Peace" and others.

Different Director for Each Peggy Hyland Release

TENTATIVE arrangements have been made by M. A. Schlesinger, president of Mayfair Film Corporation, to have the services of four of the best known screen directors to direct Peggy Hyland in her forthcoming releases. It is the intent of Mr. Schlesinger to have a different director in charge of each one of the productions in which Miss Hyland is to be starred. Mr. Schlesinger says that this course is to be followed because it is his opinion that better results will be obtained. He says such a course will insure variety and there is the least possible chance for repetitions. The name of the director who will have charge of the second Peggy Hyland feature will be announced soon.

"Dick" Shayer and his Bride have Plunged into the Wilds of Hawaii for the Initial Reels of a New Peter Pan Series, "The Honeymooners." They Will Tour the World, Sending Back Something Different in the Way of Scenic Films

Peter Pan Film Sending Party Around the World

E. Richard Schayer, Formerly Publicity Director for Selznick, and Party of Four to Tour the World, Making Travelogues

H. C. ALLEN, president of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, has his own ideas of how material should be gathered for pictures and if his present plans materialize he will have produced something a bit different from anything that has ever been shown in the way of travel pictures. The idea is a wedding trip around the world with E. Richard Schayer and wife, formerly Ethel Taylor, of New York, a cameraman; W. F. Aldrich and his wife, and "Bill," an Irish terrier, belonging to Mrs. Schayer. This party of five left New York, August 1, for San Francisco, from which city they will sail for Honolulu where they are due to arrive on the 16th.

Mr. Schayer was formerly publicity director and advertising manager for Louis J. Selznick enterprises. Neither he nor his wife have had experience before the camera but both are well fitted for the work. The Peter Pan Film Corporation is sending them on this trip around the world. H. C. Allen has formulated a plan to produce something new in the field of travel pictures. Mr. Allen says:

"The pictures, or rather series of pictures, will not be ordinary travelogues. The idea is to get off the beaten track, and to make them a record of personal, human experiences, not merely a series of views of foreign lands. They will be taken from the angle of the traveler, trying to do and live as the natives of other countries and will be full of humorous and human interest. The by-paths of the world are over-flowing with ungathered picture material, and the best way to get it is not by making it, but by really living it.

"To get the best results in work of this kind, it must be approached in a spirit of adventure, time can be no object, for opportunities do not come by schedule. Mr. Schayer is a singularly good choice for the hero in these pictures. He has been a newspaper man, war correspondent, writer of short stories, sailor and soldier of fortune. For a long time he was a special writer on the staff of the New York Evening World.

"The news releases will be entitled "The Honeymooners." From Honolulu, where the party will remain about a month, making pictures, they will sail for Japan and thence to other countries. It is expected that the trip will take two years."

"Mother o' Mine" Is Set for Labor Day Release

"MOTHER O' MINE," the Rupert Julian production of Elliott J. Clawson's human interest drama, will be distributed by Bluebird along state rights lines as a Bluebird Extraordinary, independent of the regular program. The work of circulating the feature will begin on September 2 (Labor Day), and distribution will be made by Bluebird branches throughout the country.

As in the handling of "The Eagle's Wings" and "Hell Morgan's Girl," each branch will cover its own territory, selling to independent buyers or to regular exhibitors of Bluebirds on the state rights plan. In this way all sections will be covered throughout the country. Director Julian will co-star with Ruth Clifford in "Mother o' Mine," a combination made familiar to exhibitors and their public through Bluebird's recent distribution of "A Kentucky Cinderella."

Ruby La Fayette, a veteran actress, who began her stage career in the early sixties, received her screen initiation in "Mother o' Mine." She was selected for the mother role, because she could back her venerable appearance with fitting dramatic talent, Mr. Julian having held the production until Miss La Fayette came along rather than "make up" a younger woman for the part, and results have proven his wisdom.

"Who's Your Neighbor?" Passed Unanimously by Board

"Who's Your Neighbor," which at its first showing before the National Board of Review, was condemned by this body, was passed recently with a 100 per cent rating after revision. The picture was passed unanimously by the Board. Willard Mack wrote the scenario and S. Rankin Drew directed.

"Fatal Ring" Is Box-Office Magnet

"The Fatal Ring" is, according to Pathe officials, breaking midwinter records in the hottest month of the year and gives promise of surpassing "The Iron Claw," "The Exploits of Elaine" and "The Perils of Pauline."

In Texas, a notoriously warm state, the picture is going well.

Messrs. Gwynn and Btar, the owners of the motion picture houses at Terrell, Tex., have written the following letter to the manager of the Pathe Exchange, at Dallas, Texas:

"We believe in giving credit where credit belongs, and for that reason are writing this letter.

"We started 'The Fatal Ring,' featuring Miss Pearl White, on Saturday, July 21, and we want to tell you that we started a new record for attendance, breaking all previous house records.

"We opened our house at 1 o'clock P. M. and in forty-five minutes we had them standing, and that continued until we closed at 11 o'clock that night, and we consider this some record in a small 'tank' town. And furthermore, everybody seemed more than pleased with the picture. Many were the compliments showered on the management."

Wolfberg Is in New York

Harry P. Wolfberg of Pittsburgh and points west is in New York negotiating for several pictures for Ohio and western Pennsylvania. Mr. Wolfberg reports excellent business in his territory.

Standard Film Gets Territory for Christie Comedies

R. C. Cropper, president of the Standard Film Corporation, with offices in St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Chicago and Minneapolis, has purchased the distributing rights to the Christie comedies for the states of Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska.

Mr. Cropper in commenting on the purchase said:

"I fully anticipate a remarkably strong demand for these 'society' comedies. It has been said so often recently that just at this time people are comedy-crazy, owing to the reaction that comes from a nation's sending troops to the battle-front, that my repeating it may seem rather trite. But its truth has certainly been forced upon our organization very strongly. I do not recall a year in my long film experience when there has been so much emphasis placed upon the need of comedy by exhibitors. Our announcement of purchase of rights on the Billy West comedies brought immediate responses from thousands of exhibitors. Inquiries and booking orders have been coming into our offices in a steady stream—so much so that we have been obliged to increase the stenographic force in three of our five offices."

Philadelphia Exchange Buys Rights to Two Features

The Philadelphia Ideal Film Exchange, 251 N. Thirteenth street, Philadelphia, has purchased the rights to "A Hero of France," a French made picture, and "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," featuring Sheldon Lewis, Jane Meredith and Harry Mortimer, for the territories of southern New Jersey, eastern Pennsylvania and Delaware. Manager Albert Teitel is negotiating for other pictures, it is announced.

"Crisis" Returns to Los Angeles —At Rialto

Campaign of Cooperation Inaugurated for "Parentage"

Frank J. Seng, Owner and Distributor of "Parentage," Announces Additional Territory Sold for His Production—Will Open in Philadelphia in September

FRANK J. SENG, owner and distributor of "Parentage," announces that the Peerless Film Exchange of Philadelphia will handle the Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia rights. For the third week in September, the Stanley, one of the largest picture theatres in Philadelphia, will run this attraction. Mr. Seng regards the decision of the Stanley management as a tribute to the good qualities of this state rights' offering. To insure cooperation in this showing, Mr. Seng will send a representative to Philadelphia the week of the showing to assist Mr. Einstein in handling the advertising and publicity for the engagement.

Mr. Seng has the following to say about his production and the manner in which it is being received:

"When an exhibitor advertises he usually gets what he ought to receive—increased business. But his returns do not stop there. Every advertisement, rightly executed, creates good will and tends to establish his house as a factor in his community. In like manner do I regard the advertising that has already appeared and will continue to appear featuring 'Parentage.' I am most sincere in my desire to create good will among states right men and among exhibitors," says Seng, "hence my determination to spend exactly ten times more in each territory as it is disposed of than was set aside for the initial marketing campaign. And I would also like to impress the trade with the sincerity of my statement when I tell you that I have been more interested in the capabilities of the organizations who are handling 'Parentage' than in the size of the offers made."

Seng Avoids Use of Stills in Lobby Displays

FRANK J. SENG, distributor of "Parentage," has studiously avoided the use of stills in the preparation of a lobby display for his independent feature.

Yet upon analysis, Mr. Seng has only done the logical thing. Many exhibitors and independent buyers have told him, in commenting upon the attractive lobby display conceived for Hobart Henly's Thought Film of Real Life, that is "got them," and they hadn't missed the stills.

"The average still picture means absolutely nothing to the passerby it is supposed to convert into a patron," says Mr. Seng. "At best it can only be a sort of index to the character and costuming of the play from which it is adapted.

"'Parentage' is essentially a picture of types and capital has been made of this important fact, not only in the lithographs, but also in devising a lobby display of business-getting value.

"Using the heads of the characters in the picture left considerable space available for reading matter into which sales punch has been injected.

"For example, on one of the 11 by 14 sets, done in the soft photo-gelatine process, there appears this startling question: 'Does this kind of punishment ever make a boy a better man?' This tops one of the 'Parentage' slugs, and is illustrated in the upper right hand corner with an insert showing a man's hand brutally tweaking the ear of a young boy. The lad's expression clearly indicates the pain that the operation produces. This card is finished off with a border in keeping with the treatment of the display as a whole, which adds considerably to its appearance.

"Another forceful question well displayed is, 'Does Your Boy Spend His Idle Hours With Boys Like These?' The inserts that accompany this caption disclose the surly evil faces of two boys in their 'teens—typical gutter-rats.

"Throughout the entire display the question form of copy is used. The proven result is that persons stop to read, and reading again begin to think. Any lobby display that will set people thinking has sales value."

Edgar Lewis Hard at Work Directing the Installation of an Improvised Electric Lighting Equipment Used in Connection with His Latest Picture, made in Upper New York State

Lewis's State Rights Feature Nearing Completion

Edgar Lewis Expects to Have His Latest Work on Broadway in Short Time—Production Has Been Under Way for More Than Two Months at Ticonderoga, New York

EDGAR LEWIS'S special state rights feature which has been under production for more than two months in the mountains of northern New York, is nearing completion. Charles Feature Abrams, who recently returned from the Lewis camp, at Ticonderoga, New York, says that few productions have been hampered by such obstacles as have come in the way of this latest work of Edgar Lewis.

The story which is yet unnamed, was written by Anthony P. Kelly, author of Mr. Lewis's last success, "The Bar Sinister." Mr. Lewis was obliged to build practically a complete village and supply water for storm effects for which the script called. This was done by means of fire engines and hundreds of feet of hose. Mr. Lewis found that artificial lighting would add to the effectiveness to these particular scenes, and a dynamo was hauled to the spot and electricity was made to order by propping up the rear of an automobile and running a belt from the driving wheel to the electric motor.

The Edgar Lewis company has been living in the woods for more than two months and expect to be back on Broadway with the new production completed in the near future. More than ordinary interest is being shown in the picture by state rights buyers because of the success of "The Bar Sinister," which was the first picture made by Mr. Lewis under his own management and backed by his own capital. Edgar Lewis maintains that a director should be allowed unlimited time and money in order to do himself and his picture justice, and his own production is looked forward to with interest.

"Manxman" Opens Strong at Criterion Theatre

Hall Caine's Work Produced Under Direction of George Loane Tucker, Playing to Crowded Houses. H. J. Brock Pleased at Its Good Reception—To Run Indefinitely

"THE Manxman" is playing to crowded houses. Since its opening at the Criterion theatre, a little more than a week ago, the screen version of Hall Caine's widely read novel of the same name, has drawn its full quota, and more, of the crowds which move up and down Broadway.

The scenes of "The Manxman" are laid in the Isle of Man of the Coast of England. The story deals with people of a strong, virile nature. Fred Groves has the leading role of the Manxman. Mr. Brock has the following about the picture and its reception by New Yorkers:

"The Manxman" drives home a very human story. It is the kind of photoplay which I think the average motion picture patron wants to see. Its subject matter deals with humans. There is no frivolity. In my experience with photoplays both in this country and abroad, I have never seen anything that presents quite the appeal that this adaptation from Hall Caine's work presents. It makes people think and that, I think, is what the public desires—something to think about. When people are in a humorous mood they want to see comedy but when they want to see real dramatic action their minds tend in the other direction. This production of "The Manxman," I think, will meet their every demands. The first week of its run at the Criterion theatre proves this. Everyone has expressed satisfaction and I feel sure that it is going to meet the same enthusiastic reception throughout the country."

The picture will be kept at the Criterion for an indefinite period.

Mr. Cabanne says that he will endeavor to furnish 100,000 men for Uncle Sam through his screen productions.

Mr. Cabanne is a comparatively young man. He has directed many successes in the past year or more and has had a rapid rise in that branch of the industry. His last work to be released by Metro is "The Slacker."

Wolfberg Company Offers Inducement to See Opening of "Crisis"

The Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions conceived a novel method of publicity when "The Crisis" opened at the Garrick theatre, Philadelphia, on August 13. All exhibitors who came to the opening had their expenses paid by the Wolfberg company. It is said that bookings were greatly increased because of this inducement. A letter setting forth the particular merits of the Selig production was sent to each exhibtor in the territory.

Exploitation of "The Whip" Renewed with Vigor

Paragon Films, After Delay Because of Uncertain Market Conditions Have Commenced World-wide Campaign—All Remaining Territory Offered

WITH the exploitation of "The Whip" in territories of this country now well under way and with many of the largest territories disposed of, the Paragon Films, Inc., announce that the productions will be offered on the foreign market. "The Whip" adapted from the Drury Lane stage success of a few years ago, in eight reels, was first released last Spring having its initial showing at the Park theatre, New York, afterwards running in San Francisco, in both of which places it met with success. Because of the uncertain conditions prevailing, due to the war, the Paragon Films, practically withdrew their production from the market for a time but exploitation in the state rights field has been taken up recently, with renewed vigor and every indication points to success, say the owners.

William A. Brady bought the rights to the stage production and it ran at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, for more than a year. The stage version met with such marked success that its possibilities as a motion picture spectacle were realized. Paragon Films undertook the job under the direction of Maurice Tourneur and months were consumed in the making. All of the strong moments in the stage version have been transferred to the screen—the fox-hunt, the racing meet, the train wreck and all.

Until the past week, the producers have practically ceased activities in exploitation of this production on the state rights' market. Beginning last week, the producers started anew and a country-wide campaign as well as a foreign campaign was set on foot.

The following territories are still open: Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Colorado, Utah, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nevada, Wyoming, Wisconsin, Minnesota, New Mexico, West Virginia, Maryland, District of Columbia, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma. Also the rights to these continents: Europe, except Great Britain and Scandinavia; all of South America, with Mexico and Cuba; all of Asia except Japan; and all of Africa, except British South Africa.

Steger Signs Anna Case, Opera Star for Series of Pictures

Julius Steger announces that he has contracted for the services of Anna Case, American soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Miss Case is to appear in pictures under Mr. Steger's direction for a limited period. Work on her first production will be commenced in February after she completes her concert engagement. The story will be based on the experiences of a poor but gifted American girl, who through force of character rises to a position of prominence in the world's greatest opera company.

Miss Case will not retire from the opera stage but will devote only part of her time before the camera. It is said that she screens perfectly. Her first picture will be in seven reels. Joseph M. Schenck will be associated with Mr. Steger in the enterprise. Both of these men are well aware of Miss Case's abilities and possibilities, and something rare is promised.

Company Organized to Handle Shelved Product

Fanfare Features to Make Specialty of Handling Film That Has Lain on the Shelves. Competent Men Behind Organization—Names Not Announced

Under the name of Fanfare Features, a new state rights company has been formed. The names of those interested have not been announced. It is said that this company is in the market for pictures produced by independent producers and it is stated that the contemplated activities of this organization are to bring to light something new in the manner of handling state rights features.

Relying on the fact that there are hundreds of pictures that have never been taken from the shelves of the producers' store room, the Fanfare Features expect to acquire some of this film. This product should find an outlet, it is assumed, because it is stated there is a wealth of material to be obtained from this source.

The men who are behind this company are said to be experienced in every branch of the film business and are capable of not only directing the exploitation of a picture, but it is said, they are expert in retouching film that needs the touch of an expert to supply that something which is necessary to make it acceptable to the trade. It will be the main endeavor of this organization to unearth this sort of film—the picture that has lain on the shelf and to group together the shelved product of discouraged independent producers.

Until a complete list of releases is ready to be announced the names of those behind this organization are to be withheld. The activities of the Fanfare Features Company will be directed particularly in the New York and New Jersey territories. The men who are interested in this company are said to have made a specialty of studying the particular needs of the exhibitor in these territories. A further announcement is promised in the near future by members of this company, which will comprise everything up to the minute.

Short Features Exchange Get Many Biograph Subjects

Henry Ginsberg, general manager of Short Features Exchange, purchased recently 50,000 feet of Biograph film to be added to the list of Short Features subjects. The selection was made from 300,000 feet of film, from which the company had the privilege of accepting those subjects which he thought best suited to the needs of the exhibitor. These pictures were produced some time ago when the five-reel features were not a staple product. The pictures which Mr. Ginsberg obtained through the purchase feature Mary Pickford, Mae Marsh, Dorothy Gish, Lillian Gish, Blanche Sweet, Henry Walthall and were directed by David Griffith, Mack Sennet and Thomas H. Ince.

The Short Features announce that posters and other advertising matter have been obtained with these short Biograph subjects and that sufficient reelage has been obtained to supply the demands of the exhibitors. Mr. Ginsberg says within the past month there has been a big demand for these old Biograph pictures and that there is noted a scarcity of short dramatic subjects on the market. It is the particular aim of the Short Features, he says, to cater to this demand, and its offerings have been well received by exhibitors throughout the country. In addition to these recently acquired Biograph pictures the Short Features have the Lion Comedies, Terry Human Interest Reels, Hans and Fritz Cartoons and some other short reels.

Tyrone Power is featured. In support are Jay Belasco, Frances Burnham, Gypsy Abbott, Winifred Grenwood and John Oaker. Henry Otto directed. The production was made on the Santa Barbara Islands. Mr. Otto will be remembered as the director of "Undine." The picture is practically all exterior scenes with rugged beauty of the shore line as a background. Scenes of bird life showing the pelican and seal in their native haunts are given. The artistic phase of the picture is represented by scenes of diving girls and sea nymphs. A story full of dramatic moments is told, it is said. Director Otto says it is the best picture of its kind he has ever produced.

John W. Noble Completes War Drama for State Rights Market

JOHN W. NOBLE has completed the production of his first important contribution to the state rights market. The production, as yet unnamed, has been in the making more than ten weeks. It is a war drama presenting a phase of the war not so well understood by those far removed from the trenches. Mr. Noble has a fine record as an army officer, having served Uncle Sam in the Philippines. He is well known in picture circles, having directed such productions as "Romeo and Juliet," "The High Road," and "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie."

The story was suggested to Mr. Noble by conditions brought about by the war in Belgium and France. Jules Burnstein, who is sole agent of the business end of Mr. Noble's feature, says that it will interest producers and dramatists as much as exhibitors and the public.

"It is not 'battle stuff,'" Mr. Burnstein says, "or spectacular trench warfare, but its "punch" lies in the deep heart interest which it inspires. Tragedies that follow the wake of the war, the lives led by the women and children behind the firing lines and the intolerance of society which refuses to consider the extenuating circumstances connected with many of these human tragedies, are some of the strong scenes depicted."

Indebted to "News"

The American Maid Film Company, Minneapolis, is enthusiastic over the service rendered by The News to exhibitors and independent exchanges. F. A. Wilson of the company says:

"We congratulate you upon your intelligent enthusiasm on behalf of the independent buyers. We value The News service highly, and we are particularly indebted to you for the assistance continually given, not only through the columns of your admirable publication but through the personal courtesies of your office.

Blue Law Sunday Fight at Lansing, Mich.

Young People's Union, and Behind It Preachers, Trying to Close Movies on Lord's Day, Despite Losing Election

EFFORTS are being made made by the Young People's Union at Lansing, Mich., to shut up the theatres on Sunday. It is really a crusade backed by the ministers to do away with motion pictures on the day they preach their sermons.

In Lansing the situation is especially exasperating, for the sanity of the town at a recent referendum election put a finish to blue laws, as it was supposed. But evidently one defeat is not enough to convince the preachers.

Under the leadership of E. Clements Jarvis, operating the Orpheum and the Garden, and other exhibitions, the new effort to reach a Puritanical Sunday observance in Lansing will be resisted.

It is urged by the theatre owners that motion pictures are cleaner, better and more educational than ever. Hundreds who would not go to the churches anyway are taught wholesome moral lessons in the motion picture shows in the most vivid and direct way possible.

The exhibitors declare, too, that this "is a year when there are far more important matters for really good citizens to do than to go chasing after the chimera of blue law Sunday closing. One question for the members of the Young People's Union is, "Are you still a slacker?"

A statement issued by the advocates of Sunday closing, headed by Jacob L. Alderfer, says:

"The central point of the campaign is centered around a proposed ordinance closing the theatres as we have learned to know them on Sundays. It is not denied that certain other desecrations are equally under the ban of the young people, and they hope that this may be only a beginning to setting the people of Lansing—churched and unchurched alike—to thinking of the great possibilities for all alike in this great day, recognized by the laws of man as well as by the laws of God.

"Many of the theatre managers frown upon this attitude of the young people, for they say, 'Sunday is our best day.' Without any thought of challenging their statements, but merely for their own information and the information of the public, on a recent Sunday observations were made at six of the ten theatres in our city now running. From 2 to 3, but fifteen persons entered at one of them, and at the same places from 7:15 to 9 in the evening, but eighty-four persons were seen to enter. At another, from 1 to 4 in the afternoon, 138 entered; at another, from 1:45 to 2:45, 121 were seen to enter.

"The most popular afternoon show, from 2 to 3:40, revealed an attendance of 360, while its next nearest competitor, from 2:35 to 3:35, had 171. In the evening these latter registered respectively at the first show 606, and from 6:30 to 9, 788, and there were the only semblances of a Sunday full house. The total canvass revealed 2,416 persons in attendance, of which 863 were men alone, 364 couples, 217 women alone, 170 children alone, leaving less than one-fifth of the total to family groups."

"We are very partial to the News and highly appreciate the state rights department."

Exhibitors' Convention Plans at St. John, N. B.

Plans are being made for the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to be held in St. John, N. B., September 9-10. Among those who have promised to deliver addresses are W. Stephen Bush and Marrick W. Nutting, the latter of Canadian Motion Picture Digest.

Walter W. Irwin, of Vitagraph, has written that if it is possible Miss Rose Tapley will be sent to address the convention, the public to be admitted.

A local committee for the entertainment of delegates has been formed, consisting of W. H. Golding, president of the league; S. C. Hurley, secretary; F. G. Spencer, vice-president for P. E. I.; W. C. McKay of the Opera House, A. B. Farmer of the Star, R. G. March of Pathe, G. A. Margetts of Universal, Miss Kathleen Golding and Miss Alice Fairweather, motion picture editor of the St. John Standard.

The business meetings of the league will probably be held in the Board of Trade rooms, while the lectures and the social functions will be at the Imperial theatre. A sail on the St. John River, motor trips about the city, views of the harbor works and a reception at the Manor House, situated four miles from St. John, are planned by the entertainment committee.

Motion Picture Fires Now a Rarity in Pennsylvania

FIRES in motion picture theatres of Pennsylvania have been greatly reduced from the record of former years, according to a report made by the state fire marshal, Hal Port. Strict regulations prescribed by the Department of Labor and Industry and, better moving picture machinery are given credit.

Mr. Port's report, filed at Harrisburg, says that in one month when there were 1080 fires all over the state only one single fire occurred in a motion picture theatre, which fact certainly speaks for itself.

Mr. Port says in the past year there has been scarcely a month with more than one or two fires in motion picture theatres of the state. This is regarded as a remarkable improvement, over several years ago, when there were frequent fires originating from film booths, some of which were responsible for theatre panics and attendant loss of life.

In the opinion of Mr. Port, the practical elimination of disastrous motion picture theatre blazes can be attributed in large measure to modern devices for making the operation of picture machines safer; to better regulations, more intelligent operation, and better rules for the construction of motion picture theatres.

Public Honors to Soldiers in St. John Theatre

The Imperial theatre, of St. John, N. B., was offered recently for the ceremony of presentation of certificates to returned soldiers which took place from 4.30 to 6 o'clock.

The theatre, through the courtesy of Manager Golding, was placed at the disposal of the committee in charge for the public recognition of these heroes.

Women as "Home Sentinels" Speak in Theatres

Seven moving picture theatres in Cleveland—all located in districts containing many foreign born citizens—were donated Friday night to representatives of the National Defence Council, for the purpose of explaining, "How War Came to America!"

Four women, all members of the "home sentinels," made addresses at the following theatres: Jennie Carpenter, at the Ideal and the Case; Mrs. Charles Pitcock, at the Gordon Park and the Lark; Mrs. J. A. Raugh, at the Grand Central, and Mrs. I. T, Frary, at the Market Square and the Luna.

Americans "Digging Themselves In" a Gaumont Release

WHEN Gaumont makes its usual weekly releases through Mutual the week of September 3, spectators will be treated to the customary war pictures which they have come to await with interest upon the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly reel. There will also be pictures of a magazine nature in "Reel Life" No. 71. Mutual Weekly is released September 5, and "Reel Life" a day later.

Every ship from abroad is carrying films made on the western front by cameramen of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, and the military cameramen, for Gaumont release in America. The debarkation of troops has been featured as a regular part of the Mutual Weekly, and now that the Americans are encamped, pictures of their preparations for trench service will frequently be seen.

"Reel Life" No 71 contains as an unusual contributoin pictures which show how the five senses are developed for business and pleasure. A second section shows "A Watering System for a Small Farm." This illustrates how a truck farm is irrigated by overhead pipes. "Pets Which Will Never Be Popular" takes spectators on a visit to a skunk farm conducted by a fifteen-year-old girl. An animated drawing, founded upon a picture in "Life," the celebrated magazine of humor and satire, is called "Fresh Advances in the Champagne District."

Ditmars Animal Pictures in a Catalogue

The Educational Films Corporation has just closed a contract with Raymond L. Ditmars, producer of "The Living Book of Nature" animal pictures. It is announced that a catalogue of these pictures has been published and will be sent to all first-class exhibitors and exchange men throughout the country.

American rights are being released through Independent Exchanges.

Snappy Pictures in Gaumont-Mutual Weekly

Mutual Weekly, No. 136, current issue, has pictures of Harry Chapman Gilbert, first to offer for the draft army. There are also action pictures of the Cabinet members and heads of departments in setting-up exercises.

"Somewhere in France" provides pictures of a boxing match at a convalescent hospital for the amusement of the soldiers.

Wireless Controlled Submarine in Universal's Weekly

Pictures of war's latest wonder, the wireless controlled submarine, are in the eighty-fifth issue of Universal's Animated Weekly, just released.

Close-ups are given of Robert A. Morton, the Harvard graduate engineer, who invented this new sea terror. The claim is made by experts who have inspected Morton's invention that its course can be accurately directed from an aeroplane, battleship or fort, and that so perfect is its mechanism that it launches its own torpedoes without a man on board.

Other scenes show Special Ambassador Elihu Root and the members of the Russian Commission greeting America on their way home from their labors in Russia; the recent $4,000,000 flood in the Chaudiere Valley, Canada; special demonstrations by Madam Maria Montessori, the famous child educator; examinations of men subject to draft and novel pictures of Henry Elionsky shown swimming.

WHAT THESE REVIEWS MEAN TO YOU!

¶ Many exhibitors seem to regard their short specialty subjects merely as fillers—without advertising or patron pulling power.

¶ The reverse is the case. Specialty subjects usually have timely themes, they cover subjects of intimate interest to your audiences. They are the stuff that the daily newspapers and popular magazines are made of—they have human interest.

¶ Properly handled, they will secure just as much newspaper publicity as your feature—pull dimes away from your competitor when the feature has the possible patron wavering.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeL. Berg

BOBBY, PACIFIST (Vitagraph)

Any fellow, that's a real fellow, when he sees a big boy scrapping with a little one, wants to take a hand. But Bobby had heard and taken to heart the lesson of the other cheek, so that when the bully lets his victim go and turns his attention to Bobby, our hero puts his faith into practice. And gets a bigger martyr's crown than he had bargained for! Miss Aida happened to be on the scene, and her remarks are not complimentary.

When you are only eight, the paths of glory are few. Our hero takes comfort in daydreams, and a wondrous adventure and romance he achieves, in which burly ruffians, a stolen heroine, heliographs, and a Bobby doing prodigies of strength and valor have a part. Of course it couldn't possibly come true—even the hopeful Bobby realizes that. But what does come is a repentant and loving Aida, bearing a lollypop of peace.

SPORT FISH—AND THOSE WHO TOIL

No, they are not lobsters, split and broiled (Gaumont Reel Life 85.) They're big affairs of canvas, shaped like a fat catfish with outriggers, inflated, and appropriately decorated. The girls in California play mermaid with them, riding them through the surf and landing, a tumbled, laughing crew, on the beach.

But our faithful mail carriers have no such aid to locomotion. Reel Life, in a series of pictures showing the handling of the mail, gives us an insight into the dexterous and faithful service rendered by our postmen. Not even the clever machines can save more than a part of the labor. From street corner box, mail chute, and trolley car box (as in the West), the letters must be collected by the pedestrian postman. No matter what the weather, he must still deliver the precious mail. And when, after fifty years of service, he is ready for retirement no pension awaits him. Gaumont has put into the hands of the exhibitor a weapon in a worthy cause. Let him use it!

GRAPE JUICE AND RATTLERS

Of course there is no causal connection. It just happens (Selig Library 14) that the snake follows the wine. It is probably very good wine, as the art was introduced into California where this picture was taken, in 1770.

The rattler is equal to the beverage. Not being averse to snakes (on the screen), we found him quite the most interesting part of the reel. We forgot to count his rattles, but they were there, and his vicious head and coiling body were tremendously impressive.

The rest of the reel was devoted to the making of clay figures and vases in Italy. A fine bit showed a picturesque lad whirling the wheel with his foot, while under his deft hands the mass of clay quickly rose and formed itself into a graceful amphora.

ENDS SOUGHT; AN END ATTAINED

The war may end before next Winter; it may last for years. But every push on the Western Front brings back to the fold one or more French towns, never again to be lost. Hearst-Pathe News 66 shows scenes in "Ham after the German retreat." That earnest, passionate orator Viviani welcomes Ham back to the bosom of the mother country; school children, freed from the hated Boche masters, pour merrily from school, bearing holiday gifts.

But looking to deeds yet to do, London sends an Honor Legion, made up entirely of women, to the front; the United States, in preparation for the new army, is rushing work on great new cantonments, like that we see going up with marvellous speed at Rockport, Illinois; and Canada trains airmen. We see them seated on the ground, an earnest group, studying the engine and rudder of a dismembered aeroplane. Those already masters of the craft are flying like great birds in the clouds. We go up as passenger with one of these and view the earth flattening out beneath.

Offense and defense, however, are not confined to those who fight the enemy without. To guard us against the malefactors within our gates, our policemen learn jui-jitsu. A lively and exceedingly interesting picture this, ending with a vigorous encounter between a policeman and two "thugs." A spirited attack, a counter attack, and then—exit Mr. Officer with a malefactor tucked away under each arm!

BIRDS AND BANDITS

Fine feathers may make fine birds, but something depends on the birds themselves. We appreciate the ostrich as a useful member of society, but we prefer his feathers, in the shape of boa and fan, adorning a bird of human species. In Pathe International split-reel we see how the limp ostrich feathers are transformed into the fluffy adornments of commerce.

"Jerry is on the Job," guarding the frontier in Mexico. Needless to say, he has a lively time and a triumphal finish.

IT HAPPENED IN TOYLAND

"Little Red Riding Hood" was a flaxen haired Mo-Toy (Peter Pan Film Corporation) with trusting blue eyes. So when a big wolf with a waving bushy tail met her in the woods and, barking gently, offered to show her the way to Grandmother's house, she believed him. It all happens exactly like the beloved story—that is, the story with the good ending. For, of course, the valiant wood-cutter arrives just in time to chop off the head of the bad wolf. The little tale is cleverly handled, and manages to go with a real "punch" at the end.

"Dinkley of the Circus" (Peter Pan Film Corporation) wears a scarlet coat (we are sure it is scarlet) and sports the shiniest of black boots. He is the king pin of his one-ring hippodrome—and suffers the fate of king pins! Equally unfortunate in preserving his equilibrium is the clown. When Jumbo is not falling on the Mo-Toy Marcelline, the giraffes are using Mr. Dinkley for ring toss. But clown stretcher bearers hasten to the rescue of their confrere (they sit on him in the process, but never mind!) and as for Mr. Dinkley—Well, he never fails to land on his feet, eventually, and to start the next turn with a smile. Boxing Teddies, the charming equestrienne, or the celebrated acrobatic brothers, are triumphantly led in by our ringmaster. Not even Maud, that insurrectionary beast, proves too much for his resourceful daring. A long life to him! For he is sure of a cordial welcome in whatever theatre he makes his professional bow.

UNCLE SAM, HANDY MAN

In the happy days when there were more cooks than places for them to fill, "firing the cook" was a pleasant diversion for the tired business man. Nowadays he is more likely to offer the haughty one pearls of price merely to stay. But one cook is to be fired; indeed, has already received notice. She is Miss Extravagance, late in the employ of Uncle Sam, and Paramount-Bray Pictograph 81 tells us how she nearly wrecked a dinner party that gentleman was offering his friends across the water.

When Uncle Samuel is not taking thought of food supplies, he is getting his gun in order. The submarine is a mighty handy little weapon, but not always convenient for defending a Pacific port if it happens to be riding the waves of the Atlantic. To obviate this difficulty, Simon Lake has perfected devices for lifting the submarine from the water and transporting it by rail from place to place. Animated drawings by Leventhal set this forth admirably.

WHERE THE TREASURE IS FOUND

In "Central Colorado," Pathe gives us a comprehensive view of the Cripple Creek gold mine region. The region is rough and somewhat desolate, but magnificent scenery is disclosed as the camera approaches Pike's Peak. From an enormous height we look down upon a vast amphitheatre, wherein an automobile, a mere speck in the distance, threads its way by tortuous roads. As darkness closes in, we glimpse Pike's Peak, a huge, white mass, centered between the black hills of the foreground.

SUBMARINES, HUMAN AND OTHERWISE

Perhaps those German bases would not be so hard to reach if we had a fleet of such as Henry Elionsky, a giant of a man, who considers it a pleasure to swim five miles, mostly under water, with arms and legs strapped to a chair, and only his massive shoulders free to do the work.

Seriously speaking, there is evidence that interest in finding the final solution of the terrible submarine problem is still keen. Robert A. Morton, a Harvard graduate engineer, in this issue (Universal Animated Weekly 85) shows his model of a wireless-controlled submersible. The boat dives, rises, and launches torpedoes, at the direction of a distant operator.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

Reel Fellows Club Dissolves—New Body Projected

The Reel Fellows Club of Chicago is a thing of the past. Under that name since its organization banded together members from all branches of the film industry here. The Reel Fellows had occupied a paramount position in the social affairs within the Windy City's film circles. The decision to disband and relinquish all hold and claim on the comfortable little suite of clubrooms in the College Building came last week and was followed by a tentative plan to get together and form a new organization—under a different name and constructed on a more sound and conservative basis than the old club was.

The decision came to dissolve at a meeting of the emergency committee held at the Hamilton Club on August 13. This committee was made up of the men who formed the nucleus of the Reel Fellows and who to the last had remained loyal and striving for its continued existence in the face of an unexplainable indifference manifested by the other members of the organization. Roderick Ross acted as chairman at this meeting and the rest of those present who sounded the knell of the old club and started the plans for the new one were Ralph Proctor, Richard Nehls, David Russakov, Donald J. Bell, A. E. Curtis, Joseph Hopp, Watterson Rothacker, William A. Heaney, W. E. Burford, T. H. Belford and Edward W. Stoddard.

The above named committee will have entire charge of the formation of the new body.

Filmdom Hears of Launching of Impressive New Organization

Chicago's film firmament was rent last week with the tentative announcement that the first step in the merging of the interests of some of America's greatest picture producers had been taken here on Wednesday, August 15. They, according, to the rather scanty but reliable information able to be obtained at this time, intend to launch a new high standard in cinema art under the title of "Perfection Pictures." Their slogan along with this title is to be: "The highest standard in Motion Pictures."

The productions, it is said, will all be high-class feature subjects, mostly light comedy dramas. Many of America's foremost members of the literatti, magazine writers, novelists and the cream of the "best sellers" are under contract and have already supplied many manuscripts.

All of the subjects are to be five reels or more in length. They are to be released at intervals of one a week, beginning in September. It is vouched for that appropriations have already been made calling for the expenditure of not less than $1,750,000 in productions alone during the first year.

LEAKS IN THE LOOP

A special meeting of the Advertising Film Producers' Association has been called for Monday, August 27, at the studio of the Rothacker Film Company here. The matters to be discussed at this meeting will have to do with a change in the constitution and by-laws of the association and other matters of general importance pertaining to moving pictures advertising.

Maurice Fleckles, district manager of the Universal Company, is getting to be a Twentieth Century commuter from New York to this city. I have tabbed up his second visit here to the local Universal Exchange within ten days.

F. R. Bromley, assistant manager of the local Universal Exchange, is leaving for a two weeks' vacation this week—the first in five years, his P. A. says.

Vaudeville at the Colonial theatre does not mean the entire elimination of motion pictures there. On August 20 Doug Fairbanks in his newest Artcraft will have an initial showing there.

"How the Movies Are Made" was shown to the Camera Club of Chicago one day last week at its regular meeting, transferred for the occasion to the American Film Company's plant. Charles Ziebarth, superintendent of the factory, did the explanatory work.

Martha McKellops, a nine-year-old Chicago girl, who has been in several Essanay features and who will appear in the Wholesome's forthcoming photoplay, "Cinderella," has also been selected to take the leading part in a local pageant entitled "America Wake Up."

"Senator" Mitchell, formerly the Beau Brummel of the salesmen in the local Fox office, has lined up with the Metro forces and is touring Indiana in their behalf.

The censors have again held up Fox's "Tiger Woman," with Theda Bara. Herr Funkhouser is also venting his spleen, after his defeat with the "Little American" on Vitagraph's "Within the Law." Looks like another mandamus proceedings and a "lose" for the Maje, judging from Sydney Abel's attitude.

Jack O'Toole, who is now confining himself solely to selling the Standard brand of pictures in the Fox office here, is doing some lively hustling around. Contracts are to be seen a-plenty with the dotted lines filled out.

The local Exhibitors' League body have presented Rose Tapley, of Vitagraph, with a gold-monogramed wrist watch for her wonderful work and co-operation here during the recent exposition.

We had not heard from Dick Travers for many a day, when suddenly one day last week we received word that Richard the Svelte has been chosen for the second officers' reserve training camp at Fort Sheridan.

There was something familiar missing around the Rose, Alcazar and Boston theatres during the last two weeks. We inquired and found that Manager Harry C. Miller has been spending his vacation in Wisconsin.

Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal News Weekly, made a short stopover in the Loop on his way home from the Coast.

E. O. Gurney, auditor of the Universal and Bluebird exchanges, was in town conferring with local exchange managers. Mr. Gurney is on an extended trip to the West.

Manager Louis Marcus of the Majestic theatre at Council Bluffs, has purchased a Bartola Grand for his show palace. I. Lutz, manager of the New Illinois, at Thirty-first and Wentworth streets, has also signed up for a Bartola Grand. M. J. West, of the West theatre, Galesburg, has purchased a Bartola organ attachment.

The Unity Photoplays Exchange here have purchased the Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin rights on the "Warfare of the Flesh."

Manager Jenner of the local K-E-S-E offices spent two days in Milwaukee last week visiting the Bostic theatre, where "Skinner's Baby" is having a great run.

Beban Starts Discussion

George Beban, the Italian character delineator, stopped off in Chicago last Wednesday on his way to the Oliver Morosco Studios on the Coast. Manager S. J. Stoughton of Paramount and Manager Max Goldstein of Artcraft introduced Mr. Beban to the members of the trade and daily press and to the exhibitors with a luncheon held during the afternoon at the Blackstone Hotel. Mr. Beban is accompanied by his wife and young son.

At the luncheon Mr. Beban himself started a discussion on the question that has recently been put up to him—shall he change from his present delineation of lowly, peasant Italian types to something different or higher class. The consensus of opinion of the press and exhibitors was that any change from Mr. Beban's well-known characterizations at present would be a catastrophe.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

WE, speaking after the editorial fashion, hate to talk about ourself, but it is a great way of filling up space. We just thought that everyone would like to know what a great event our arrival on the West Coast was for the settlers out there. The first evening Ken McGaffey received a night off (kindness of Mrs. Mac) Tom Geraghty discovered an aching tooth that needed constant application of Mrs. Alexander's soothing syrup, Eric Campbell, the ancient recluse who seldom sets foot away from the doorstep, decided to take one last fling at enjoying himself, while J. Carl Jessen and other popular rounders acted as pilots. The first part of the evening was taken up by wandering through various places in Los Angeles, that if located in New York would be up on 145th street and Lenox avenue. Honestly, would you take an out-of-town guest up there to enjoy himself? But then, you know, the West is so broadening! It was really Mr. McKaffey's fault, and we were extremely glad to learn that he received a severe call down from the other half of the family on his arrival home.

TO say nothing of meeting the two former editors of this page, George Proctor and Harvey Thew. Can any of George's old friends picture him pondering whether to buy an Edison or a Victrola? Real, life-sized machines? And then kicking because he didn't have room for them both?

WELL, how times do change! Returning from our highly publicized vacation, we find the immense form of Fred Beecroft gracing the main chair in the advertising department. And yet they say there's nothing new under the sun.

VITAGRAPH names a principal character in one of its latest releases, Carline. What next? Interborough?

JACK GARDNER, recruited from the stage, has this to say about picture work: "Before, I used to get mentally tired from having to learn so many lines. Now I get dead tired, physically, but still I like the outdoor life much better than that of the stage." But Jack neglected to opine on whether pictures were here to stay, a matter which certainly demands attention during these troublesome times.

EVER notice that magazine writers have recently taken up the practice of likening unconvincing parts of their stories to motion pictures? When they come to the point a character exclaims, "How like a movie this is!" or some kindred phrase, or else the writer will draw the comparison himself. But why blame the pictures? It seems to be the writers who are at fault.

LIFE would be dull indeed if they ever decided to leave the bathing girls out of the Mack Sennett Weekly.

"CLEOPATRA," on which Theda Bara is working, has brought to light the astounding fact that the star has a sense of humor! This may not sound so strange, but it is when you recall the fact that Miss Bara, among many other things, has informed an eager public that the moon has a tremendous fascination for her. "Its cold rays seem to harmonize with my very soul," she is quoted as saying on one occasion, probably when under the effect of the sun. But back to the original topic. While making a certain scene for "Cleopatra," Miss Bara, who wore an extremely scanty costume, had as a covering a shawl made of moline. After a take, one of the property men picked up this article, and, handing it to the actress, said: "Here is your overcoat, Miss Bara." "The famous screen artist saw the joke in the situation and joined in the hearty laugh that followed."

"FISH and Film," a four-page sheet, produced at Santa Monica, Cal., by Tom Geraghty, Pat or Paul Dowling and Bennie Zeidman has been received at this office. It is one of the most notable contributions to current American literature issued yesterday, and is really sparkling with brilliant items penned by a genius. A partial review of its contents is all that we able to give in our limited space. One of the gems contained relates how Carl Robinson attempted to kiss a girl on the platform while his train was passing through Pasadena. But instead of connecting with the platform he kissed a cow on track near Pomona.

Feature articles concerning an affair called the "Oh! Oh! Gambol," and the throwing of Bull Montana by six press agents are also in evidence while advertisements of Theda Bara's tobacco company, Jack Kerrigan's undertaking establishment, Charlie Chaplin's hardware shop, Douglas Fairbanks's delicatessen store, and others hold places of prominence.

After all is said and done, however, "Fish and Film," like many other works of genius, seems to mean absolutely nothing at all. The reviewer has half an idea that it was inspired over the cups, in which, it is far from libelous to guess, its editors were very deep at the time said inspiration dawned upon them.

TOM GERAGHTY, the Hound of Hollywood, decided that the flowing black tie was neglected on the Pacific Coast and thereupon draped it about his own neck. Of course you know who its Eastern sponsor is.

R. M. VANDIVERT is the latest recruit for the Vice-President and General Manager Club.

REVIEWERS, having been properly tamed, are once again allowed to enter the projecting room while Bluebirds are cavorting about on the screen.

A SPECIAL car was added to train No. 54, on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, on Saturday last, to accommodate E. K. Lincoln's "week end" guests. More of this next week.

The Longacre Lampoon

All the News That Fits, We Print Longacre Square, N. Y., September 1, 1917

If we had an honor roll lying about the office we'd place "Mr. Opp," a Bluebird picture, right, square at its top. Howlers and critics, who insist after seeing one picture that all pictures are artificial ought to make time off, quit talking and do a little looking at it. "Mr. Opp," taken from Alice Heagan Rice's book, adapted and directed by Lynn Reynolds, a man who is making a big splash in the picture business, has to do with such real people that it thoroughly charms the onlooker from first to last.

It might be used as a model. It ought to be. No guns, abductions, last minute confessions, physical thrills or faithless married folk. One could go on for pages and enumerate the things that "Mr. Opp" hasn't got and then he'd be only half through his job as the proposition of naming the things it has got would confront him.

We suppose that on Eighth Avenue or Third Avenue or Fourteenth Street and similar places in other cities that "Mr. Opp" will hardly be appreciated, but if we were that high and exalted thing, an exhibitor, we'd take a chance on running it even if our audience were composed of should-be and ex-convicts.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Washington May Keep Exchanges, After All

Film Men May Get a Building and Respite from Too Drastic Regulation Until Structure Is Completed—Baltimore at Work

THERE is a possibility that the Washington exchanges will not be compelled to go to Baltimore on account of the exacting fire regulations and the hesitancy of real estate corporations to undertake the erection of a building. A recent conference of exchangemen and members of the Chamber of Commerce of the city may result favorably.

Though Baltimore is making flattering inducements to the exchanges to come to that city, the managers are not desirous of making the move. Not only will it entail a great deal of work in the moving, but Baltimore is not as favorably located for train and express service to the south as Washington.

Manager Evans of Mutual, secretary of the Exchangemen's Association, said:

"No, we really have no desire to go to Baltimore unless we are driven to it, and it looks as though we may be. However, I believe that if the Fire Department has a sufficient guarantee that a building in accordance with their regulations will be constructed within a reasonable time, the exchanges will be given sufficient time. I am ready to take a reasonable aspect of the situation; but we must have a building somewhere and have it soon."

Members of the special Baltimore committee, consisting of Frank A. Hornig, Louis Schlichter and Louis A. DeHoff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and A. S. Goldsborough, Director of Industries of the Merchants & Manufacturers' Association, have begun work in an effort to establish adequate shipping facilities for the exchange men.

They are endeavoring to get the express companies interested in working out a schedule whereby the film used in Baltimore can be shipped to points in Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina in time for the opening shows at the theatres there.

A. F. Beck, Art Dramas, Confers with Exchangemen

A. F. Beck, upon assuming charge of Art Dramas, summoned by telephone Mayer Silverman, Pittsburgh; Edward Golden, Boston; R. C. Cropper, Chicago, and W. E. Greene, of New York. These men came on for a conference with President Harry Raver and General Manager Beck.

Details were presented to the conference of a special advertising campaign and a new policy on releases for the same season at hand. The visiting exchangemen were enthusiastic over Mr. Beck's plans as outlined.

Further plans for a trip to all exchanges by Mr. Beck are under way, but the responsibilities of the New York office will keep him here for at least another six weeks.

George Kleine Makes Change at Atlanta

Harry R. Bannister has been appointed manager of George Klein's, Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay branch at Atlanta, succeeding J. T. Ezell. Mr. Bannister is making a successful manager and K-E-S-E says it is expected that the service at Atlanta will thrive under his direction.

Music Cue Sheets to Be Furnished by K-E-S-E

Music cue sheets will hereafter be provided on all features released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay. This service begins regularly with the release of Essanay's "Open Places" August 20, featuring Jack Gardner. K-E-S-E Service has engaged George W. Beynon, a widely known musician, to select and arrange the music.

Goldwyn Phila. Offices Open

After spending two months in time and several thousands in money, the Philadelphia offices of the Goldwyn Picture Corporation, at the southeast corner of Thirteenth and Vine streets, are ready for business.

Simple dignity combined with artistic taste is the keynote which manager George T. Ames has infused into the new Goldwyn home. Everything from furniture to fittings is in solid mahogany, which marks a pleasing contrast to the tones of tan and brown in walls and handsome carpets which cover every inch of the floors.

General Film Makes Shifts in Canada

J. F. Clancy, three months manager of General Film's Toronto, Ont., branch, has been made business manager of the company, with headquarters in Montreal.

E. H. Wells, general sales manager, becomes manager of distribution. Leslie MacIntosh, former salesman, has been appointed manager of the Toronto office. The company will release twenty-five reels a week.

Two Departments Necessary in Triangle N. Y. Exchange

The New York exchange of The Triangle Distributing Corporation has announced that hereafter the exchange will be divided into two separate departments, one having charge of the sale and release of productions appearing on the Triangle program, and the other to handle special productions. The former will be known as the Program Department, and the latter as the Series Department.

The Series Department will have charge of all Paralta releases, and also the Fairbanks and Hart re-issues, which are to be released September 2 and 16, respectively. Entirely distinct sales and service representatives will be located in each department, devoting their time exclusively to the special work of the respective branches.

It had originally been planned to keep the exchange as one office, handling both the program and the specials from there, but the volume of business already undertaken made this arrangement impossible.

Irwin Stops in Omaha

Walter W. Irwin, head of the Vitagraph Company, spent several hours in Omaha last Sunday and made a large number of friends. Manager L. A. Getzler of the local Vitagraph exchange called his force together at 10 o'clock in the morning and Mr. Irwin met every one personally, shaking hands with them and passing a word or two with each. Then he made a brief talk, outlining the new policies of the company and, as Mr. Getzler said, "edging everybody up with the fact that there are plenty of opportunities with the Vitagraph Company."

"He is a man who meets you on your own ground, and who makes a hit with you by his personal force," is Omaha's opinion of President Irwin.

"He certainly gave us more life and pep," said members of the exchange.

After the exchange meeting he was taken about the city and met a number of the theatre managers. He urged the Sun, now charging 10 cents admission, to adopt at least 15 or 20 cent admission with the quality of productions it is showing. He also decided, he told the exhibitors, that in Omaha 50 cents admission should be the maximum price for even the biggest picture to be shown in the city.

The Sales Promoter—Who and Why Is He?

By BERT ADLER
(Thanhouser Film Corporation)

EDITOR'S NOTE—The author of this article declares that a new type of business man has entered the film field. Mr. Adler not only explains the existence of the "sales promoter," but he defines various terms and explains the steps which have led to his conclusion.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: Who is the mysterious new gentleman in our midst, the sales promoter? WHY IS HE? What, pray, is his work? Aided and abetted by such forward-looking men as Seelye of Pathe, Goff of Vitagraph, Sheehan of Fox and Gradwell of World, the Sales promoter is here, anyway; and to stay. These paragraphs simply try to clear the air of the mystery that surrounds his job and to express some thoughts in relation to it.

Generalizing

SALESMEN: Whenever a business grows up and competition becomes keen, the best modern methods applicable must be introduced. Note that word "applicable." Modern methods that have sold shoes won't apply in the film business no matter how good. There is just a certain amount of modern selling method that can be brought to the business of selling film, but even that certain amount can create a great percentage of new business, help hold old business—and win back lost customers. As a business grows up, then, not only are the best modern methods applicable needed, but men trained in those methods are required to carry on the work. The guesser is succeeded by the man with the card index. The "game" of selling becomes a science.

To teach salesmen how the goods they are handling are made, how to advise exhibitors to stage and advertise these goods so that their best points will be featured, to intelligently appraise territory and be able to judge the number of days features should be exhibited—to teach salesmen to work for the exhibitor to increase the exhibitor's profit, and so the profit of the exchange—in other words, to take the exchange salesman out of the class of mere film peddler and make him an interesting helpful guide, attractive to every exhibitor on whom he calls, to do this is the purpose of the Sales Promoter.

MANAGERS: It has come to be accepted in selling that to build up an efficient body of branch managers necessitates keeping them in touch with the business, giving them up-to-the-minute information regarding its progress—in fact, furnishing them sales hints and helps of all kinds. This means that the main office must devise a system for giving to managers such facts concerning business conditions, the progress of the company and its competitors, and any opportunities for added business through innovations as will make them more efficient representatives.

Drop the policy of simply dictating instructions to branch managers—go into the battle with them! But the company should not be expected to gather all the ammunition. The managers themselves must do their reciprocal part. In order, then, to get the best and fullest information from branch managers and place it to the best advantage with their fellows, all such data should come through the main office for distribution. What kind of information is an exchange manager likely to gather that will be of interest to other men in the organization? That must be taught him, so he send no useless data.

"ORDER-TAKERS": A lot of exchange solicitors, and some exchange managers for that matter, are mere order-takers. It isn't their fault, they were never taught to be anything else and they're too busy to study modern salesmanship of their own accord. In this case, teach it to them — simply — quickly — thoroughly — through the Department of the Sales Promoter. From mere order-takers, our selling men become exhibitors' partners! Instead of striving merely for the existing business, they create business!

To Particularize

(a) The Sales Promoter should handle in a special way, all correspondence from exchange managers effecting sales. No matter to whom written, if a letter mentions sales, it must go to the Sales Promoter, or that portion making such mention must be brought to the attention of the Sales Promoter for special treatment.

(b) He will check up sales in each territory, institute special selling campaigns in any locality where sales are weak, and POUND exchange managers—whether the sales are up to the mark or not. In this connection exchange managers will be required to report what service all theatres in their localities are taking, why theatres not taking the company's features (as per solicitor's report), aren't taking same, whether they ever did take these features, and if so, why they canceled. These reports will be used as a basis for the exact handling of each theatre not taking the company's features.

(c) Cancellations to be instantly reported for special campaign by the Sales Promoter.

(d) Exchange managers will be required to write weekly letters on selling results, same to contain all new ideas that managers have found to bring results; these letters to be analyzed and answered by the Sales Promoter whose weekly reply will give all the new, result-getting ideas of ALL THE EXCHANGE MANAGERS. That is, the Sales Promoter's letter will be a sales letter based on the actual sales activities of all exchanges week after week.

(e) Publicity Department co-operation with exchange managers and exhibitors in the furnishing of whatever matter the department has thus far prepared and whatever further matter the Sales Promoter thinks necessary. That is, the use of the company's publicity matter will be urged as part of the general sales campaign. In this connection, exchange managers will receive advance letters on coming features, giving their best points from a selling standpoint.

(f) Sales Meetings. Sales Boosting Trips. The Sales Promoter's follow-up of exchanges and exhibitors will be a regular weekly, and in cases, daily service, and may only be subject to interruption when the Sales Promoter is out of town. This will be when a drop in sales in some certain locality warrants a visit, when some special feature is to be exploited, or when it is advisable to call a special meeting of exchange managers in a district (to be arranged by general manager, district manager and Sales Promoter). Sales Promoter should meet district managers at stated times for conference on the work of Sales Promotion. Promotion meetings should also be held at Home Office at stated times when all interested from the heads down to the newest salesman (from the New York exchange) should discuss the Sales Promotion work.

(g) Arrange prize contests, profit-sharing opportunities or bonuses, for managers and salesmen who secure the most business each month.

(h) Instruct solicitors completely about the films they are handling.

(i) Instruct managers and salesmen to co-operate with exhibitors in every direction open. Remember, they are the exhibitor's partners! Their opportunities to help their customers are unlimited. The sales and advertising aids are but a beginning. Information as to probable exhibiting conditions, coming features, competing programs and how to meet them, the staging of the picture—all is welcome news to the exhibitor. Let our customer know (and the Sales Promoter will regularly furnish data to this end) that a personal interest attaches to him—an interest in his success that is not measured by the dollars he is paying for service.

Objections

to the promotion work should not arise through objection to any particular plan here set forth. It is very likely that some plan cannot be carried out for unforeseen reasons, in which event new methods can be devised to fit the emergency. In fact, it is likely that methods totally unthought of at the present writing will develop themselves as promotion work goes along. For the beauty of such work is that it is always CONSTRUCTIVE, never DESTRUCTIVE. It builds, builds, builds!

Philadelphia Exchange Notes

The latest exchange to establish Philadelphia headquarters is the Foursquare Pictures, Inc., which has remodeled 1325 Vine for its home.

Jerome Abrams, well known in film circles, is division manager with headquarters in Philadelphia.

The Foursquare territory includes all of Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia and southern New Jersey. Earl Booth is the Pennsylvania representative and Ben Abrams covers the southern territory.

Mr. Abrams declares that only big productions of merit will be handled. The pictures already acquired include "The Bar Sinister," "Sin Woman," "Madame Sherry," "Silent Witness," "Her Fighting Chance," "Whither Thou Goest," and "A Trip Through China."

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

At One Theatre 60,000 See "Jack and the Beanstalk"

WILLIAM Fox estimates that during the first three weeks of the New York showing of "Jack and the Beanstalk," at the Globe Theatre, it has played to 60,000 spectators. The seat sale indicates that fully 20,000 more will see the child fairy spectacle during the remaining seven days. The last week's run began Aug. 20.

It was first planned to undertake a three weeks' run. So great was the success of the picture, however, that Mr. Fox was compelled to keep it on another week. It is taken off then only because the Globe Theatre is required for a first showing of William Fox's patriotic production, "The Spy."

"Jack and the Beanstalk" has been showing at the Globe ever since its opening, at one dollar top price. It has been having consistently two performances a day, except on Sundays, when three shows were given.

In an effort to discover how large a proportion of the audiences at the Globe have been youngsters, William Fox directed that an actual count be taken of those who attend at several successive performances. These will be divided into two classes, children and adults. It will then be possible to prove statistically the assertion of the Globe's box-office, that "Jack and the Beanstalk" has been exercising as great an appeal to grown-ups as to kiddies.

The run of the picture at the Globe has aroused almost as much interest in the trade as in the public at large. Producers have been aroused to the value of child subjects as material for photoplays. "Jack" is a pioneer in a wide field, and William Fox, recognizing the immensity of the opportunity, has taken advantage of it by making the other Kiddies subjects, "Babes in the Wood," "The Mikado," "Pinafore," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Alice in Wonderland," and "The Brownies." Additional subjects are now in preparation in the Hollywood studios, and will be announced from time to time.

Woman Exhibitor in Newark Books Goldwyns

Mrs. L. H. Webb, owner of the Goodwin theatre, Newark, N. J., has signed contracts for the entire first year's output of Goldwyn Pictures for her exemplary little Newark theatre.

Beginning with "Polly of the Circus," starring Mae Marsh, during the week of September 9 Mrs. Webb will exhibit twenty-six Goldwyn productions, the maximum that Goldwyn has planned for its first year of operation.

While woman exhibitors are very much the exception to showmanship rule there are few better known exhibitors in America than Mrs. Webb.

Books "Two Little Imps" and Invites the Children

Last week the manager of the Pastime theatre in Iowa City, who had booked "Two Little Imps," the last play in which Jane and Katherine Lee starred for William Fox, was so pleased with the production that he gave a free show to hundreds of children in Iowa City.

Fairbanks Good for Week Runs in Edmonton

I. H. Allen of Calgary, Alta., writes that two theatres in Edmonton ran Fairbanks plays simultaneously recently and both did good business.

The empress theatre had "Americano" at fifteen-cent top price for three days and the Monarch theatre showed "Wild and Woolly" for six days, top price twenty-five cents. The Allen theatre in Calgary, he says, ran "Wild and Woolly" three days—the hottest days Calgary has had yet—and did capacity business.

"The Haunted House" Booked at the Rialto

S. L. Rothapfel has booked "The Haunted House," Triangle production, to open the fall season, running the week of September 2nd. Winifred Allen has a leading role. Allen Dwan produced the play in pictures at the Yonkers studio.

Miss Allen has appeared in several Triangle productions with Jack Devereaux—"A Successful Failure," "American—That's All," and "The Man Who Made Good."

E. B. Hatrick, Who Has Been Made Secretary of the International Film Service

Marcus Loew Signs "Conquest" for Eight Houses

Marcus Loew has signed eight New York theatres of his circuit to show "Conquest" picture programs, produced at the Edison studios and released through George Kleine's K-E-S-E distributing organization. The theatres selected by Mr. Loew to show these pictures are the New York theatre, Greeley Square, Lincoln, American, National Orpheum, Boulevard and Avenue B.

Mr. Loew declares he has found nothing in the film market that can compare with Conquest pictures in the way of providing entertainment "for the whole family." He says he is a strong believer in the propaganda that clean, wholesome films must and will prevail.

Many Philadelphia Houses Sign for Paramounts

Famous Players exchanges in Philadelphia, handling Paramount and Artcraft releases report increased contracts over previous seasons. Most of the theatres named below have booked the pictures and will adopt a minimum fifteen-cent admission:

Strand, Nixon, Colonial, Germantown, Leader, Frankford, Coliseum, Cedar, Sherwood, Baltimore, Jumbo, Broadway, Pastime, Hippodrome, Franklin, Orient, of Darby, in Philadelphia, alone; Grand and Princess theatres, Camden, N. J.; Carr and Shad theatres of Reading, Pa., including their largest and most pretentious theatre, the Colonial; Grand, Chester, Pa.; Bijou, Atlantic City, N. J.; Grand, Vineland, N. J.; Third St. theatre, Easton, Pa.; Lehigh Orpheum, So. Bethlehem, Pa.; Grand, Lancaster, Pa.; Savoy, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Strand, Scranton; Cox's, Cape May, N. J.; Auditorium, Burlington, N. J.; Realty, Middletown, Pa.; Lincoln theatre, Downingtown, and Luna theatre, Danville, Pa.

"The Honor System" Extends Its Sway to Chicago

"The Honor System," a William Fox "Standard" picture, opens its first engagement in the West August 20 at the Studebaker theatre, Chicago. It was at the Lyric theatre, on Broadway, New York, and then went to the Academy of Music, with a seating capacity of more than 3,000, where it was shown to fine business for two weeks.

The only other picture that ever ran more than a week at the Academy of Music was William Fox's "Tale of Two Cities."

More than 100,000 persons saw "The Honor System" at the Academy of Music alone, Mr. Fox says.

On August 26 this production will be available to exhibitors everywhere. Bookings for it can be made now at the nearest William Fox exchange. As "The Honor System is a Standard picture, the policy that "you cannot book it until you see it" will apply.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

EARLE WILLIAMS returned to the Vitagraph Studio in Brooklyn last week after an absence of five weeks. During that time Mr. Wililams was critically ill, suffering from an infection of the foot. He has been in bed for the greater part of the past few weeks while the wound healed.

Mr. Williams resumed work in a picture he had started before he was stricken, "The Meddler with Destiny," and by a strange coincidence the role he plays is that of a surgeon.

THE Van Dyke company, headed by Jean Sothern, which has been at Atlantic Highlands for some weeks making exteriors for "Peg o' the Sea," a coming Art Drama, returned to the studio this week to put the finishing touches on the production, which is being directed by Eugene Nowland. The trip was highly successful, according to the actors, both for results obtained and for recreation, for the visit was something of a vacation for the players.

ALICE BRADY'S World picture, "Betsy Ross," is close at hand. The story, revolving around the making of the first stars and stripes, is laid in and near Philadelphia, where Betsy's original dwelling still stands. This structure is reproduced with complete fidelity in the Brady-Made picture play.

ETHEL CLAYTON'S next play for World Pictures is due to be published late in September. It is called "The Woman Beneath," and the heroine is a society butterfly till the pinch comes, when she turns out to be true blue. There is some unusually clever comedy in this piece to offset the powerful dramatic situations.

NEARING completion in one of America's largest automobile factories at Detroit, Mich., is a novel private motor car made to order for Marie Dressler, famed screen and stage comedienne. She is completing in the Goldwyn Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., her first two-reel comedy, "The Scrublady."

Immediately upon delivery Miss Dressler will put the car to use in behalf of her company. Cleverly concealed beneath the driver's seat and in easy reach of persons in the tonneau is a compact refrigerator, porcelain-lined, and built on the principle of a thermos bottle to maintain low temperature for an indefinite period without great space being needed for ice. In the refrigerator will be stored the good things to eat Miss Dressler purposes to cook and serve—or ice and serve—for the principals of her company on location.

IN "The Star Boarder," a Billy West comedy in process of making at the King-Bee Studios, Bayonne, Evelyn Gibson is called upon to push a snake into a speaking tube. She doesn't especially like such reptiles and went at it gingerly, and as a consequence the snake turned and gave her finger a savage bite.

The zoological gardens were telephoned and replied that the snake was not poisonous as its fangs had been removed. However, a doctor slit the finger and doused the wound with disinfectant, and the actress is nursing a huge bandaged hand.

Finally Mr. Bernstein, president of King-Bee, got the snake to do the speaking tube stunt. A few days before he succeeded in making a cow walk upstairs. So the company has voted him chief animal trainer.

Herbert Brenon in Silhouette

IN one of the scenes in "The Outcast" a canary is found dead in its gilded cage. This really happened at the Mirror Studios, where they were filming the play for the Empire All Star Corporation for Mutual release.

Ann Murdock, who as Miriam is starred in the picture, brought her own pet canary to be used in the set.

It may have been the lights. It may have been the heat, noise and general confusion of the studio that was too much for the fragile little songster. Anyhow it was with real grief that Miss Murdock saw her poor little favorite lying on the bottom of his cage dead.

Miss Murdock declares she will never again introduce any of her pets to the screen.

MONTAGU LOVE, star of World-Pictures Brady-Made, tendered his services to the government immediately upon the declaration of war with Germany, but was rejected by the medical examiners for a trifling but effectual cause.

During the making of the motion picture "The Brand of Satan" Mr. Love fell in the course of a mimic fight and fractured one of the small bones of his left wrist. The hurt was not sufficient to halt the progress of the picture, but the break healed in such a manner that the surgeons say Mr. Love will not be able to do any heavy manual work with his left hand for a year or longer.

"If I had gone through," said the photoplay star, "I never would have said a word about it. But when a big, husky chap like me is not in uniform at a time like this people are entitled to know why."

EVELYN GREELEY has a notably strong and attractive role in "The Good-for-Nothing," a forthcoming World-Picture Brady-Made, in which she is featured with Carlyle Blackwell. Miss Greeley is an exceptionally gifted young actress before whom a starring career of high promise looms large.

CITY authorities of Montclair, N. J., recently requested the Hearst-Pathe News to publish a picture of an unidentified aphasia patient in the Montclair Mountainside Hospital. It was done and as a result Jack Donnelley, a young New Yorker, was restored to home and friends.

On August 4 pictures of Mr. Donnelley were incorporated in the News of that date. Four days later the editors received a letter from a member of the firm of Moore and Fisher of New York City, saying that the writer had seen the pictures and had recognized the subject as an employee of their concern who had mysteriously disappeared. The name and home address of the young man were given and within a few hours he was restored to his family.

KITTY GORDON plays a stenographer in her newest World-Picture Brady-Made, which is titled "Her Hour." It is but natural that her employer should fall desperately in love with such a private secretary and that the ensuing complications should be exceedingly dramatic and thrilling. Miss Gordon is said to have developed acting qualities in this play far excelling her previously revealed accomplishments which were strongly marked in "The Beloved Adventuress" and "Forget-Me-Not."

JULIA DEAN has been added to the formidable list of World Pictures attractions, and is already at work in the Fort Lee Studio upon a play not yet named but said to be of a most timely nature.

Miss Dean has long been upon the speaking stage, where she originated leading roles for some of Mr. Belasco's plays, following which she acted the central feminine character in "Bought and Paid For" throughout the run of that drama at the Playhouse.

Most recently Miss Dean was featured with Henry Miller during his visit to the Pacific Coast.

JEAN SOTHERN, in producing "Peg o' the Sea," art drama, was called upon to get into an open boat and drift out to sea. She did this and then found that the performance was altogether too realistic. A mist came up and at nightfall she found herself still drifting out to sea.

The star is made of stern stuff and instead of filling the air with wailings she tried to get busy with the oars, but one rowlock was missing and progress uncertain. This occupation continued the better part of the night, until finally she was seen by the pilot of a passing motor boat and brought back to dry land, even as it is done in screenland.

When the star appeared at the Van Dyke Studio the next morning, fully recovered and ready again to obey her director's every command, she related the story of her experience to the other members of the company.

OLIVE TELL, starring in film features the Empire All-Star Corporation and now filming "The Unforeseen," under direction of Albert Capellani, spent a year in the Sargent Dramatic School after finishing her education abroad, and from there to the stage, where she played in leading parts from the first, having been engaged by Frohman.

Miss Tell has appeared in "Husband and Wife," "Cousin Lucy," "The King of Nowhere," "The Intruder," "Romance," and "Under Pressure" for the stage, while her film work has been limited to three pictures, "The Smugglers," with Donald Brian; "The Silent Master," with Robert Warwick, and her present feature.

GEORGE ARCHAINBAUD has returned from Asbury Park, where he has been directing Alice Brady, and will finish the production at the Peerless Studio in Fort Lee.

ARTHUR ASHLEY, star of the World Film Corporation, is an active director. Playing and starring in World Film features, he directs himself as well as other stars, devoting an average of twelve hours a day at the Peerless Studio.

He is also appearing in "The Man Who Came Back" at the Playhouse in New York, making his day's work from sixteen to seventeen hours. Mr. Ashley will be starred in the Chicago run of "The Man Who Came Back," leaving pictures temporarily for a short season on the stage.

A "STILL" photograph of Violet Mersereau, Bluebird star, did its best to save the life of Fred P. Richardson of Toronto, Can., who enlisted, went to the front in France and was wounded.

The photograph was perforated by several chunks of lead, five holes showing in the picture. The holes in Mr. Richardson have healed and he is, presumably, back on the firing line; but he sent proof of his loyalty to Miss Mersereau in the photograph and a letter to Bluebird. The publicity department has the proof.

MME. ALICE BLACHE, wife of Herbert Blache, president of the U. S. Amusement Corporation, which releases through Art Dramas, has been invited by faculty members of Columbia University to deliver two lectures before the photoplay students there. Mme. Blache is both a director and writer, and has been engaged in making pictures for over twenty years. There is only one other woman director in the field. The first lecture was given on July 13. The next will be on August 3.

PATHE is searching for Lillian Vanderveer. This name was taken by a young girl who acted in "The Last of the Carnabys" in which Gladys Hulette is starred.

Mr. Parke selected her to play the part of a mother whose baby was lost in a railroad wreck. Afterwards she gave up her position because she did not believe she was a success and drifted away.

After the release of the picture Mr. Parke met a friend who said, "Who was that girl? She gave one of the finest screen performances I ever saw."

Even Mr. Parke had forgotten her, but he took another look at the picture and the result was a determined search for Lillian Vanderveer, but to no avail. Where is she?

ONLY a short time ago Elsie Ferguson was herself making a first inspection of motion picture studios. This week she was herself visited while acting before the screen—and by Mme. Cavalieri, celebrated opera star, who is soon to make pictures for Paramount.

It was at Fort Lee that Mme. Cavalieri found Elsie Ferguson at work upon one of her forthcoming Artcraft productions. After investigating the remarkable laboratory equipment at the studio and watching Miss Ferguson enact a number of dramatic scenes, the diva departed for New York and went at once to the Famous Players Studio.

It is a long while since Mme. Cavalieri had visited a motion picture studio, and she smiled understandingly at the apparent confusion which her trained eye recognized as organized haste.

THE citizens of one of Connecticut's most exclusive towns are threatening to call out the Home Guard the next time J. Searle Dawley enters the community at the head of a company of Paramount players. Under the direction of Mr. Dawley, Marguerite Clark and the members of her company have already wrecked a fence, capsized a milk wagon and smashed a garage, and the inhabitants of this particular town are all for taking defensive measures against the motion picture people.

WILLARD MACK must be on his vacation. We haven't seen one of his scenarios transferred to the screen for more than two weeks. What is it, the weather, Willard?

Two Exhibitors Complain of Rental Boost

the only recourse is to raise the price and increased prices, many exhibitors' experience have shown, cause a loss in business.

Low Rentals and Poor Prints

The only other alternative is for the exhibitor to wait until the picture is old and the charge cheaper and then to show a much used print. We recently saw in Copperhill, Tenn., the exhibition of one of the widely advertised pictures. The community had a good advance idea of it from the publicity that it had been given and the wonderful effects described, but when the picture was shown the print was so worn that all the effect was lost. Every patron went away feeling that he had been robbed. And the patron does not put the blame on the producer or the exchange man, but directly on the exhibitor, and it was that gentleman's loss.

The one remedy seems to be a graduated system of rentals. A single producer or a group of productions cannot change the situation in a locality. It is certainly a fact that the producers must learn the needs of various sections. That many have not done. Population in itself is not a fair basis for film rentals, for one community may be able to pay considerably higher prices than in a neighboring factory town. The theatre manager is the best judge of what he can pay and the exchange men should recognize this. There is no reason to simply take the exhibitor's word, for all of us want to get everything as cheap as we can, but the distributing organizations must themselves gather this data and fix their charges accordingly. This is a question that is going to be worked out by some of the organizations—by ones that will not be content for its officers in New York to arbitrarily fix prices without knowing local conditions, but a system that honestly meets the situation as it is.

What Is Your Maximum?

Here is the part that the exhibitor should play. He should determine honestly what is the maximum he is able to get out of a series of pictures and offer to pay that amount. If the exchange will not sell him the film at that price he should simply let it alone. His competitor may get the picture, but if the original exhibitor is an equally good business man, or really a better one, the patronage of the competitor will in the end prove a loss.

In this connection it is interesting to read the following statement from Lewis J. Selznick, which appears in the current issue of the Selznick Pictures Magazine:

"I believe the changes and readjustments which must constantly take place in any business that is not infected with dry rot, will be influenced largely by the exhibitors, who are just beginning to learn that they can get just the kind of attractions they want at mutually fair prices. The days of 'The exhibitor be damned,' like those of 'The public be damned,' have passed forever. The producer who refuses to listen to the counsel of the intelligent exhibitor digs his own grave.

"Finally, the general effect of all these revolutions is bound to be a constant improvement in the quality of the pictures themselves. It has been proved to the exhibitor that he can make more money by paying more for pictures that are worth more, and he learns quickly which are worth more and which less. There is a big premium placed upon intelligence in production. This, I believe, will be the most notable characteristic of the coming year."

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

SEVERAL changes are announced from the Triangle Studio at Culver City this week. One is that two companies are to work on Western subjects instead of one, and that Roy Stewart, who was co-starred in the first made by Director Cliff Smith, is to be the star of one company and Bell Bennett, who also played in the first Western with Stewart, will be the star of the other, which is to be under the direction of Jack Conway.

Triangle Scenario Head

Jack Cunningham, who has been on the coast for the past year, a greater portion of the time affiliated with the Universal as comedy scenario writer and later made scenario editor, has been placed at the head of the Triangle scenario department. Mr. Cunningham is now busily engaged in reorganizing the department. He has had a number of years' experience in this important department of the industry, following a number of years on theatrical and motion picture publications as writer and editor. Prior to coming to the West Coast colony Mr. Cunningham was associated with Eastern producing companies as scenario writer, and his name has adorned a number of introductory frames of successful photoplays of dramatic as well as of comedy nature.

Bessie Love has completed her work in the next release, "Persnickety Polly Ann," and will probably be cast in a new subject, now being prepared by the scenario department, within the next few days. Miss Love has played under the direction of Charles Miller for the past several subjects, and now that he has left the Triangle for the Selznick producing organization it is not known who will next direct this star. In the subject just finished Miss Love takes the role of a waif who becomes slavey in a small town hotel and later becomes the ward of a wealthy man who adopts her to replace a wayward son whom she reforms.

Breaking Olive Thomas In

Director Lynn Reynolds, Olive Thomas and company are home from Bear Lake Valley, after spending ten days securing Western atmosphere scenes for the coming release, "Broadway Arizona," written by Reynolds. It is reported Miss Thomas has been initiated to many things wild and woolly, including a tumble into the icy cold snow waters of the lake, personal introduction to a full sized rattlesnake, and many other harrowing experiences. In the photoplay she appears as the queen of musical comedy who finds it necessary to come to a Western mining town for the benefit of her health.

Production on the first Bell Bennett Western subject has been delayed owing to illness of Louise Glaum. She was taken sick shortly after work had been commenced on a new photoplay in which she is starred under the direction of Walter Edwards, and it was immediately decided that Miss Bennett should take the role. Prominent in the cast for this subject are Jack Richardson, Jack Livingston, Lee Hill and William Ellingford. This will be Miss Bennett's debut as a screen vampire.

E. Mason Hopper is having a continuous comedy in the making of "The Tar-Heel Warrior," featuring Walt Whitman, in that many of the scenes require the presence of two elderly colored people whose sole duty is to "arguefy," and they do it with all kinds of pep, for it became known they are man and wife and have practiced for a number of years. The photoplay is a serious drama, with an atmosphere of the South shortly after the Civil War.

Hartman Engaged as Director

In the making of a scene for "Flying Colors," and early release with Bill Desmond, two extra men were injured when a scene was made in which Desmond, as an amateur detective, leaps from a second floor window onto the heads of men below. Frank Borzage, who is directing this production, has made a permanent requisition for an orchestra throughout the filming of the remaining scenes, on the plea that the story required difficult dramatic action, and his request has been granted by the production department.

"Judgment of the Guilty" is the photoplay just completed by Director Jack Conway. This is a decidedly Western, with Belle Bennett taking the role of a woman of the desert who time after time is made to drink from the cup of disappointment because of the unfaithfulness of man. Melbourne MacDowell plays the opposite lead, the judge.

Only a few things served to hold up production of the Roy Stewart Triangle Western company, being directed by Cliff Smith. Two men were shot at close range with wax bullets during the making of a night scene. The next morning United States cavalry officers called four members of the cowboy troop, on leave of absence from the army, back to service. The same afternoon Stewart and leading woman Carolyn Wagner came upon the skeleton of a man, with a bullet hole through the skull, while returning from location, and it took him three days serving the sheriff in an effort to clear up the mystery.

The Kentucky mountain-feudist picture starring Margery Wilson, with Charles Gunn as leading man, which was recently completed, has been given the final title of "Mountain Dew."

Farris Hartman, former speaking stage producer, who for the past several months has been directing comedies at the Keystone, has been engaged as director by the Triangle and will shortly begin the filming of a series of light comedy dramas of the five-reel length.

Kerrigan Badly Hurt

One Paralta producing unit is off duty and will continue so for several weeks, owing to an accident which befel J. Warren Kerrigan Friday at Santa Barbara, when his horse stepped in a gopher hole and fell. The tibia bone was snapped off about half way between the knee and ankle. Mr. Kerrigan is at the Cottage Hospital, Santa Barbara, where it will be necessary for him to remain a number of weeks. The company has been at Santa Barbara for several days filming scenes under the direction of Oscar Apfel for the October release. The accident happened when all but two scenes of an exterior nature had been shot.

At the present time the officials at the studio are considering making a change in the story so that Mr. Kerrigan can work in scenes before he is recovered sufficiently to walk. Even if this is not done, it is believed Mr. Kerrigan will be able to take part in other scenes necessary for the film so that it will be finished in time for the release as set at this time.

Reginald Barker, now directing the second Bessie Barriscale release for Paralta, will during the coming week film exteriors at the very elaborate mansion of Colonial style which was built especially for this photoplay on the vacant block adjoining the grounds of the Paralta Studio. This photoplay is adapted from the Harold MacGrath story, "Madame Who?" and Ed Coxen and Howard Hickman play the leads opposite Miss Barriscale.

"Oh, Gee" for Paralta

The first Hayden Talbot play to be adapted for the screen by Paralta is "Oh, Gee." Script is now being prepared by Eugene V. Lewis, one of the recent additions to the Paralta scenario department. No announcement has been made at the studio as to who will be the star of this production, and as yet it is not definitely known who will direct the making of this production.

Universal producing forces this week reenrolled former players in the persons of Billy Garwood and Murdock MacQuarrie. Mr. Garwood has been playing on the speaking stage for the past year and Mr. MacQuarrie has directed and played feature character parts in Signal-Mutual, Century and Bernstein productions. Both additions to the Universal staff have been cast to appear first in a production now being made under the direction of Allen Holubar. This is entitled "Twisted Souls" and has a thesis of heredity. It is a decidedly strong dramatic story written by J. Grubb Alexander. Duke Hayward has been engaged as cameraman for this company.

Nestor Players' Dinner

Rosemary Theby, who came to Universal City from the East two weeks ago, will play in the Nestor two-reel comedies with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, giving these productions three featured players instead of two. Lyons and Moran, under Director

Harry Edwards, have during this week filmed a two-reel comedy entitled "Dolls and Dollars." In this picture, from the scenario by Fred Palmer, Caroline Vaughn plays ingenue lead.

The Nestor company is shortly to celebrate at a big dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Lyons. This dinner will be to initiate the beautiful silver service given the couple by members of the Nestor comedy producing unit. The comedian with the invincible smile became a benedict on August 1, when he and Virginia Kirtley were wedded by Father Malise at the Church of the Angels in Hollywood. The wedding was kept a secret until Saturday evening, when announcement was made of the nuptial at a dinner of the Toreadors at which Eddie Maier was host. The Toreador dinner was given in the banquet room of the East Side Brewery, owned by Maier, and was attended by approximately one hundred of the film colony writers and their friends. Charlie Murray was master of ceremonies (as usual) and by way of being original let it be said that "a good time was had by all."

Universal Companies Doings

"O'Connor's Mag" is a five-reel society drama being produced under the direction of Eugene Moore at Universal City. The name part is taken by little Edith Roberts, who for the past year has played in the Universal Nestor comedies. The story was written by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., and in the cast are Percy Pembroke, Francis McDonald, Dick La Reno and others.

The Mae Murray-Robert Leonard company is spending several days in the vicinity of San Diego securing scenes for the first Mae Murray Bluebird, "Princess Virtue." Wheeler Oakman has been engaged to play opposite the star.

Jack Mulhall has been cast to play opposite Dorothy Phillips in the Bluebird now being made by Ida May Park. Lon Chaney will be given a featured part. The story, "Boss of Powderville," is by Thomas Addison and the working script was prepared by Miss Park.

Charles West, who has been in pictures for a number of years, first in the old Biograph and later in Fine Arts and Selig, has been engaged to play juveniles at Universal and is cast opposite Grace Cunard in a subject now being made under the direction of Louis Chaudet.

Stuart Payton is now working on the twelfth reel of the serial "Loot," and Priscilla Dean, whose arm was fractured in the seventh episode, returns to the camera in the twelfth.

"The Cricket," an original story by Elliott J. Clawson, was put in production this week. It will have little Zoe Rae as the featured player, supported by Rena Rogers, Hal Cooley, Harry Holden and others.

Cast New Star

Carmel Myers, recently engaged by General Manager Henry McRae, has been cast in her first Universal picture, "The Dynast," by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton, which is being made by Director Harry Solter. Kenneth Harlan has been engaged to play opposite Miss Myers. Others in the cast are Dorothy Wolbert and Charles Mailes.

Colonel Jasper Brady, manager of the manuscript department at Universal City, is receiving congratulations on his latest novel, "The Case of Mary Sherman," which is just off the press. This is Brady's third novel, besides a number of magazine stories written under the pen name John Riley, together with four plays, "Eyes of the Law," "X 36," "Section 580" and "It Is the Law." The latter is shortly to be produced by A. H. Woods in New York.

Allen Curtis, of the first Joker company, has just finished filming a one-reel comedy, "The Borrowed Baby," and the second Joker company "Max Comes from the West," many scenes of which show Max Asher, Dave Morris and Gladys Tennyson juggling about on the eaves of a ten-story building.

Robert Ross has returned to Universal, after a year's engagement at Fox and Keystone studios, and will probably be given a company to direct in the near future. Ross came to California with the first Universal company and he with Steve Round and Tony Nagy, both cameramen, are the only original employees of the company. In the original organization were Jeannie McPherson as ingenue, J. Farrel MacDonald, Lois Weber, Phillips Smalley and others.

Joseph W. Girard (Butterfly)

Second Ince Co. Starts

The second Thomas H. Ince producing unit began work this week on the making of Paramount subjects, with Dorothy Dalton as star of an original photoplay by John Ritchie which will be made under the direction of R. William Beil. William Conklin, who has been seen in a number of Fox, Lasky, American and other brands of photoplays following a successful career on the speaking stage, has been engaged by Mr. Ince to play opposite Miss Dalton. This play will serve to introduce a new writer for the screen. Mr. Ritchie has been identified with the amusement world all of his life and has a number of successful plays to his credit. For the past ten years he has served some of the greatest producers of this country as play reader, and for three years has been in the employ of Mr. Ince in this capacity.

Charles Ray will during the first few days of the coming week make the last scenes for his initial appearance on Paramount in "The Son of His Father," an adaptation from a well-known novel of the same name. Victor Schirtzinger has been in charge of filming this and prominent in the cast is Vola Vale, who has been seen in Lasky Paramount subjects as leading woman. In fact it was while she was playing at the Lasky studio that she was rechristened. Miss Vale will be remembered as Vola Smith, who for more than a year was leading woman for Biograph company subjects and left there to accept feature roles with the Universal.

Pickford Players in San Francisco

Julian Eltinge is to do another dual role subject for Paramount program and a company, including Director Donald Crisp, Daisy Robinson, Countess Marstini and others, including Fred Kley as business manager for the company, departed Friday for Portland, Oregon, where exteriors will be made. The company will be gone about ten days and arrangements have been made for Mr. Eltinge to appear personally at several theatres in the larger cities of the Northwest. It is probable that Mr. Eltinge may make one or two more subjects after the second one is completed, but his contract at present calls for but two during the year.

Theodore Roberts and Gustave Seyffertitz have been cast in leading roles in support of Miss Pickford in "The Little Princess," now being made by Marshall Neilan. The company spent the greater part of the week in San Francisco, where they encountered extreme difficulty in working owing to the crowds that gathered to get a view of the famous star.

Douglas Fairbanks and company are still in the wilds of Wyoming and from reports received it will require them at least a week more on the location to secure the scenes necessary for the next subject, as yet unnamed.

William S. Hart and troupe which has Sylvia Bremer as leading woman have completed the exterior scenes and are now at the Lasky studio where several big sets have been built. One is an interior of a café, saloon and gambling hall, and was built on a very elaborate scale. It is spoken of by the star as being the finest ever used in any of his Western subjects. Another big setting is that of a Western town in gala attire celebrating county fair week. This set has more than a score of buildings, all typical of a frontier town.

Christie's Band to Honolulu

Al E. Christie has this week made a one-reel comedy, as yet untitled, with Jay Belasco and Margaret Gibson as the leading players.

Mr. Christie is now preparing scripts for his proposed trip to Honolulu, and plans now are that the producing company will leave for the pacific island within the next two weeks or immediately upon the return of Charles Christie, business manager of the company, who is making a tour of exchanges in the East.

The Christie organization recently celebrated the anniversary of its first independent release one year ago. At this time it was found the producing organization was sixteen pictures ahead of the releasing date, and, in addition, Mr. Christie has a number of two-reel subjects made which may be released at an early date. The Christie has had a very successful year and is the only organization that has during this period released fifty-two subjects. Producer Christie believes the greatest compliment given this organization is the renewal of contracts which have been made during the past few weeks by practically all the exchanges who one year ago contracted to take his output in installments of one single-reel comedy each week. From every territory he has received highest praise for the one-reel subjects with reports of very excellent booking in all districts.

Selig Players Still Rest

While the technical staff of the Selig Studio is building several big street sets for the photoplay next to be made at this plant, an adaptation from the speaking stage melodrama "The Still Alarm," Director Colin Campbell has gone to the mountains in search of peace and quietude, speckled trout and inspiration, where he will prepare the working script. Tom Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Fritzie Brunette will be the stars of this coming production. All have enjoyed a six-week vacation while waiting for a new story, and now that the weather in California has warmed up—if such is possible at this season—they all seem glad that an extension has been made for their waiting.

Director Al Green will also take up the making of a new subject within the next few days at the Selig plant.

Five companies are now working at the L-Ko Studio and among the latest additions to the producing staff is Hughie Mack, who arrived on the West Coast last Sunday and will appear in comedies made under the direction of Noel Smith. The first subject will be started within the next few days. The other companies at work now are under the direction of Phil Dunham, Dick Smith, Archie Mayo and J. G. Blystone, director general, who is personally directing the making of Century comedies featuring Alice Howell.

Vitagraph Activities

When the Vitagraph five-reel subject "The Red Prince" is released a leading man of a new name but with a well-known face will be introduced. The cast on the screen will bear the name of Alfred Whitman, but the "Red Prince" himself will be none other than Alfred Vosburg, who for three or four years has played leading man and juvenile parts in Vitagraph subjects. Playing opposite Vosburg-Whitman is Mary Anderson. The subject has now been completed by Director William Walbert.

A number of the O. Henry stories purchased by the Vitagraph are to be adapted for the screen and filmed at the Hollywood studio. The first of these has now been completed by Director Dave Smith and is titled "John, Tom, Little Bear." The second, now in the making, will be titled "The Toreador." Both of these subjects consist of two reels, but it is the intention, in filming additional subjects, to make them the length the story requires, and it is probable several will run over the two-thousand-foot length.

Actor-Director William Duncan, with Carol Halloway as leading woman, is continuing on the filming of the first of a series of five-reel protoplays adapted from the "Wolfville" stories by Alfred Henry Lewis.

Signal Production Thorough

Subsequent releases of the Mutual-Signal serial, "The Lost Express," require scenes that may best be secured at Yosemite Valley, and Director J. P. McGowan, Helen Holmes and the company will leave for the National Park upon the completion of the sixth episode, titled "High Voltage," which will be finished within the next few days. The final scenes of this chapter required special lighting effects, possible only by use of an expensive electric machine, and as it could not be secured in Los Angeles a telegraphic order was sent to a factory at San Francisco and the desired prop was secured. It is stated at the studio the making of this machine boosts the cost of this episode to the most expensive two reels that ever were made at this producing studio.

FOUND AT LAST

By Charles Fuir

In my travels over the world, visiting possibly every civilized clime, I have sought unceasingly to discover an actor who was honest concerning his past. Happy am I now to say that my search is ended for the Rialto of Los Angeles has brought to me the man I have searched for.

He is handsome, has curly hair, beautiful eyelashes, and knows how to use a powder puff. First he was an extree, then he climbed into the stock. Leading man parts later took his time and then—he climbed to stardom in the "Daughter of the Don."

It was by the merest accident that I discovered him at the old Heidelberg table of our popular cafe. He frankly told of his past and the hardships that he had encountered "to work" his way to the tip-most, top-most rung of the ladder of fame. Seeing I doubted his word concerning one or two of his statements, he agreed to make an affidavit confirming what he had previously said, and here it is:

"I do hereby swear that I have slung hash for six dollars a week. I worked as chief bedmaker in a rooming house. I now admit that I am a famous star and first nighter with at least 17,500 admirers, counting today's mail.

(Signed) HAL COOLEY."

Sworn to before me this thirtieth day of July, Chas. Fuir. Notary public.

HOOKUM

Hot!

There is a lot of war talk this week, but news are scarce.

There are three blank spots on the Dave Horsley Studio fence so all who pass know that Dave anticipates engaging additional stars.

"Smiling" Billy Mason has had a serious shock. He has decided to go into drama and so has kissed his last comedy script good-bye.

Bill Duncan shocked everyone the other day by driving up to the Vitagraph Studio with a brand new nineteen hundred and eighteen model automobile.

A secluded cottage far up in Laurel Canyon bears this sign: "Elizabeth McGaffey — Mabel Condon — always at home — we have a can opener."

Eddie Sutherland, Triangle comedy player, is caressing an eighteen-dollar auto repair bill because he stepped on the throttle instead of the brake.

Every day there is a reunion at U. City. All the old guards are coming back. Billy Garwood, 'dock MacQuarrie and several other faces appeared on the lot this week.

Rumors of the organization of a half dozen new million-dollar producing companies have been flirting with our news editor. Up to this time he has remained immune.

But one has been found who is sorry he was not drafted. This is Robert Millikin, Triangle-Keystone comedian, who declares all he wants is one night in Paris and then they can shoot him.

Reggie Morris required a real tall woman for a part in the current Keystone-Triangle and when none of the beauties could walk on stilts he cast Blanche Payson—she stands six feet six—in the role.

Wm. D. Taylor was reported by a press agent to be in Missouri filming scenes, but as the station masters have no report of the sale of tickets this news item is placed in the rumor class.

Mary Pickford spent a vacation at the Beach and is reported to have read fairy tales all the time there. A guess is made that the publicity department must have sent her down a quantity of clippings.

As no publicity matter concerning Doug. Fairbanks or post cards from Bennie Ziedman have been received in the past ten days, friends of the miniature personal representative fear he has lost his way in the wilds of Wyoming.

Ray Griffith, who has a paralyzed voice and cannot speak louder than a whisper, states his only regret in being drafted is he is assured of being a private, for he cannot give orders loud enough to drown the cannon.

William Hart spent twenty minutes the other day figuring out just what Fritz, the Pinto pony, cost him, and now it is stated in affidavit that the sum was approximately $28,000. To Hart this is worth that much, but the other day a horse buyer gave the pony the double O and shook his head at $90.

Ray Bagley, Triangle-Keystone Studio publicity expert, comes forth this week with a new kind of insurance policy. It provides an indemnity of $10,000 for Binns if he loses the peculiar use of his Adam's apple, and $5,000 if he is robbed of the use of either eyebrow. Adam's apple is use by Binns to make his black bow necktie dance.

Slim Sommerville, the Mack Sennett elongated comedian, has no control over his feet, it is apparent, from the fact that he attempted to kick Ben Turkin in the chest and knocked out five of Ben's front teeth of the upper jaw. Since Ben is using them in a picture it will be necessary for him to appear in all the balance with his hands over his mouth in order to convince the people that he is the same one who took part in the early scenes.

Dusty Farnum has christened his new fifty-one-foot speed cruiser "Ding." It is said to have a speed of twenty-four miles per hour and Dusty has been churning the Pacific to a deep ——— in an attempt to get maximum speed. The first day out he made Catalina Island from San Pedro harbor in one hour and sixteen minutes, a distance of twenty-three miles. It took the weather department several days to discover the cause of the phenomenal high tide.

Peters Milne and Schmid are the cause of Eric Campbell, the Chaplin giant, being a married man. Carlyle Robinson, Lone Star publicity writer, and former Brooklyn boy, framed a party for the visitors, which consisted of five couples, among them Eric and Miss Cleta Gilman, who met at the dinner for the first time. Five days later Campbell and Miss Gilman were married. The bride is a sister of Mabel Gilman, who became the bride of William E. Corey, the steel magnate, at sea. A lot of maids out here are preparing a petition that will ask Pete and Repete to come again soon.

Another cause for the w. k. h. c. of picture making was discovered this week by Hookum's efficiency squad when the news flitted into our sanctum that it required a corps of thirty—cameramen, assistant directors, props, grips, electricians and a retinue of servants—to secure the half-dozen scenes needed for the De Mille Artcraft subject, in which but two players take part, Geraldine Farrar and Wallie Reid. It was also necessary that the author of the script be present at the making of the scenes which were taken in the Yosemite Valley, a sleeper jump and a day's auto ride from our fair bepalmed and befilmed Hollywood. Two calculating machines were destroyed by the efficiency squad before they could agree on the verdict that forty people should have been taken, as this is vacation time.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"Babbling Tongues"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

UNDER this powerful title Ivan Abramson again presents a dramatic composition, based on a theme the many possibilities of which have been utilized by the authors, William Humphrey and George E. Hall, to their fullest extent. In character of plot and in structure it smacks very strongly of plays referred to as French. Its series of powerful situations, with members of the eternal triangle as their chief exponents, form a picture in which the interest is accumulative to say the least and which culminate in a climax of extraordinary force. One marvels at the ingenuity of the authors and of Mr. Humphrey in his second capacity of director, in maintaining a degree of high tension throughout the greater part of the film.

"Babbling Tongues" was enthusiastically received when shown at the New York theatre. The audience sat absorbed by it and gave it a generous portion of applause at its conclusion. In our opinion it is over-long for absolute thorough enjoyment. There is such a thing as receiving an over-dose of intense situations and one is inclined to become a little restless as certain complications become recurrent. Likewise there are a few subtitles that might be deleted from the film to better effect. The acting of the entire cast is so significant that some of the spoken words inserted by the editor are futile and break a big scene when it might have been carried on to an even stronger finish uninterrupted.

The cast is a remarkable one. Mr. Abramson never neglects this department. James Morrison, Arthur Donaldson and Grace Valentine are well fitted to carry the extremely difficult burdens imposed by the triangle. Gladden James and Richard Tucker head a supporting cast every individual of which has been carefully selected.

The moral of "Babbling Tongues" is unusually forceful and the manner in which scandalous gossip brings about the ruin of a once happy family is told by action that is ever-progressive no matter what the gait. As a box office attraction it ranks above the average. A dyed-in-the-wool fan may complain a little as to its length, but otherwise he will have small fault to find with it.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Moreau (Arthur Donaldson) and Therese (Grace Valentine), his young wife, take Paul (James Morrison), a young author, into their home. He becomes very dear to them both, but gradually gossip begins to connect the names of Therese and Paul. Louis Moreau (Paul Capellani) carries this information to his brother. His son (Gladden James) imparts it to Paul and his wife and daughter (Louise Baudet and Carolyn Birch) inform Therese. For the good of all concerned Paul moves into separate quarters. One day he overhears gossip again at its work. He challenges the purveyor of the lie and a duel is arranged for above Paul's apartment. Moreau, for his own satisfaction, takes Paul's place and in combat is mortally wounded. Therese, having come to Paul to beg him to refuse to fight, is discovered there later by her wounded husband and his friends. He then denounces her. Paul, enraged, seeks out Moreau's assailant and kills him, but neither this nor the continued assertions of Therese and Paul that they are innocent change Moreau's mind. He dies cursing them and driven to each other by their common misery Paul and Therese depart together.

"Miss Nobody"

(Astra-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FARE of a character somewhat more solid than "Miss Nobody" may justly be desired in which to offset Gladys Hulette's pleasing talents. The author of this, her latest vehicle remains obscure in the background, but no doubt full prominence would have been awarded him had he furnished a stronger plot and less of character delineation. The story looms unusually obvious immediately after the old guardians of Miss Nobody conceive the well meaning lie that she is Lady Partington, while the shadow of suspicion cast upon her in an effort to work up suspense falls short of its purpose. The concluding scenes force an "all-around-happy-ending" without regard of realism.

But in the opposite scales to the picture's technical defects there is Miss Hulette and her ever-winning personality. Beyond a doubt her especial admirers will discover much that will appear highly interesting to them in the various plights through which the author has put her by the medium of the title part. There are some stars that can safely be depended upon to carry a mediocre vehicle through to a successful finish and to our notion Miss Hulette is one of them, providing the audience is constituted largely of those who have previously enjoyed her past successes. Miss Hulette blooms as refreshing and as winsome as ever and supplements her charms with a thoroughly satisfying performance.

William Parke, Jr., seems slightly ultra-juvenile to assume the dignities of an English army officer, so experienced that he is commissioned to purchase aeroplanes from the United States. Cesare Gravina and A. G. Andrews contribute excellent character work as the old guardians. William Parke has given the picture a tasteful and intelligent production.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Roma (Gladys Hulette), at boarding school, is ridiculed by most of the girls because she knows nothing of her parentage. Her guardians, Crespi (Cesare Gravina) and Malone (A. G. Andrews), pawn brokers, to make her happy concoct the lie that she is Lady Partington, last of an old English family. Roma is overjoyed. While sojourning at a friend's house she meets Jack Thurston (William Parke, Jr.), of the British army, who falls in love with her. His guardian (J. H. Gilmour) knows that Partington never had a daughter and so he places a detective on her trail. It is thought at first that she is a crook, but events prove her innocence and finally it is discovered that she is the daughter of Thurston's guardian.

"Wooden Shoes"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A MOST pleasing little comedy-drama is offered in "Wooden Shoes," in which Bessie Barriscale makes what will probably be her last appearance on the Triangle program. It is a simple story of a Dutch girl who finally comes into her own at her grandfather's home in America, after putting an impostor and her supporters out of the way and after having adventures innumerable en route.

The first reels of the picture when the action calls for a Dutch locale are most lavishly and prettily staged. An entire Dutch village was erected and its various different streets peopled with a good number of extras supply a colorful atmosphere. The whole picture is presented in a typical Ince fashion. There is never a jarring unrealistic note to mar it, while the story, though plain and quite obvious long before its conclusion, remains interesting because of its comedy and because of Miss Barriscale.

There is a large supporting cast made up of old Ince stock players, every one of whom does credit to the production. J. G. Hawks is author and Raymond West director.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Pampy (Bessie Barriscale), left alone on the death of her father (Howard Hickman), becomes the slavey of The Mevrouw (Gertrude Claire), owner of the village inn, until a kindly priest (J. Frank Burke) furnishes her the money to go to America to seek her grandfather (Thomas Guise).

Accompanied by her sole friend Hans Dunkelberger (Don Likes), she departs. Arrived in New York, she finds it hard to locate her grandfather, who bears the popular name of Smith. Finally, however, through a picture of her done by an American artist whom she met in Holland, she is taken home, just in time to put an end to the scheming of the Mevrouw and her daughter (Margaret Thompson), who is posing as Pampy.

Jack Livingston, Joseph J. Dowling, Will H. Bray and J. H. Gotch complete the cast.

"The Law of the Land"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IT has been quite a time since George Broadhurst's play "The Law of the Land" decorated the legitimate stage, but its period of idleness succeeded by its transfer to the screen has taken from it none of its original power. It is by far the greatest of recent Lasky or Paramount pictures and lays claim to this place of prominence because of its excellent handling. Seemingly Mr. Broadhurst's dramatic skill was at once recognized by the adaptor and as a consequence he made a straightforward, progressive scenario, burdened with few of the tricks of the trade, and as a result somewhat the better for their absence.

It is a rare thing to watch an intensely dramatic scene continued through for almost an entire reel with no cut-backs and only a few spoken titles to break the pictured action. The crux of "The Law of the Land," in which Margaret, goaded by the cruelty of her husband, shoots him in defense of her son, is so handled; while the action of the climax, when Margaret and Morton are cross-examined by the inspector, contains few shifts of scene. Unless we are mistaken, all this is the work of Maurice Tourneur, a director with a true artistic sense. He has handled the production capably from every angle.

There is some fine comedy relief provided by the characters of the butler and the inspector. William Riley Hatch, in this latter part, gives a sterling performance, and T. Vivian in his rendition of the other small but important role will long be rembered for his ready appreciation of the humorous possibilities

Mme. Petrova, in the feature role, does some impressive emotional work; Wyndham Standing is a most despicable heavy, and Mahlon Hamilton and J. D. Haragan, completing the cast, leave small room for adverse criticism. Photography and settings are unusually good.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Margaret (Mme. Petrova) is forced to marry Harding (Wyndham Standing) because of her mother's indebtedness to him. After five years, his cruelty to her and her son becomes unbearable, and one evening after he has insulted her in the presence of the man she wanted to marry, Morton (Mahlon Hamilton), and abused the boy, she shoots and kills him. With Harding's secretary (J. D. Haragan), it is made to appear as if the dead man committed suicide. In the morning Inspector Cochrane (Riley Hatch) gets on the case, and after a grilling examination learns the truth. The inspector, however, has children of his own and grasping the truth of the whole situation reports the affair as an accident.

"Transgression"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IT seems to be much more interesting to watch a man get caught in a tangle than to watch a scenario writer untangle him. "Transgression" is consequently part entertaining fare and part rather dull seeing. During that portion of the picture depicting the mayor's unwitting entrance into the web of an adventuress one has good cause to follow the action every foot of the way, but his subsequent release from the damaging meshes is done with little skill and as a consequence the attention is not retained as it should be.

"Transgression" is besides, too studied, too slow of movement to work the observer into any high mental pitch. Even in its entertaining parts, the tempo remains on a low level. Earle Williams as the mayor, it must be confessed, assists largely in the responsibility of creating this atmosphere. The supporting cast on the whole does work that appears colorless and leaves small lasting impression. Mother Mary Maurice, Corinne Griffith, Webster Campbell and Billie Billings are the principal satellites of the star. Edward Davis, as the district attorney, is practically the only member of the cast who has succeeded in putting real life into his part.

Authorship is credited to J. Stuart Blackton and Cyrus Townsend Brady, while Paul Scardon was in charge of production.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Hal Page (Webster Campbell), brother of Stephen (Earle Williams), the mayor, becomes infatuated of Carline Shrefton (Billie Billings), an adventuress. Her lover (Denton Vane) mad with jealousy threatens his life. He struggles with the woman with the result that his pistol explodes and kills him. Hal takes the blame and leaves the country. A year later, Stephen has become engaged to Marion Hayward (Corinne Griffith), daughter of the district attorney (Edward Davis). The latter plans to prosecute Jim Reede (Jack Ellis), corrupt politician, now the husband of Caroline. She threatens the mayor with his brother's conviction unless he puts a stop to proceedings. Considering his duty first he allows the attorney to proceed. The reappearance of Hal, his telling of the manner in which the death occurred, and the breaking down of Carline's defense ends the picture.

"The Barker"

(Selig-K-E-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

APPARENTLY many cuts already have been made in the five reels of Lew Field's play; in truth, it is about as full of jumps as a hurdle-race. But in spite of this there remains an opportunity to cut some more.

Most plays stop when it comes to the point where they lived happy ever after, but this one goes on with several remaining flashes to prove it to the satisfaction of everybody, even to the point of showing the excellent meals they get as married folks. The drama will be still better for more elisions than the one suggested here.

Charles K. Harris, author of "The Barker," wrote "After the Ball is Over" or some other song that gained great popularity when most of us were in early life. The song is brimful of pathos and so too is this play. In places it is reminiscent of "The Music Master."

There are circus scenes which remind one that circus scenes are a part of a great number of current releases. One wonders if this is merely coincidence or is it meant to take the edge off the announced and often reiterated Goldwyn pictures, one of which is a circus play.

The first scenes show an anarchistic society meeting in mask and talking of "removing" the Crown Prince. This carries one back to the assassination at Sarajevo that started the war. In fact everything about the play "carries one back."

It is in a way an excellent melodrama and has the additional merit of being just the kind of a play that no reasonable person would expect to see Lew Fields act. The character is fitted to his years and talents and his work in it is greatly to his credit. Mabel Bardine is clever in support.

THE PLOT AND PLAYERS

Professor Leo Fielding (Lew Fields), though innocent, is involved in an anarchistic plot and forced to flee to America. He is told his young daughter, Dulcine (Mabel Bardine) has been drowned at sea. Really the Count de Grasse (James Harris), who brought the girl to America, in his extremity became a circus performer, and to add to his income pressed her into service as circus star. In the poverty of age the professor becomes "barker" for a sideshow in the same circus, and in the denouement discovers the circus girl who has been his dearest friend is also his daughter. This is brought about by the fiendish endeavor of the villian—the circus manager—to kill the heroine by soaking the ropes of the net with acid. The Count de Grasse, not the girl, falls through the ropes, and when near death confesses. Wilfred Wells (Pat O'Malley) the owner of the circus, saves the life of Dulcine and, of course, marries her. Others in cast are Amy Dennis, as Floria Fielding and A. Francis Lenz, as Henri Fielding.

"All About Bees"

W. L. Brind Educational Films, Series No. 1

(Brind-Brockliss—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

AS the initial release of a new series of educationals this nine hundred foot film promises well for the future. More close ups of the bees, showing them actually at work, would relieve the curiosity every one who sees the pictures will feel. Children are not alone in wanting to know all about bees, for excepting the ants they are the most interesting insects.

The title is broad for what was shown on the reels. Those who have read Maurice Maeterlinck's wonderful book on "The Bee" will want to see a great deal more than these pictures show. There is nothing of the great mysteries of the hive—the murder of the drones, the care of the queen, the tragedy of bee courtship and half a dozen other activities of the bees.

But, after all, the photography is good and the idea of showing general views of the hives and close-ups of the bee keeper and the bee owners instead of the bees may possibly make the pictures more vivid if less instructive.

"The Little Chevalier"

(Conquest Program, Edison-Kleine—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

THIS is an appealing picture in many aspects and easily one of the best features so far produced for the Conquest program. The photography is good and the lighting effects in many scenes really noteworthy. The sword play is fast and in one scene where two persons use one foil is unusually skilful. The continuity of the play and the development of the plot are pleasing.

Costumes of the period and stage settings for French plays of the early 18th century are no doubt easy to obtain. But this need not detract from the credit due to the director. Only one anachronism, even in the exteriors, was really obtrusive—this a barbed wire fence in a castle scene of the time of the famous King Louis.

In the old French customs that are shown the most interesting perhaps was the game of the "bean in the cake." The cake brought on was a wonderful creation in itself, and so faithful was the photography that it made one hungry to see it divided. This is realism indeed.

Shirley Mason has splendid opportunity in a dual role, as "The Little Chevalier," and Diana de la Roche. The petite actress can well be proud of her work in this picture. It merits good booking and will please audiences in any part of the country. In these days of crudity and prevailing rudeness the delightful chivalry of the old French comes like a blessed relief.

Ray McKee as Henri Valdeterre and Richard Tucker as Delaup entered into the spirit of the parts and helped to make the picture a faithful reproduction of a period easily the most romantic in history. The play is by M. E. M. Davis.

The play leads Conquest Program No. 5, and the one reel release shown with it are interesting educationals. The pictures of U. S. marines are as good as have been made. Glimpses of bird life in distant Antarctic islands are triumphs of photography, and even "The Dinosaur and the Baboon," in animated manikins, has merit.

THE PLOT AND PLAYERS

A duel in France in 1734, in which Chevalier de la Roche kills Vicomte de Valdeterre, begins the romance. Years after in New Orleans the young Vicomte de Valdeterre (Ray McKee) finds that the little Chevalier de la Roche (Shirley Mason) would defend the honor of the family and measure swords with him. Valdeterre then falls in love with the sister of "The Little Chevalier," Diana de la Roche. The finale discloses that Diana and the de la Roche boy are the same, the girl having donned a boy's clothes for the duel. The machinations of Dunlaup (Richard Tucker) are defeated, and the young folks are happily married.

"Mr. Opp"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

REAL people, real life, is "Mr. Opp," with the "o" popping as in optimistic. It is one of the most human, wholesomely sentimental pictures ever screened, so full of reality and apart from artificiality that it works that transformation on the spectator which few pictures are able to do; it makes him forget the walls of the theatre, the screen, the chairs, the ushers. While "Mr. Opp" is running, you are more of an invisible spectator in the story, instead of one of the audience out in front.

It is a rare combination of talent that has resulted in "Mr. Opp," the picture. The novel of the same name was written by Alice Heagan Rice, an author who knows the common people and who speaks in their language, and it was Lynn Reynolds who made the adaptation and produced it. Mr. Reynolds' work of the past gave eloquent evidence of the fact that he was fitted in temperament and capability to grasp the spirit of the original novel and that he accomplished his task faultlessly is not at all surprising to one who has followed his career behind the camera. The homely atmosphere of the book has been safely transplanted to the film under his guidance. It is his greatest effort.

The title character introduced after this fashion, "Some men spend their lives in the valley, and some are born and die on the heights. It was Mr. Opp's fate to climb from the valley to his own little mountain top of prosperity, only to have to climb down on the other side," as played by Arthur Hoyt, is one that will smash the reserve around the hardest heart. Optimistic, ambitious, over-plain, unselfish, and somewhat too honest to get along; all these qualities Mr. Hoyt brings out with amazing clarity. Mr. Hoyt is a homely man, but attractively so, and we doubt whether Mrs. Rice herself could have demanded a better interpreter of her Mr. Opp. The supporting cast is competent to the last player; the sincerity they evidence is an invaluable asset.

The production, calling for a small town atmosphere, is excellent and the technical work we never noticed, which is about the highest praise that might be awarded it.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Daniel Webster Opp (Arthur Hoyt), a jack-of-all-trades, is called upon to take charge of his feeble-minded half sister, Kippy (Elise Maison), on his step-father's death. In the small town, his disposition soon makes itself felt through the medium of the Opp Eagle. He promotes a mining scheme, collects subscriptions and sells on a royalty basis to Matthews (Jack Curtis), a promoter. The latter discovers the mine practically worthless, but offers the townfolk more money if they sell out to his rival. Against Mr. Opp's advice, they comply. He receives another blow when he realizes he must forget Guinevere Gusty (Neva Gerber), as Kippy stands in the way. She marries Hinton (George Chesebro), and it is he who realizes all that Mr. Opp has done for the town and at his suggestion the townfolk nominate him mayor. And so at last he is rewarded.

"Through Fire and Water"

Episode "Further Adventures of Stingaree"

(Kalem-General Film—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

THE refreshing breath of outdoors comes in with the first flash of this picture and remains until the last scene of the episode. E. W. Hornung, author of Raffles, again proves his mastery of the art of plot-building. This one is as ingenious and original as the others.

Stingaree, the bushranger, big-hearted as ever, gives first aid to a tramp, who, while asleep, has scorched his coat and back in a fire started by a neglected cigarette. The outlaw takes off his own white coat and gives it to the stranger. Later the tramp discovers the good Samaritan was Stingaree and that five hundred pounds is offered for his capture. So off goes the tramp to inform the police and gain the reward.

This treachery is punished effectively by the resourceful Stingaree, who so arranges it that Billy Shuster, the tramp, and Sergeant D'aeth, the officer of the police, each mistake the other for the bushranger and begin a long distance duel, in which the tramp is the victim. This is all brought about logically enough.

Neat turns in the plot give Stingaree a chance to "trim" the sergeant literally—cut off his whiskers with scissors while he sleeps—and also to turn over five hundred pounds reward for his own capture to the wife the tramp had abandoned. Like the other Stingarees this is a red-blooded action play throughout.

THE PLOT AND PLAYERS

Billy Shuster, the tramp (Ray Hanford), has a scar on his cheek that betrays him to Stingaree (True Boardman) as the runaway husband of Kate Proctor (Edythe Sterling). It is this identificatinon of the ingrate tramp that later prevents Sergeant D'aeth (Hal Clements) from capturing Stingaree and his nondescript pal, Howie (Paul C. Hurst).

"The Guardian"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AFTER a very promising beginning "The Guardian" slips badly when the real matter of the story is approached and remains on the chutes of mediocrity until the finish. Coincidence, a property which is always more convenient than convincing, was brought into the development of the plot time and again. Without it a happy ending could not have been attained but it was used very clumsily in one instance in particular and amateurishly every time the author fell back upon it. W. B. M. Ferguson who bears the same name as the noted character actor, wrote the story. The name might imply a thorough learning of dramatic technique but evidently there are two Fergusons.

The leading male part has a very dark and disturbing past and consequently when his ward gets tangled up with a fortune hunter, the latter threatens the reformed man with exposure. There is a considerable number of heroic and villainous speeches, quite mindful of melodramatic numbers often referred to as "old stuff." The continuity writer used rather rough tactics in putting the story together in its final stages and the action in this part of the picture is far from continuous in the accepted sense of the word.

June Elvidge as Marie, the reformed criminal's ward, gives an excellent performance which deserves superior exploitation to that provided by "The Guardian." First as the impetuous school girl and later as the repentant woman she acts with a skill of expression that puts every bit of business across. Montagu Love as Rokeby renders a telling performance while Arthur Ashley and Robert Broderick head the supporting cast with a brace of good performances. Mr. Ashley also directed and barring one or two unnatural scenes has turned out a picture bearing a thorough production. The lighting is somewhat too brilliant in a majority of the scenes.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marie (June Elvidge), ward of Rokeby (Montagu Love) falls in love with Harvey (Arthur Ashley), adventurer and blackmailer and refuses Rokeby's advice to dismiss him from her life. Rokeby, respected bank president, has a past as a cracksman, which Harvey digs up through the services of Donavan (William Black), saloon proprietor and ex-detective. When this is exposed Rokeby flees in disgrace, while Marie, her eyes opened to Harvey's villainy, searches for him. She is led into a trap by Harvey and Donavan but is rescued by Rokeby. When he learns that his past misdeeds have been excused by the governor he returns to his post with Marie as his wife.

"Lonesome Luke's Wild Women"

(Rolin-Pathe—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HAROLD LLOYD and "Snubs" Pollard are stranded sailors in this Rolin comedy. They arrive on a desert isle, which is not so deserted after all and proceed to throw the Shah's harem into all sorts of confusion before departing.

The picture is notable for a number of settings, unusually lavish for a two reel comedy, which would do full justice to a five part feature. The action, business, et al., is of the average rough and tumble sort and doubtless will draw enough real laughs to put the whole over with the required wallop. However, it seems that if the producers of the Luke pictures would slow the action up a bit better results might follow. After all there is such a thing as being too fast and in "Lonesome Luke's Wild Women" there are bits of business that are missed because of the too rapid work of the players.

"Hashimura Togo"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"HASHIMURA TOGO" is a name familiar to millions of people throughout the United States due to its most comical exploitation at the pen of Wallace Irwin. His "Letters of a Japanese School Boy" came near containing a laugh in every line due to the ridiculous combination of words, prefixes and suffixes conceived by the author. The Lasky Company has secured control of the magic name and the inimitable monologue for screen purposes, and Marion Fairfax wrote a scenario telling a dramatic story of the adventures of the Jap in America. And "Hashimura Togo" makes an unusual and entertaining picture.

But it is only in the substitutes and the main title that the picture discloses a relationship to the popular magazine and newspaper stories. Togo performs none of the extravagant pieces of foolishness on the celluloid that he did on paper. Of course to make a connected picture of them was impossible, but at least we expected to glimpse one or two of the comical blunders conceived by Mr. Irwin which drove the various employers of the striving Jap to exasperation.

On the other hand when the work of Miss Fairfax is considered, the picture takes on an entirely different light. Indeed, considered solely on its own merits "Hashimura Togo" leaves small room for criticism. It will thoroughly entertain those who are able to overlook the fact that it deviates from its many forerunners containing the same central character. The sub-titles, incidentially, will be good for many a long and hearty laugh.

Sessue Hayakawa, extracts quite a bit of quiet humor from the title part. He is the logical interpreter of the role and as none other in the picture approaches it either in importance or comedy value, he is continually the main object of attention and it is deserved. Florence Vidor and Tom Forman as the lovers and Walter Long and Raymond Hatton in parts of prominence render finished performances.

William C. De Mille directed in a fashion typical of Lasky pictures. The lighting is excellent and the Japanese settings introduced in the opening and latter scenes are ideally realistic.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bearing the burden of an accusation of a breach of diplomacy committed by his brother, Hashimura Togo (Sessue Hayakawa) makes his way to the United States and enters the employ of Mrs. Reynolds (Mabel Van Buren) as butler. Corrine Reynolds (Florence Vidor), in love with Dr. Garland (Tom Forman) is forced to become engaged to Anthony (Walter Long), who has succeeded in appropriating the Reynolds fortune. It is through the services of Togo who enlists the aid of a reporter (Raymond Hatton) that the villiany of Anthony is exposed. In the meantime his native sweetheart, O Noto San (Margaret Loomis) has cleared his name and he returns to Japan to claim her.

"Retreat of the Germans at Battle of Arras"

(British Commission—Ten Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

THE British War Pictures showing the retreat of the Germans in the Battle of Arras, give a most intimate view of what the soldiers of England are accomplishing in this great war. The camera sweeps the battle ground, probably one of the most bloody, devastated fields of the war-swept country and you are shown the Allies in action, life in the trenches, and the big guns, belching forth their fire of destruction. You are taken into field hospitals where the wounded are seen under the care of the Red Cross. The work of the aviation corps is laid before your eyes and you are made to realize what a tremendous work the airmen are doing in this struggle.

In the ten reels which were shown for review, every phase of the action which occurred during the retreat of the Germans from this field of battle is shown. And every scene shows to the world what the English soldier is doing in the Allied cause. The photography is especially clear and distinct. Even the long "shots" of which they are many, give a distinct view of the battefield, strewn with the dead and wounded. There are flashes of the German dead as the bodies fell. Shells are seen exploding and tearing gaping holes in the earth. The English artillery are seen sending a terrific fire into the network of entanglements lain by the enemy. The Germans in their retreat from this battle field destroyed everything in their wake.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Astra-Pathe—Ninth Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

OPENING with a big explosion scene and following this closely with a hand to hand fight between Pearl White and a member of Carslake's band, this episode entitled "The Dice of Death" amply upholds the reputation for fast action established by the preceding numbers of the serial. At the end of the second reel, the fate of Pearl is left hanging in the balance for a week. She is supposedly lying on a sofa rapped in a rug and the last scene shows a gangster running a knife through the covering.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Pearl (Pearl White) makes another futile attempt to gain possession of the diamond, but after the fray Carslake (Warner Oland) still retains it. Pearl is captured by Carslake's men who have orders to kill her unless he returns at three o'clock. Carslake falls into the hands of the Priestess and threatened by death promises to give her the diamond. Tom (Harry Gsell) follows him. He double crosses the Priestess and arrives home just as his men have attempted to do away with Pearl's life.

"The Bridge of Fancy"

(Essanay-K-E-S-E—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is one of the pictures in the "Do Children Count?" series and inasmuch as the greater part of it is enacted solely by juvenile folk it takes on special interest. Little Mary McAlister does some exceedingly clever work in the stellar part. Her ability at mimicry is quite marvelous. The other child players are much more immature, but still the seriousness with which they go about their work is highly amusing. Grownups as well as the kids will be tickled by their work.

The plot concerns young Esther's penchant for trying on her mother's finery. One night she dreams of herself as a fine lady wooed by Captain Jingle (Jack Paul) and Count Espanol (Ellis Paul). The captain eventually proves the Count an imposter. The dream is very real, if the adjective may be used. For instance at the banquet, the piece de resistance is ice cream cones.

"The Bridge of Fancy" is truly an entertaining picture, but we wish someone would let us in on the secret as to Essanay's reason for selecting such a name for the series.

"The Silent Witness"

(M. H. Hoffman, Inc.—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"THE SILENT WITNESS," with Gertrude McCoy in the feature role, is an adaptation from the stage play of the same name, by Otto Huerbach. It was produced by the Authors Film Company and is released through Hoffman Foursquare Pictures. It will prove a good offering for the exhibitor and will take especially well in the neighborhood where mystery in the screen drama is liked. It is not essentially a mystery drama, but events so turn that in the end a mystery is solved which has not been looked for by the audience. Because of this there is a certain suspense which holds throughout, and the events as they shape themselves come in logical order and a good story is told in a convincing manner and with a true touch of the dramatic.

The methods taken by the author to have the crime perpetrated are not, at all times, perfectly clear and the impression is left that action taken by the young fellow who is charged with the crime, is forced. In this, however, the author has given rise to some originality in clearing up the mystery and for this he is to be complimented. One thing that is noticeable is the absence of comedy relief. At no time in the seven reels is there even the suggestion of the comedy element. A serious vein runs through the story which does not permit of the usual comedy touches which are noticeable in most dramas.

The production is clean throughout and the lesson which it teaches is one that all might well learn. When Bud Morgan is accused of the murder of his schoolmate we are left in doubt as to his guilt or innocence. There is not the certainty that he will be acquitted until the last reel when the author has brought his events together in a logical climax. Gertrude McCoy is fine in the role of Helen Hastings. Her actions are convincing throughout. Junius Mathewes, as Bud Morgan, is a capable juvenile. Captain Harry Lambart has given it a good production. Frank L. A. O'Connor does well as the district attorney. Others in the cast are Aphie James, Alexander J. Herbert, Fred Graham, Albert Phillijs, Jack Sherrill and Helen May.

"Open Places"

(Essanay-K-E-S-E—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"OPEN PLACES" is an old-fashioned Western with a rather crude and hackneyed plot which, however, has been well handled in the direction so that it scores effectively practically throughout its entire length. The principal characters are the school teacher, her worthless husband and the hero, a member of the Royal Mounted Police. The great majority of the scenes are exteriors and a number of pretty long shots have been caught by the photographer. In fact as regards atmosphere, the picture lacks nothing.

Jack Gardner has the hero's part and except for the fact that he is a little too citified to carry the role, creates a good impression. Carl Stockdale is back at his old villainy as the gambling, drinking, murdering husband, while Ruth King makes a very pretty heroine. Fans who like the bar room tussle and the gun fight will have their fill from "Open Places." The entrance of Mr. Gardner is marked by a hot scrap and the long running fight in the end is handled well.

W. S. VanDyke is author and director.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mollie (Ruth King) marries Clark (Carl Stockdale) unaware of his low character. Shortly afterwards he kills a man and flees across the border into Canada. Mollie accepts a position in a nearby town, meets and falls in love with Constable Calhoun (Jack Gardner). When Clark shows up, Mollie makes Calhoun promise not to pick a quarrel with him. Calhoun agrees to keep quiet unless the other makes the first move. For a long while he bears Clark's insults until Mollie finally persuades her husband to leave. Before going he challenges Calhoun. He accepts and they fight with the result that Clark pays the penalty with his life.

"Madame Sherry"

(M. H. Hoffman, Inc.—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

ADAPTED from the musical comedy success of a few years ago, "Madame Sherry" gives to the screen a light comedy drama which, though lacking in sound dramatic action will leave a favorable impression because of the popularity of the stage version. It will not meet with the same success on the screen as it did on the musical comedy stage. It can be said that this screen version of a musical comedy leaves a better impression than has some others which have been attempted. Ralph Dean, who directed, has supplied good comedy touches. He had a capable cast working with the exception of Lucy Carter and Alfred Deery, who did not seem to enthuse over the parts they interpreted. Frank L. A. O'Connor, who carried the leading male part, is at times a bit too effective and forces his action but, in general, he gives a good account of the doings of Edward Sherry.

Action in "Madame Sherry" is noticeably lacking. It is not to be expected in a musical comedy. Nor is the suspense element meant to be well sustained. There is given in pictures just what the stage version meant to have given—a clean bit of humor and comedy situations. With the orchestra playing "Every Little Movement Has a Meaning All Its Own," and other selections from the musical score, there isn't a reason why "Madame Sherry" on the screen should not be as thoroughly enjoyed as was its Broadway debut of a few years ago. Gertrude McCoy, as Yvonne Sherry, the niece of Theophilus Sherry, is good to look upon and prances through her part with the winsome attractiveness for which the role was made famous by Flora Zabelle. Picture patrons will want to see this attraction and in seeing it will not be disappointed. Aphie James, Jack Mundy, Jean Stuart, H. J. Quealy and Robert Homans all did well in their respective parts.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR BUSY EXHIBITORS

"The Winning Pair." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Week of August 27.)—Offsprings of old business rivals often fall in love in pictures and those in "The Winning Pair" are no exception to the general rule. Their fathers are shoe manufacturers and the plot concerns their rivalry and how the lovers made good as salesmen and eventually effected a reconciliation. Full of good humor and capably acted with Ruth Stonehouse and Roy Stewart in the leading parts. Eugene Lewis wrote and Louis Chaudet produced.

"The Night Cap." Nestor. Week of August 27.)—Concerning domestic complications of the Latelyweds as compiled by Fred Palmer and enacted by Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. Eddie brings his pal home for the night and gives him his wife's nightgown and cap in the absence of pajamas. When wifey comes in she sees cap and arm peeking out and suspects the worst until friend awakes.

"Why They Left Home." (Joker. Week of August 27.)—A back stage comedy wherein rubes succeed in spoiling the performance by interference. Carl Laemmle is listed as author while W. W. Beaudine directed from a scenario prepared by C. B. Hoadley. William Franey, Zasu Pitts, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti are the principals; all handle their parts after their usual comical fashion.

"Scandal Everywhere." (Victor. Week of August 27.)—Rather conventional hotel mixup with Max Asher returning again to assume the role of the henpecked yet flirtatious husband. Several intimate situations handled humorously with considerable chasing and shooting on the side. Gladys Tennison is the female lead. Craig Hutchinson directed from a scenario by R. A. Dillon.

"Busting Into Society." (Joker. Week of August 27.)—Written by Tom Gibson and directed by Allen Curtis, this comedy in which Gale Henry and Milton Sims take the leading parts concerns the troubles brought on by newly acquired wealth. Daughter falls for a bogus count until her old suitor, the hod-carrier, exposes him. Miss Henry as funny as ever in this.

"Hands in the Dark." (Star Featurette. Two reel. Week of Aug. 27.)—J. Warren Kerrigan, E. N. Wallack and Edith Johnson try to make this story interesting, but after the murder scene, to the final thrill, there is a lack somewhere that spoils the effect intended. The runaway, through which the murderer is discovered, is well done, but from the time the girl leaves her lover in prison to die, until the last scenes, where the governor stops to investigate the evidence when he should be staying the execution, the handling of the theme does not ring true.

"Mutual Weekly, No. 137." (Gaumont. One reel. Wed., Aug. 15.)—This reel is given over entirely to the U. S. military expedition to France, shows the warm reception accorded our khaki-clad warriors, and the boys in blue. "Papa" Joffre and General Pershing are shown conversing earnestly, and a picture is given depicting General Siebert, as the first of the American contingent to set foot on French soil. General Dubail of the French Army gives a luncheon in honor of General Pershing, who is greeted as "the man of the hour." It is a very interesting reel, and one calculated to rouse the loyal blood of every true American.

"Central Colorado." (Combitone.) This number is of special interest in that it shows the various processes through which gold passes from the time that it is ore in the mountains until it has been treated and refined to form solid bricks. The reel also has a number of scenic views of waterfalls and the like, some of which were taken in South Cheyenne Canyon.

"Fine Feathers." (International. Split reel.) Making milady's fan from ostrich feathers is shown in this half reel. An unusual topic treated intelligently. On the same reel with "Jerry on the Job on the Border."

"Jerry on the Job on the Border." (International. Split reel.) One of Cartoonist Hoban's best animated pictures depicting Jerry as the border patrol between the United States and Mexico. Some of the humor, showing the cartoonist's conception of the domestic life of the flea, might have been low had it not been treated in such a thoroughly comical manner. On the same reel with "Fine Feathers."

Gentlemen:
I want you to know that after experimenting with several other makes of machines we have finally decided to stand in use the Simplex projectors simply because we have been convinced that there is nothing on the market that will give the net results obtained from the Simplex projectors.
As you know, the Rialto standard demands the very finest work possible, regardless of expense, and it is the aim of the writer at all times to improve and to not alone keep up the standard but to make it better and better, and in adapting the Simplex machines for this theatre after these experiments is a tribute to you and your product that I know you will be glad to receive.
Very truly yours,
Managing Director.

Judging Equipment

SLOWLY the general public with their old prejudice against advertised goods is being converted. More and more advertised commodities have come into their own, until now we find that throughout the world people are asking for "Heinz's Pickles," "Uneeda Biscuits," "Campbell's Soup," "Ivory Soap" and other commodities which are advertised broadcast throughout the country.

The reason for this prominence is very simple. Goods which are advertised must have quality. Otherwise their sale would fall off to such an extent that the companies manufacturing them would not alone be unable to advertise but would be forced to stop business entirely. Quality must be sustained where goods are advertised.

THIS of course to some degree forces an improvement in the quality of unadvertised goods, for in order to get along at all they must be at least in a position where they can be favorably compared with competing products which are being advertised. However, when buying unadvertised articles, any man or woman must realize that he is taking a chance and cannot be as sure that the goods which he is buying are up to the standard which he requires.

Another great value which advertising has is the added protection which the customer feels. This is particularly true when you consider the guarantees which manufacturers make for their advertised products. You know that this guarantee is good because of the reputation of the firm which is spending money to put out a 100 per cent. commodity. Unbranded and unadvertised goods do not and cannot offer this guarantee. If goods were not branded, if they were not guaranteed, and if they were not advertised broadly and consistently, customers would have no means for estimating the value which they receive for their money. They would be at the mercy of job-lot producers whose only aim would be to squeeze the last possible cent out of them.

An advertised brand assures quality.

A MANUFACTURER must have good will among his customers. He must have "made good." He cannot afford to turn out an inferior article with the claim that it is of superior quality, for if he did this his good will would soon vanish and his customers would very soon become "knockers" instead of "boosters."

In the motion picture business we are glad to note a continually growing tendency to buy advertised goods on the part of exhibitors and operators. This movement must continue to grow, for only through the advertising of the various manufacturers can the operator and the theatre owner judge of the quality of the goods which he is buying.

"Just as good as" is a thing of the past. Substitution can only be classed as a fraudulent subterfuge. Remember that the man who tries to sell you goods in this way is merely trying to crawl under the reputation of the manufacturers whose goods he is trying to compete with, and that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred you will be "be stung" if you make the purchase.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Have You—Will You—Why Not?

THIS IS THE QUESTION BEING ASKED THE MOTION PICTURE OPERATORS OF GREATER NEW YORK WHO ARE NOT AS YET AFFILIATED WITH LOCAL 306. THE ORGANIZED MOTION PICTURE OPERATORS HAVE EVERY REASON TO BE PROUD OF THEIR ORGANIZATION. UNION MEN! ALL OF THEM, AND THEY ARE NOW ENJOYING AN ERA OF UNPRECEDENTED PROSPERITY WHICH ALL ARE ASKED TO SHARE. AT THIS WRITING THE LOCAL—306—CANNOT SUPPLY THE DEMAND FOR UNION OPERATORS. THERE ARE IN THE GREATER CITY MANY OPERATORS WHO WHILE DESIRING TO BECOME MEMBERS OF THE ORGANIZATION HAVE BEEN KEPT OUT BY WHAT SEEMED TO THEM A PROHIBITIVE INITIATION FEE—$50. ANNOUNCEMENT WAS MADE ON THIS PAGE TWO WEEKS AGO THAT FOR A PERIOD OF FOUR MONTHS, ENDING THE FIRST OF DECEMBER, THE INITIATION FEE WOULD BE REDUCED TO TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS. AFTER DECEMBER 1 THIS FEE WILL BE INCREASED TO SEVENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, WHERE IT WILL REMAIN. HAVE YOU JOINED YET? IF NOT, WHY NOT? ARE YOU GOING TO LET OPPORTUNITY KNOCK AT YOUR DOOR IN VAIN? EVERY MAN, UNLESS HE IS A FOOL REALIZES THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING AFFILIATED WITH A LABOR ORGANIZATION, AND NOW THAT THIS LOCAL HAS DECIDED TO LOWER THEIR INITIATION FEE FOR A SPECIFIED TIME THERE IS NO REASON AT ALL WHY EVERY MOTION PICTURE OPERATOR IN GREATER NEW YORK SHOULD NOT BECOME A MEMBER OF THE UNION OF HIS CRAFT. IT IS NOT MONEY THAT IS WANTED, BUT MEMBERS; THE RIGHT KIND OF MEN, MEN WHO WILL BE A CREDIT TO THE ORGANIZATION AS WELL AS THEMSELVES. MEN IN WHOM THE ORGANIZATION CAN FEEL CONFIDENT AS TO THEIR ABILITY, FOR THE LOCAL IS IN TURN RESPONSIBLE TO THE EXHIBITOR FOR EVERY MAN SENT OUT FROM THE UNION'S OFFICE.

One of My Aides Kicks

LEAGUE member 207 writes: "Dear Brother Sherman—I received the N. A. M. F. L. stickers, and they are now going out on all reels leaving my operating room, as per instructions. I am also enclosing roster of Local 356, which at their last meeting voted to place the entire membership on the Roll of Honor, as all the brothers feel that the league is a great step in the right direction and will be of benefit to the film industry as a whole. Conditions are about the same here as elsewhere in regards to punch marks in the film. The said punch marks are all there and so are mis-frames, although I must admit some of the exchanges are not as bad here in this respect as in some places I have been. Now, Brother Sherman, while we are about it why can't we protest against the film exchanges using their punch—for putting their "trade mark" in film? I, for the life of me, cannot see why it is used, as it surely cannot be to guard against theft, for if one wanted to "steal" the film it would be an easy matter to cut out those portions containing the punch marks. If the exchanges book a reel by these punch marks, why do they put the name of the subject on the reel band? Another thing, why will an exchange pay good money for new film and then fail to prepare it for its first run? More damage can be done a film on its first day's showing if it is not taken care of than will result after many weeks showing of a film that has been so prepared. If the exchanges do not take care of their own property, how in the name of God do they expect an outsider to do so? I have been getting Triangle first run here, and I think their assembling department should get a good jacking up, as I have been editing scenes in almost every show lately. Last week I received a new print with two short scenes upside down. This is not the exchanges' fault, as the film just came from the factory; it looks to me more like carelessness or incompetent help, maybe a little of both. Well brother Sherman after getting all of that out of my system I will close with best wishes to yourself and the A. M. F. L."

In Reply: You will see by this copy of the NEWS you are now reading that the names of the brothers have been placed upon the Roll of Honor, and with their help and yours, perhaps we can make the League something more than a "step" in the right direction. I agree with you perfectly. The film exchange accomplishes no good purpose by punching their identification mark in film, and it is as equally wrong for them to do this as it is for the operator to do so. You are right. A thief can easily cut out the portions so punched. There is another and surer way in which to make identification of a reel positive, and if the exchanges want the answer we can give it to them. Regarding the treatment of "first run" films, see the article entitled "Weiss Film Waxer" in this issue. It is up to every exchange to have one or more of these devices in use, for all you say concerning damage is indeed true. The matter of scenes being upside down in a new print will be taken up with the general office of the company named, and if they find that there is any carelessness in the assembling room you can rest assured some one will get a "jacking up." In conclusion let me say, I did not receive the "working rule" which you said was enclosed in your letter. Perhaps you overlooked it, if so, send it along, it may be of assistance to some other local. Thanks for your kind wishes, and let us hear from you early and often.

Weiss Film Waxer

THE accompanying illustration shows in detail an invention that appears to be the real thing in solving the problem of how to do away with the annoyance to the operator attendant upon the showing of "first run" films where the emulsion sticks to the tension springs and aperture plate and everything else it comes in contact with. Aside from the fact that it will bring about a cessation of this annoyance, it will also prolong the life of the film itself by preventing any deposit forming which might tend to scratch, cut or tear the film, causing the operator further trouble and the exchange a monetary loss. Brother Alexander Weiss, a member of Local 160, I. A. T. S. E., Cleveland, Ohio, is the man who is responsible for this invention, which by its simplicity should make it a red hot seller. The device is nothing more or less than a cast iron standard resembling two upright bars; these bars being joined together and having a base with thumbscrews, enabling it to be placed on the rewind table between the rewinding elements. In the center of the "waxen," between the two uprights, are five metal rollers; four of these placed in pairs, are similar to those used in the magazine film traps on the projector, while the fifth roller, placed between these two pairs is of larger diameter and over which the film must pass during the process of being waxed. At the extreme right of the illustration is shown the only "expensive" part of the entire device, and that is the bars of wax or paraffine used to treat the film, and this expense is so slight as to be almost negligible matter. The small object in the center of the picture is the weight which rests upon the waxen bars and does the work. Here we have the four component parts of the waxer, the modus operandi of which is as follows: The film is first threaded into the device, passing it from the dummy element of the rewinder, through and between the first set of rollers, over the larger roller and then between the second set of rollers and to the reel on the rewinder. The bars of wax are then inserted, from the top, in the grooves on either side of the uprights, after which the weight, with pins protruding from either side is placed in position, bearing the wax down on the film, which during the process of rewinding absorbs just sufficient wax to accomplish the purpose for which it is intended. The friction caused by the rewinding of the film warms and melts the wax, and as the bars of wax only bear upon the edge of the film and sprocket holes, there is little possibility of any trace of wax being left upon the film.

The use of this device is something that I can heartily recommend, and, while it is not the function of this department to recommend, I am firm in the belief that this device of Brother Weiss's is far superior to the so-called chemical compounds that have in the past been exploited for this purpose—preventing first run films from sticking—and while these so-called compounds are of some value in renovating films, I have never known one that would correct the emulsion-sticks-to-the-springs evil.

A number of the large film exchanges in Cleveland, notably the V-L-S-E, Paramount, World and Triangle, have adopted for use in their exchanges the Weiss Film Waxer, and it appears to be only a question of time before all exchanges will have one or more of these devices in operation. The cost is small in comparison to the value of the device, and is not prohibitive to the exhibitor using first run films. As the wax bars are supplied by the manufacturer, 100 bars with each outfit, at a total cost not exceeding $25 for the complete outfit, it is to the interest of theatre managers to write to the Projection Supply Company, Cleveland, Ohio, who are marketing the device, for further information.

An Operator Who Preaches Our Doctrines

L. C. VAN ORSDALE, who writes from Pittsburgh, Pa., where he is in the employ of the A. G. Fontana Productions, Inc., says: "Dear Friend Sherman:—Was sitting in the office this a. m. looking over the NEWS, and your department, and thought that I would write you a line to let you know I was still in the land of the living. If you cannot place me offhand, no doubt you will remember that it was Frank Nealy and I who put on "The Fall of a Nation" at the Liberty theatre last summer. (I got you when you first came in, Lynn.—ED.). Am out here in Pittsburgh now and have been since last December; traveling on the road out of this office. I am heartily in accord with the Anti-Misframe League and want you to put me down as such. I will try and preach it into the operators I meet on the road. Have done quite a little lecturing on punch marks the past season and have done what I could to correct the evil. All sorts of good wishes to yourself and your work from yours sincerely and fraternally."

IN REPLY: I have very pleasant recollections of the projection you and Brother Nealy were delivering at the Liberty last summer, and as I know you to be an operator entitled to be classed as a REAL OPERATOR, I am going to ask you to continue preaching the doctrines expounded by the A. M. F. L., also request that you constitute yourself a committee of one to enroll new members in the League which is being sponsored by MOTION PICTURE NEWS and the Projection Department.

After December 1st, remember, the iniation fee jumps to $75.00 where it will remain.

"Uncle Sam" Don't Need Him—We Do

MEMBER NO. 124, of the A. M. F. L., writes: "Well, here I am again. The pleasure is all mine this time. I see that the League has "fallen down" in its members this week, so I will see the boys here as soon as I hear from you. I left the theatre where I was employed, to enlist in the army, but as they would not have me, and I cannot fight for "Uncle Sam" I WILL HELP FIGHT FOR THE A. M. F. L. The Fox film exchange of Indianapolis needs a good jacking up. They should get a new bunch of inspectors. I am tired doing their work; patching five or six pieces of film in order to make one reel of pictures. There are several other things I want to ask, but will wait a while. I am using one of the Putnam Supply Company's Automatic Signalling devices, which was left here on thirty days' trial. It warns you by using tin foil on the edge of the film. Do the film companies object to its use? If so, please let me know. And now about the NEWS itself. I would like to know if it would be all right to tear out the projection department and then send a copy of the NEWS to the boys at the front. If you think it will be all right let me know, as I save all the department pages for future reference. Please don't publish this letter, but as soon as I hear from you I will tell the boys how to obtain new members for the League."

IN REPLY.—I am complying with your request in a personal letter, and am anxiously awaiting that which you are going to "show me." The League has not "fallen down," but the extreme warm weather caused a slump. This will not last long, however, for the boys are responding nobly and the 1,000 mark will soon be passed as soon as the objects of the League become better known. I have not heard of any objections to the use of the device you mention; so if it is doing the work, why, keep it. In regard to sending the NEWS to the boys at the front, why not instead of tearing out the projection department, loosen the binding pins by bending them up, and remove the entire form, after which the pins can again be bent as they were and the book kept in good shape. Every page in the Accessory News section is of value and all should be kept for "future reference." The editorials by Mr. Gillett are always timely and contain much food for thought; the Camera Department is of great value not only to cinematographers but operators as well, and by careful reading of it much valuable information will be obtained that will help you in your work; Music and the Picture, Building and Furnishing are of value to the operator also. The former can be used by the pianist or orchestra leader, enabling him to use the music which will be most appropriate for the picture being shown, the latter keeps you informed as to the new theatres being constructed and the manner in which they are-equipped; a study here will often bring out many little details which you and other operators can put to some use.

You will note that I used your League number in publishing this letter; therefore I do not think you will object to its publication. You and I are the only ones to whom this number is known, and the name of any member will not be divulged if they so request.

Signs of Big Season in Orders to Philadelphia Supply Houses

PHILADELPHIA supply houses predict good fall business. Although admitting a dull summer season, caused by the excessive heat, the war and the imminence of the draft—everybody in Philadelphia, from exhibitors to exchangemen and through them to supply houses, are exceedingly optimistic as to the autumn season, all predicting a prosperous year.

Already many small houses are reopening.

L. M. Swaab, at 1327 Vine, has sold a Minusa Gold Fibre screen to the New Dixie at Manayunk, Philadelphia. Another Minusa Screen No. 1 has been sold to the newly renovated Auditorium on Eighth, near Vine, Philadelphia. The Temple theatre, of Dover, Del., George M. Schwartz, proprietor, bought two motor driven Simplex machines.

The Roxborough, at Conaroe and Manayunk streets, Philadelphia, through its new manager, Seville Mellowdew, purchased a Minusa Screen No. 1 and two motor driven Simplex machines.

The United States Theatre Equipment Corporation, at 1235 Vine, Charles H. Calehuff, manager, is likewise feeling the impetus of the coming prosperous wave. They have placed Rembusch Crystal Gold Fibre screens in the "Bryn Mawr," at Bryn Mawr, Pa.,; the Jackson theatre, at York, Pa., and the Lafayette, in Philadelphia. The new theatre in Allentown, Pa., has ordered a Rembausch screen, also.

Theater audiences are growing more critical every day! The least flicker on the screen or a momentary flash of badly defined picture is sufficient to dissatisfy many a critical patron. The wise operator knows it does not pay to experiment with untried carbons when one which has stood the test of the most exacting use is available.

It is only natural, therefore, that Silvertips should have taken rank as the "standard negative projector carbon." Every operator who has used them, and this means a great majority, has seen them stand the test and gain the good will of the most critical audiences.

Optical Glass

As has been shown in the preceding chapters, the preparation and testing of optical glass requires scientific knowledge and technical skill of no mean order, but we have by no means covered this complicated subject in the course of the foregoing paragraphs of this article.

Upon consideration it appears that the scientific requirements which must be satisfied by the maker of optical glass, and the important considerations governing its production, will be best made clear by a historical review of the manufacture of optical glass from the time that scientific knowledge was first brought to bear upon the process.

The following paragraphs are from Von Rohr's "Theorie und Geschichte des Photographischen Objektivs"—pages 325-341, and represent a painstaking effort to compile an accurate record of:

THE HISTORY OF OPTICAL GLASS

"The manufacture of optical glass could only attain importance when, in consequence of the development of the science of optics, telescopic objectives of greater dimensions were found to be a necessity. The most important step in this direction was the achromatising of telescope objectives, in which John Dollond was successful in the year 1757. The two kinds of glass, Crown and Flint, which were now required in larger discs, offered great and separate difficulties in the art of melting, insofar as, towards the end of the last century (18th century), pieces of quite large dimensions were obtainable from Crown, but not from Flint, glass. (The discs here referred to are circular plates of glass moulded to the approximate size of the large lens to be ground, or else circular slabs cut from the large lump of glass formed in the melting pot.—Ed. Camera Department). We may observe that the making of optical glass differed in no way from the methods practised in making ordinary glass, the whole proceeding consisting essentially in selecting the pieces fit for optical instruments from among the glass prepared for ordinary trade purposes. Thus does G. Bontemps describe—and, in this instance, free from prejudice—the attempts made by the glass manufacturer D'Artigues, who supplied material to the optician R. Cauchois.

"By this method, however, but very small discs (3 to 4 inches) could be produced, and the quality of these could not even be guaranteed.

"The first who directed his attention to the production of exclusively optical, or, more correctly, Flint glass, and thus paved the way for the necessary modifications in glass-melting procedure, was the watch-maker Pierre Louis Guinand (born 1748: died February 13th, 1824) of les Brenets, a hamlet on the French frontier, in the present canton of Neufchatel. How this man happened to hit upon the idea of glass-melting, which lay so far out of his own department, and who, according to G. Bontemps, carried it on as a clever amateur without any technical knowledge, it is impossible to say. His experiments, which extend back to the year 1775, did not, however, prove very successful, as may be inferred from the opinions of the optician, Rochette, and the astronomer, J. de Lalande, contained in a letter of Aime Guinand, the son of P. L. Guinand.

"According to this same source of information, negotiations began in 1804 with the Bavarian national economist, J. Utzschneider, by whom P. L. Guinand was invited to send samples of glass to Munich for examination. J. Utzschneider was in need of a capable glass-technologist for the proposed enlargement of the Liebherr works—founded in the same year—which he intended developing into a mathamatico-mechanical institute. Whatever the result of the examination of Guinand's glass samples was, has remained unknown. At all events, a meeting of the two parties was arranged and took place at Aarau between J. Utzschneider and the two Guinands, the former giving an order in January 1805, for a sample melting of Flint glass at his own expense. The result of the examination of this and other glass ended in Guinand's removal to Benediktbeuren in September, 1805. In the two accounts to hand we meet with a contradiction, inasmuch as J. Utzschneider, in his obituary on J. Fraunhofer, represents P. L. Guinand as a glass-melter of limited ability, on whose engagement he had not definitely decided at the time of their meeting in Aarau. According to A. Guinand's account, however, his father's removal to Benediktbeuren came about solely through J. Utzschneider's personal solicitations. However this may be, it was not until February 1807, that a contract, for the term of ten years, was closed with P. L. Guinand, by the terms of which he was to receive a fixed salary of 1,600 florins in gold, and to live rent-free.

"The interval, following the autumn of 1805, was occupied in the building of a glass manufactory and the preparation of preliminary meltings. According to the terms of his agreement P. L. Guinand had bound himself over to disclose his secret methods to Utzschneider, and to any person named by the latter. This secret no doubt consisted in the stirring of the crucible with a rod composed of crucible clay, but on this point we can give no positive affirmation, for this artifice was looked upon as a trade-secret, and no account of P. L. Guinand's acquirements, or of the improvements introduced by J. Fraunhofer, appears to have ever been published separately. The meltings at first carried on in J. Utzschneider's presence exhibited two deficiencies; the glass was full of striæ, and the refractive indices of the different pieces varied according to their position in the melting pot. Only by using carefully selected Crown and Flint pieces was it possible to provide the necessary objectives for measuring instruments, which were already made up insofar as the brasswork was concerned. It is, therefore, not surprising that these results did not fulfill J. Utzschneider's expectations.

"Meanwhile (in 1807) J. Utzschneider being again called into the service of the state, and no longer able to give the glass manufactory his entire attention, initiated J. Fraunhofer into the secret, in the Summer of 1809, and intrusted him, in September, 1811, with the task of producing Flint glass in conjunction with P. L. Guinand. At the second melting J. Fraunhofer obtained glass free from striæ and homogeneous throughout the entire pot, without, however, securing complete mastery of the procedure, for later meltings were again unsuccessful. It was two years later when he discovered that in order to guarantee good quality in the resultant glass, he must use larger melting-pots—of four, instead of two, hundredweight capacity.

"Some time later (on December 6th, 1813) P. L. Guinand gave notice that he intended leaving, and at the commencement of the next year, he left Benediktbeuren after a sojourn of eight and a half years, under the stipulation that he would abstain from any active part in glass manufacture upon the payment of an annual compensation of 800 florins.

"According to concurring accounts, he undertook the management of a new glass manufactory in 1816, thereby losing his compensation, but he made an offer, according to J. Utzschneider, to return to Benediktbeuren; the offer, however, was not accepted. According to his son's testimony, he produced in his glass-works, discs for objectives of 13 inches diameter, which were purchased by J. Lerebours and R. Cauchois. He later entered into correspondence with the London Astronomical Society, and also with the French government, regarding his knowledge of the methods of glass preparation; the negotiations fell through, however, and P. L. Guinand died on the 13th of February 1824.[1]

"In Benediktbeuren J. Fraunhofer continued to work at the production of optical glass, and, according to J. Utzschneider, he obtained better glass, and with more certain results, than P. L. Guinand had been able to produce in 1814.

The objective of the largest telescope completed under J. Fraunhofer's supervision had a diameter of 9.6 inches. [2] The objective for the Bogenhausen telescope, with a diameter of 11.2 inches, was also taken in hand during his lifetime, and the Merz firm, working by his tested methods, found it possible later on to produce discs suitable for objectives with apertures of 15 to 17.1 inches in diameter.

"It would hardly be fair, however, to speak only of these successes in ordinary glass manufacture, for J. Fraunhofer took a far broader view of his task. Not content with having mastered the purely technical difficulties of ordinary glass-making he originated the important idea of examining the influence exerted by the different components on the qualities of the finished glass.

"In the first place he endeavored to ascertain the connection between the composition of the glasses and their liability to tarnish; and, in the second place, he undertook the far more important task of systematically establishing the connection between their chemical composition and optical qualities. His experiments [3] showed at once how the variously constituted glasses withstood the oxidising influence of the air. He found that by the addition of calcareous earth to quartz and potash the tarnishing of the glass was diminished, or prevented, and that Lead, Bismuth and Iron oxide exercised a similar influence. The use of these ingredients was not so novel, however, as was the systematic method of investigating the effect of the slightest additions upon the homogeneity of the glass, and also noting their influence upon its liability to oxidise.

"In his investigations upon the optical properties of glass J. Fraunhofer was also quite original, inasmuch as no one prior to himself had ever been able to state the optical properties of the different glasses in exact figures. It was through his method of utilising the dark lines in the solar spectrum that refractive index and dispersion could be correctly measured[4] and it was by the same method that the disproportionate increase of the dispersion in Crown and Flint glasses was established with certainty."

As an item of historical interest we show here an illustration of Fraunhofer's spectrometer, wherewith glass indices were first determined in the now well-known manner. Fig. 4, shows a side elevation and a top elevation, respectively, of the Fraunhofer measuring instrument. The prism, P, of 60° angle, was secured to a plate or disc, D, which latter was attached to the telescope, T, of a theodolite. Instead of a collimator the telescope, T, of the theodolite, was directed toward a distant slit, S, illuminated by a beam of sunlight from a heliostat. The prism being attached to the Disc, D, of course travels with the telescope when the latter is rotated. It is obvious, from the illustration, that the prism can be adjusted upon its disc for minimum deviation, and also that the telescope can be aligned for direct vision of the slit. When it is considered that readings could be readily taken from the graduated circle of the theodolite, it is apparent that refractometry could be practised with Fraunhofer's instrument in essentially the same manner as with an up-to-date spectrometer.

To return to Von Rohr's account of Fraunhofer's researches:

"Being himself a practical optician he was fully conscious of the importance of glasses with a proportionate run of dispersion,

[3] "Experiements on the Cause of the Deterioration and Tarnishing of Glass, and the Means of Preventing This"—Fraunhofer.

"Denkschrift der k. Akademie"—München, Vol. 5 (1817), pages 328-329.

[4] "Determination of the Refractive and Dispersive Power of Different Kinds of Glass with Reference to the Perfecting of Achromatic Telescopes."

This is Fraunhofer's classic Memoir, and although it is not generally known, this important paper has been translated into English in its entirety.

"Edinburgh Philosophical Journal"—Vol. 9 (1823), pages 288-299—Vol. 10 (1823-4), pages 26-40.

and was aware that this quality was possessed by certain liquids, which in combination with a glass, showed a constant dispersive ratio throughout the various regions of the spectrum. J. Fraunhofer therefore cherished the hope that, by making suitable variations in the constituency of the glass, he might produce combinations superior in this respect to any pairs of glasses previously known. The results of such of his experiments as were brought to completion may be seen in the table reproduced herewith, and in the following list various of his glasses are tabulated in the manner which later became customary (due to Abbe and Schott.)

"In the first column of figures the mean index for both series of Fraunhofer's glasses is given. The second column gives the mean dispersion C—F. The various kinds of glass are arranged in the order of increasing refractive index, which is synonymous with the decreasing values of

$$\nu \text{ or } \frac{n_D - 1}{\triangle n}.$$

"The pair of glasses agreeing best, as regards proportionate run of dispersion was Crown glass Lit. M. and Flint glass No. 13. The reason that J. Fraunhofer did not make extensive experiments upon these promising glasses lay, probably, in the fact that they were not sufficiently durable (as regards freedom from tarnishing).

"The production of these new glasses in large meltings had not, so it seems, been arrived at, and the death of J. Fraunhofer in 1826 was fatal to the success of these promising attempts, so that they soon fell into oblivion. Neither J. Utzschneider nor G. Merz and F. J. Mahler were capable, as yet, of developing the work of the gifted deceased, and the technique of glass-making remained just in the state to which Fraunhofer had brought it for regular manufacture.

"Before we come to speak of the further development of the are of glass-making, it will be advisable to cast a look back upon the respective merits of the two above-mentioned men, which seems all the more necessary inasmuch as the accounts to hand evince a spirit of great partnership—A. Guinand and G. Bontemps taking part for P. L. Guinand, and J. Utzschneider siding with J. Fraunhofer. Added to this is the objectionable spirit, so often met with in men of different nationalities, that he who can most detract from the merits of his foreign opponent is looked upon as the better patriot. In this respect A. Guinand, anxious to as-

Power's Machine in Philadelphia Navy Yard

CHAPLAIN DICKENS, U. S. N., after practical tests has placed an order with the Philadelphia branch of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, for five Power's 6-B machines for delivery to the United States Navy Yard, at Philadelphia. Branch Manager Calehuff is elated over this sale, because the Power's machine was selected only after thorough investigation of all makes of projectors. Then to make this happiness complete, Calehuff sold another Power's machine to United States Paymaster W. R. Van Buren, at Norfolk, Va. Power's machine is evidently a great favorite on shipboard.

"Jackies" Stand by Motiographs

JOE BREWER, a well-known operator of Dallas, Texas, lately visited the Motiograph factory to see how the machine is made. Having operated a Motiograph for some time he was much interested and well pleased with what he saw.

Mr. Brewer having joined the Navy is now stationed at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station where he has the pleasure of operating Motiograph machines. He states that the Jackies are greatly pleased over the projection from the machines, but says he has no reason to give for this except that they are Motiographs.

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

Powers vs. LeRoy and Baird

The opinion in the case of Jean A. LeRoy and Chester R. Baird against Nicholas Power Company, handed down last week by Judge Manton in the U. S. District Court of the Southern District of New York, terminated litigation which has been virtually pending for the last three and one-half years. The suit was based on a patent for fire shutter granted to LeRoy on October 7, 1913, No. 1, 075, 215, and which was claimed by LeRoy to be infringed by the fire shutter known as the Nicholas Power Style "B" shutter used on all the Power Cameragraphs in recent years.

The litigation was started by two suits instituted shortly after the grant of the patent in the fall of 1913, against two exhibitors using Power No. 6 Cameragraph in theatres, in the city of Buffalo. The Nicholas Power Company, assumed the entire defense.

After it became known that the defense of these suits had been undertaken by the Nicholas Power Co., the plaintiffs dismissed the Buffalo suits of their own motion and instituted proceedings in the Federal Court in this city against the Nicholas Power Company directly. The suit came to trial in the latter part of April, the decision having just been handed down.

The Nicholas Power Company rested their defense on three principal grounds; first, that Mr. Nicholas Power was the first and original inventor of the shutter and not Mr. LeRoy; second, that the shutter had been used publicly for more than two years before Mr. LeRoy's application for patent; and third, that the LeRoy patent was invalid in view of numerous prior patents on fire shutters, principal among them the patents of the Edison Company.

Mr. Power testified as to his invention of the shutter more than eleven years ago and was corroborated as to his early work in this line by witnessess from the Power factory, also by Mr. Timothy of the Department of Gas, Water Supply and Electricity, Mr. Cecil of the N. Y. Herald, and others, Mr. Timothy stating that the first fire shutter ever presented to his department was one invented by Mr. Power. The rebuttal of the plaintiff to this evidence is summed up by the court in the decision in the following language:

"The only contradiction of this is the testimony of Bogdanffy, a former employe of Power, who claimed that he made the drawing for this shutter and showed it to Mr. Power and directed its construction. The record of the City Water Department shows that Shutter 'B' which Bogdanffy says he suggested to Mr. Power in April, 1907, was submitted to the Department for approval or disapproval in December, 1906, and the witness (Mr. Timothy) called from that Department, is therefore confirmatory of the claim that it was made prior to March 12, 1908.

"I regard Bogdanffy's claim that he made a drawing of the parts in co-operation with Mr. Power (indeed it is even claimed that he was the real inventor of the Power Shutter 'B') as not well founded. His testimony is in direct conflict with many circumstances portrayed by the evidence which cannot be erroneous and point with unerring certainty to the untruthfulness of his claim."

The Court's opinion that the patent was invalid in view of the various patents prior to LeRoy is summed up in the following clause:

"The cases are uniform in holding that there is no invention merely selecting and fitting together the most desirable parts of different machines in the same art, if each operates the same in the new machine as it did in the old and effects the same result. In view of this condition of the prior art, I am of the opinion that the claim of the defendent, that LeRoy's patent is anticipated by the art, and is therefore void of invention, is well founded."

Exquisitely Designed Theatre for Collinsville

GROUND will soon be broken for the erection of the Miners' Institute Building, Collinsville, Ill. The ground dimensions are 64 feet 9 inches on Main street by 148 feet 6 inches on Clinton street. The Main street front has been attractively designed in Renaissance, semi-glazed terra cotta to be the principal material which hydraulic pressed bricks as a body. The Clinton street front will be treated in a somewhat simpler manner with cut stone for trimming.

The front part of the building will have on its main floor the entrance lobby to the theatre, a buffet and a store.

The auditorium of the theatre is to be 62 feet by 90 feet, with a balcony floor 62 feet by 46 feet, this latter to be supported by girders, the span of which will be the entire width of the theatre, thus eliminating all sight-obstructing columns on the main floor.

On each side of the prosenium arch four boxes with a capacity of six seats each are to be provided, and there will also be boxes in the front of the balcony. The entire seating capacity is 1,275.

The stage is to be so constructed and equipped with electric lights, dressing rooms and other adjuncts as to render it suitable for the showing of any performance.

A slight rise in the floor will render a clear view of the stage and screen from any part of the house.

Heating and ventilating equipment of the most improved design will be installed, and in addition to this the auditorium will be equipped with large shutters, which may be operated for summer air ventilation.

Fireproof construction is to be employed throughout, with sufficient exits to clear the house in a few minutes.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

ALABAMA

Montgomery's newest motion picture house, The Empire, opened its doors a few days ago under the management of H. L. Farley. The theatre is located on Montgomery street, and is owned by the Bell Estate. Full particulars of this house will be announced in these columns at a later date.

CANADA

Last week there was opened at Trail, B. C., the beautiful little Liberty theatre. Trail is a prosperous little community with the mining business as its chief asset. Mr. M. F. Wetherall, formerly of Grand Forks, is in charge of the house. The house was opened with the subject "Miss George Washington." They wrote the Famous Players Exchange as follows: "The house opened to S. R. O. with 'Miss George Washington.' Fine house, fine pictures, everybody happy."

COLORADO

Jacob Mazer of Pittsburgh, president of the Mazer Acoustic Company, has been selected to design the acoustical features of an open-air theatre and concert garden, which will cost more than $300,000 and will be one of the most imposing features of the new civic center to be installed by the city of Denver.

Mr. Mazer is said to have been chosen after a country-wide search for a sound expert. His first large commission in the line of acoustics was that of the Rodeph Shalom Temple, Fifth avenue, in 1909.

ILLINOIS

The Elite theatre at Petersburg, having been remodeled and redecorated, was opened to the public last week with Mary Pickford in "A Romance of the Redwoods" to capacity business.

INDIANA

Marion's new theatre, the Grand, was formally opened to the public a few days ago, under the management of W. D. Clark.

Extending across the entrance to the theatre is a beautiful marquee in burnished copper effect and tinted plate glass. Four large mahogany French doors have been hung at the entrance. Four large indirect drop lights, amid the folds of American and allied flags, brilliantly lighted the lobby. Two large ticket boxes have been constructed on the south side of the lobby. One of these windows with its automatic ticket-selling device is where all tickets for the motion-picture productions are sold. At the other window seats for stage productions can be purchased.

Passing through the large mahogany doors at the end of the lobby one found himself in the beautiful foyer of the theatre. A drop chandelier with orange-tinted lights cast a soft mellow light on the rich mahogany woodwork and heavy velour draperies and dark green carpets. A large hand-buffed leather divan is found here for the convenience of those waiting for parties.

Just off the foyer on the right is the ladies' reception room which is one of the outstanding features of the theatre.

The room with its walls of sky-blue, its thick blue carpet and upholstered wicker furniture is everything that milady could desire. Mirrors are to be found at all angles of the room and everything possible for the convenience of the ladies has been attended to by the management.

Just back of the foyer a series of six large boxes have been consturcted. These are furnished with large and most comfortable wicker chairs. They afford splendid vantage points from which to view the screen. With the exception of two boxes on the right hand side of the theatre which are occupied by the organ and piano, the loges at the sides are used. All have been furnished with wicker seats.

The entire color scheme of the decorations was so selected so as to give a richness to the interior of the theatre and to do away with the flashy, gaudy decorations often found in picture houses.

The Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis was opened last week to capacity business. The Alhambra is one of the Barton and Olson chain of theatres, and they have spared no expense in its rebuilding and redecorating. It has a seating capacity of over 1200; the seats on the lower floor are all leather upholstered and extremely comfortable, the loge chairs are of wicker.

The cost of rebuilding the Alhambra, which now has an additional width of fifteen feet, exceeds $40,000. There are many innovations, among them being a mezzanine floor, elegantly furnished with every convenience, including free telephones and writing desks. A ladies' restroom and a gentlemen's smoking room are in the basement, which also houses a music room for orchestra rehearsals, a private projection department for the inspection of picture subjects, a recreation room for employees and the manager's office.

One of the most complete ventilating systems ever installed in a theatre is an important feature. Large exhaust fans, perfectly noiseless in operation, draw the air out of the house, thus keeping fresh, cool air in constant circulation. Sixteen silent fans are also employed and no matter how warm it may be outside, a temperature near 70 can always easily be maintained in the theatre.

IOWA

R. W. Steen, proprietor of the Armory theatre at Rock Rapids, is building a new house to be called the Strand. It will open September 1.

Eldon is to have a new theatre to replace the one recently destroyed by fire.

KENTUCKY

The Liberty theatre, formerly called The Paramount, opened last week under the sole management of N. A. Wilkerson. The place has been repaired and repainted and is a beautiful movie house. Mr. Wilkerson says he will show nothing but the best films obtainable at one price. He is a man of long experience in the picture business and is certain to present an interesting program each day.

MASSACHUSETTS

Brockton's newest theatre, the Rialto, which has been called the Star, will open on Labor Day under the management of William J. Papouleas, of 56 Main street. Mr. Papouleas announced Friday that he had signed a ten-year lease with James T. Corcoran for the handsome playhouse on Main street, south of High, which has just been completed. The new theatre will be immediately fitted with the latest accessories, and all will be ready for the opening on Labor Day.

The Rialto policy will call for big photoplay features produced by the leading moving picture concerns of the country, all the biggest features to be shown as soon as obtainable. "The Honor System," "A Daughter of the Gods," "Intolerance" and other big attraction will be among the early showings. These special features will be shown for an entire week, while other attractions will be shown for three days, and the best of comedy and educational reels will also be secured. Fox and Artcraft productions will be shown frequently under the arrangements already completed.

Besides the feature photoplay attractions, the program will include good vocalists who will come here from leading theatres, it is announced, while an orchestra of seven or eight pieces will be installed.

Mr. Papouleas will give personal attention to the theatre, and his assistant manager will be Slater O'Hare of Des Moines, Ia., who is familiar both with managerial and projection work. L. J. Bartel of the Society Players Film Co., Boston, will have charge of the booking.

The new theatre is modern in every way, and one of the most attractive in the city. It has a seating capacity of 1200 and will be equipped with three projection machines for the perfect showing of the photoplay attractions. A brand new system of ventilating from the top and bottom of the theatre is a feature, and the house is perfectly appointed, and has an attractive foyer entrance from Main street.

MICHIGAN

A. J. Kleist, Jr., of Pontiac, now conducting the New Eagle and Howland theatres, announces having purchased property for another big house that will seat 1200 and be exclusively for motion pictures. Plans have been completed and the contracts will be let very soon, so that the theatre can open in November. The Majestic is the name decided upon for the new house, and full particulars of same will be given in these columns at a later date.

MISSOURI

Contracts have been closed whereby the Melba Amusement Co. will erect a modern theatre building on Miami street, a short distance east of Grand avenue, St. Louis. It will be devoted to the presentation of high-class moving pictures and vaudeville.

This corner reflects the activity of Grand and Gravois avenues, to which it is adjacent.

The Woodmen of the World will shortly begin the erection of a modern store, office and lodge hall building at Grand avenue and Miami street. Several buildings have recently been erected in this part of the city. The Yeckel-Martin Real Estate & Mortgage Co. were instrumental in formulating the plans of the Melba Amusement Co.

NEW JERSEY

The new Crescent theatre, at Sussex, opened a couple of weeks ago under most auspicious circumstances, the house not only being packed, but hundreds were unable to get in. The stage setting was one of the finest ever put out in the country and was commented upon by all. A dark green latticework was built around the screen. In this was intertwined evergreen, set with roses, the screen being framed in a handsome manner. On each side of the stage were potted plants. The varied lights turned on this created a wonderfully pretty scene.

At the close of the first overture, the theatre was darkened and red, white and blue stage lights were turned on. Miss Ethel Dennis, draped in a U. S. flag, appeared, while on the opposite end of the stage appeared Miss Mabel Havens, representing the Statue of Liberty holding aloft an electric bulb. Miss Dennis sang "The Star Spangled Banner." The tableaux and music were wonderfully effective, and drew rounds of applause.

The orchestra followed in a medley of national airs. Then came the photoplays, and young lady soloists in the regular order of the program. In addition to the regular order, each soloist sang a recall selection, that of Miss Willson being "Mighty Like a Rose"; Miss Linn's "Send Me Away with a Smile," and Miss Dennis's, "The Garden of Your Heart."

In every instance the numbers were generously applauded, and only the most favorable comment was heard on the performance of the splendid orchestra, under the leadership of A. S. Anable. The pianist for the photo plays and songs was Miss Leona Kimble.

Little Giant Projector on Galician Battle Front

THE Independent Movie Supply Co., sold a Little Giant Portable Projector last week, that is to play a part in history.

It was sold to D. W. Griffith for the use of Mr. Guy Crosswell Smith in Russia, where Mr. Smith will exhibit the film Griffith presented to the Government of the United States showing, our development and strength as a democracy.

Smith will use the Little Giant Portable Projector on the Galician battle front. Where there are regular theatres, he will show there, but he expects to go right to the firing line.

Innovations Make the Regent, Allentown, Popular

THE Regent theatre, Allentown, although with a capacity of only 441 seats, is well known all over Pennsylvania as one of the best managed in the state, being run on the lines of the Stanley of Philadelphia. F. S. Emmet, owner and manager, is assisted by Mrs. Emmet, who does the booking, publicity, advertising, together with various other things which have helped the succes of the house.

The unusual construction of the theatre includes a very large lobby, over which are apartments, the theatre proper running back, being only one story, which in warm weather has roof and sides open to the sky. Coolness is enhanced by purified air forced in. A special steam heating plant insures winter comfort.

The walls of tan with green, with Heywood-Wakefield seats to correspond, make for beauty as well as cosiness. The screen is original with Mr. Emmet, who claims that the plaster wall painted with his own preparation shows the clearest pictures possible. A large Seeburg organ furnishes the music. Two operators are required to run the two latest style motor driven Simplex machines, which throw 100 feet.

About seven reels are the daily quota at each of the four performances (two matinee and two night), with prices of 15 and 25 cents. The theatre is decorated with paintings of Fox stars in 22 x 28 frames, the gift of the Fox Company. All special productions are shown as well as Fox, Selznick and Metro regular releases.

To Renovate Dreamland, Moncton

THE property on which the Dreamland theatre, Moncton, N. B., is situated has been purchased by Mrs. R. H. Davidson, who will renovate and improve the theatre later in the year. Mrs. Davidson is known all over the Maritime Provinces as a very clever business woman and her theatre has become a favorite in the town of Moncton.

She makes a special point of her Saturday matinees, using when possible a children's programme or showing extra reels especially for the kiddies.

The property was owned in Fredericton and extends down to the railway track, making it valuable land. Mrs. Davidson formerly lived in St. Johns, N. B.

Picks Seeburg-Smith Organ

Henry Goldman, manager of the Colonial theatre at Green Bay, Wis., spent a week in Chicago deciding what sort of an organ he wanted for his sumptuous theatre there. His final decision was in favor of the new Seeburg-Smith unified type.

The Colonial theatre is said to be one of the most palatial motion picture houses in that section.

cribe the world-wide fame of J. Fraunhofer's Optical Institution to the labors of his father, goes to the extreme. However human this may be, it must be distinctly emphasized that the results of the co-operation of several men can by no means be attributed to one alone. It will be doing justice to P. L. Guinand to ascribe to him the very happy idea of the suitable stirring-rod (made of crucible clay,) but the development of the process, whereby the success of the melting might be reckoned upon with some degree of certainty appears essentially to be due to J. Fraunhofer; at any rate A. Guinand does not credit his father with this ability. Concerning, however, the plan of methodically improving glass with regard to the lessening of the oxidising influences, and the removal of the secondary spectrum, this, insofar as it succeeded at all, must be accredited to J. Fraunhofer alone.

Remodeling Skating-Rink for Theatre

ROBERT J. ARMSTRONG of St. Johns, N. B., is remodeling the building known as the Queen's Rink and making it into a motion picture thatre. The building, which is a very large one, will have a seating capacity of 1,200. Ample accommodation could be given on the stage for any production.

As St. Johns is just now without an available house for stage performances it may be that the New Queen's theatre will be used for this purpose as much as for pictures, but it is primarily for pictures it is being remodeled. The work will be done some time late in September. The price of admission is put at 5 cents. So far, Mr. Armstrong has not decided upon the films to be used.

Brother Alles Makes a Suggestion

FRED J. ALLES, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., writes: "Just a few lines to let you know I received my membership button in the A. M. F. L., also the stickers. I am proud of my button, and believe me I am going to use the stickers on every case of film that leaves my operating room. The boys of Local 325, I. A. T. S. E., are thinking about joining the League and as far as I know they will do so soon. (The sooner, the quicker.—ED.). I think this is one of the best things that has ever been brought to the attention of the operator, but there is one drawback as I see it which might hurt the League, and that is this: When members of the League paste the stickers on the film cases prior to shipping them, some of these cases will naturally get into some theatre where the operator is not a member and he might erase the member's name and substitute his own, stating that he is also a member, and that would not be fair to the "next" operator if he, the non-member, were to send the film out in bad condition. You may take a different view of this, however. And now I want to make a suggestion to all members of the League, and that is as follows: Why not state in the NEWS that all members get a photograph taken of their apparatus so that you can publish it, and let us operators see what another operator's booth looks like."

IN REPLY: I had just finished writing the answer to Brother Kesterson of your city, and the next letter picked up was yours. I am glad you were pleased with the button, and hope that you will put the stickers to good use. As you will note in my reply to the other brother, he has been made a "recruiting officer" to enlist the members of Local 325 into the A. M. F. L., and as the more help we can get, the sooner will we reach the 1,000 mark, I am going to appoint you "deputy" pro tem, to assist him. Now let me see what two good, wide-awake, hustling operators can do.

IN REPLY.—The supply dealers listed in the advertising pages of the NEWS are all reliable. It may be, however, that they do not carry the brand of condensers you are looking for; therefore, I would suggest that you write to the manufacturer direct, addressing your letter to the Semon Bache Company, 636 Greenwich street, New York City, who are the manufacturers of the "Maltese Cross" condensers.

"Polly Of The Circus" Cost $250,000

AND GOLDWYN presents this to the exhibitors of America at the regularly scheduled price with the hope and the certain knowledge that every exhibitor playing it will reap immense profits.

A production so big that it would make a fortune if handled separately—a picture so fine that many who have seen it say: "Why do you let it go out to exhibitors at regular contract prices?"

And it is true that it is worth double or triple the price you pay for it under a Goldwyn contract. . . . But a group of skilled and earnest people have worked a year to make this and other pictures like it, firm in the belief that exhibitors everywhere will support a company capable of such achievements as Goldwyn Pictures.

These productions are worth more than we ask for them and they will make more money for exhibitors than any pictures now being made by any other producing organization in the world.

Personalities Your Patrons Will Learn to Love

IVAN MOZUKIN, NATALIA LESIENKO, VERA COLODNA, MLLE. CARALLI, ANNA NELSKA, ZOYA KARABANOVA and OLGA ZOVSKA are players with personalities selected by the deposed Czar of Russia because of their ability and trained at the Government expense. As personalities they are sure to become favorites with American audiences as they have become established in the hearts of their countrymen.

A distinguished dramatic critic says:

"The stage is a field in which the Russians have attained superlative excellence, and the Moscow Art Theatre is known all over the world as the pioneer in intelligent realism and one of the foremost theatres of the world."

was actually produced in Russia by famous Russian stars, from the stories of world renowned authors, a combinatio that brings to America

"Pictures That Are Different"

Centuries of oppression and suffering have left the impress of intensity on the Russian people. Eighty per cent. of the population were slaves, released from bondage as recently as 1861.

This intense feeling is reflected in the acting of Mozukin and his wonderful feminine associates of the Moscow Art Theatre.

Their portrayal of the stories of Tolstoy and his celebrated contemporaries visualizes the happenings of real life, expressed naturally by authors who have not stooped to appeal to shallow minds which demand that every story, every play, every picture shall end:

"AND THEY LIVED HAPPILY EVER AFTERWARD"

Costs More — Worth More

YOU can't pull a ton with a hair! You can't drive a nail with a feather!! Neither can you run your business successfully unless you constantly work for yourself!!

You rent a special picture! You can only run it for a fixed time at a fixed price. Why? You only rent!

You rent a special picture! It makes a hit. You want a rebooking. You can't get it. Why? Your nearest competitor has already secured it to profit by your work.

You will see, if you analyze this situation, that you are renting star features without protection. Nothing is assured to you.

Now, why not buy the film for a year instead of renting it! Get an unlimited run with a rebooking privilege. Secure control of a restricted exhibiting district under a twelve-months contract, which you only can cancel.

This all costs more, but cutting out competition makes it worth more. You pay for fire insurance as assurance against loss.

Buy the picture to assure profit; don't rent and really only advertise a later run for a competitor. Actual ownership for one year is worth the difference in price.

HELEN HOLMES IN THE LOST EXPRESS

Directed by J. P. McGowan

READ These Reviews!

Read what the trade journal reviewers say after witnessing the opening installments of Signal's greatest serial:

WILLIAM J. McGRATH In Motion Picture News Says:

"Here is Helen Holmes once again in a railroad story—not a repetition of previous Helen Holmes productions, but something new! It has a mystery angle that is as fresh and as new as a dime out of the mint. It is the ideal serial with every chapter a whetter of appetite for what is to come. As one looks at it he is forced to commend inwardly and outwardly too, the creative ability of Frederick Bennett, well known war correspondent, who wrote the scenario, and the genius of J. P. McGowan who directed it. It is a Helen Holmes picture in the first place and that gives it a great get-away. Then, to cinch the prediction of its success, is that all-absorbing, new and tantalizing mystery tang that is bound to pervade it to the end."

Exhibitor's Herald Says:

". . full of action and suspense. There is no reason why this serial should not excel any of the previous Helen Holmes railroad photo-novels. There is thrill after thrill and every foot of celluloid contains action."

Motography Says:

"It is 'sure-fire.' The mystery element should make it interesting to even those who do not care primarily for railroad thrills."

Exhibitor's Trade Review Says:

"There are no dull moments, no dragging, there is plenty of quick action and an unbroken chain of thrills."

Some additional reasons why you should book The Seven Pearls

¶ Feature production is the fourth big reason why "The Seven Pearls" is a serial for you to book to get 15 weeks' big business. The national advertising that is being done on this serial will bring the crowds for the first episode. Feature production, with the box office stars and the great story, will bring them back week after week.

¶ National advertising, is the fifth strong argument for this serial. In all the great Hearst newspapers and magazines "The Seven Pearls" is getting extensive advertising and publicity. In the best newspapers of every big city the same advertising is being done.

The praise expressed in the scores of letters from exhibitors who find that

Last Saturday we opened our house at 1 o'clock p. m. and in 45 minutes we had them standing. That continued until we closed at 11 o'clock at night. Furthermore, everybody was more than pleased with the picture and many compliments were showered upon the management. This is all the more gratifying, as our patrons are very discriminating persons who would not hesitate to say the opposite if they felt it. We have run many Pathe Serials and they have always been money getters."—Gwynn & Blar, Terrell, Tex.

Volume 16 No. 10 September 8, 1917

The Danger Point

EXPOSITIONS cost the motion picture industry a quarter million dollars a year. Yet it is treading dangerous ground to discuss the question: "Who should conduct the Exposition"?

So we are told—and so we have found in the past.

Why? Why should the attempt to secure more efficient control of a quarter million dollar affair result in the creation of petty animosities? What sincere reason—if sincerity mean a desire for the betterment of all the industry—can prompt this jealous guarding of the Exposition plum?

Shall another quarter million be sacrificed because film men are "too busy to bother"—because the daily grind and political fears prevent an honest house-cleaning, an effective clean-up of the Exposition muddle?

WE have seen that eight Expositions and two millions spent on them have failed to produce an iota of benefit to the picture industry. We have pointed out just a few of the things that could be done to make Expositions proper and profitable.

Let us now touch the danger point—with the blunt statement of one fact:

"No real Exposition will ever be held as long as control rests entirely in the hands of a local organization."

As long as the fate of Expositions rests solely on the shoulders of a handful of men, as long as the single result expected from Expositions is profit to one local organization, as long as the interest of the industry as a whole goes no further than paying the bills—just so long will we await an Exposition worthy of the fifth industry.

Remember—the definition of a trade Exposition is not merely the reaching of a small slice of the general public.

Local organizations mean local results. An Exposition for all the industry must be conducted by all the industry.

THE local organization has its place. The local body is the host; let it also handle the entertainment of the local public, let it collect its share of the tribute of the local fans.

But there its work ends.

Beyond that point a trade Exposition becomes a national institution. The manufacturers of the nation are interested; the exhibitors of the country are concerned.

Control of the next motion picture Exposition, if it is to achieve any real results, must be vested in committees representative of all the industry—its National Association, its exhibitors of all classes.

Control must be vested in committees that can see more to an Exposition than the sale of display space.

Control must be placed in the hands of committees that can promise exhibitors something more than the privilege of voting for a League president.

THESE things are necessary—else the industry may as well cast a quarter million to the winds this minute and save itself the pother and worry of the Exposition.

Why should it be heresy to suggest that the manufacturer—who pays the bills—be allowed to see that Expositions give him some meed of return? Why should the National Association—representative of all the industry—fear to take a stand for power in the control of that industry's Exposition?

Why should a yearly sacrifice—and it reaches inevitably into the pockets of every person in the film world—be paid because Expositions rise to no greater heights than political plums?

Speaking Editorially:

"Make the Public Pay"

SINCE the days of the first boost in admission prices from five to ten cents, motion picture exhibitors have shied at talk of advances in the scale. Many refuse to give the subject thought. "It can't be done," they declare, "You will drive patrons away from the picture."

We realize that there are many small community and neighborhood theatres where admission boosts may seem out of the question. But to theatre men with the larger theatres in live cities we believe there are pregnant suggestions in the news story on the opposite page.

To these exhibitors there is left little choice between expenses increasing thirty and forty per cent and the other horn of the dilemma—either curtailment of quality or increase of revenue. There are few who can see their way to maintaining past standards of presentation on past returns.

Price boosts are inevitable for any exhibitor who attempts to give to his city a Rialto or a Strand. In the graduated scale at present in vogue in theatres of this class there is the means of bringing this about with the dangers of drastic action.

Think it over, Mr. Exhibitor, as you face your Fall bills for film, musicians, labor of all classes and war income taxes.

See if you can't "Make the Public Pay."

Business with Pleasure

WHILE expressiing our appreciation to the prominent film men who have said a word of praise for MOTION PICTURE NEWS' Cigarette Campaign, we wish to bring to particular emphasis one point of their message to our exhibitor readers.

"Practical and patriotic" is a phrase which runs through their comments.

Patriotic—obviously. There is no need here to tell exhibitors of the need for smokes at the Front, and the appreciation our boys in the trenches will shower on those who help to give them this comfort.

Practical—and business pulling—also. There is a point for the live wire exhibitor. Putting personality into a theatre is admitted to be the first step in successful showmanship. Here is your opportunity—a rare one—to forge a personality link with your patrons that will endure.

An Exposition Side-Light

WALTER W. IRWIN, on behalf of Vitagraph, presented a thousand dollar check to the National League at its recent Chicago Exposition and Convention.

From the preceding Exposition—that of 1916—the National League's treasury received the munificent sum of $5,000.

So Vitagrph, with its thousand dollar gift, gave to the National Exhibitor organization one fifth of the sum realized the preceding year from the entire Exposition—with its generous tribute from all manufacturers and the general public.

Vitagraph's generous act seems in this light to have also thrown a satirical beam on the general Exposition situation.

Huns, Hun Plots—and Hunmania

A CONTEMPORARY whom we hold in the highest esteem, The London Cinema, is deeply concerned over our statement that New York is fast becoming the film capital of the world. With fear and trembling we read a heading "The Hun Plot," and daring further terror we go on to learn that MOTION PICTURE NEWS has fallen innocent victim to a subtle Hun plot.

But somehow we can't get real excited.

We can't believe that the many representative English business men now to be found in Times Square offices, engaged in film deals covering the globe, are part of a Hun plot. Hun diplomacy has shown no evidences of such subtle cunning.

We can't believe that once firmly established in the center of the film-producing world these foreign buyers will find it profitable to move their operations back to London at the close of the war. "New York headquarters and London representatives" is, somehow or other, the phrase that looms before us.

And we fully believe that these London representatives will be capable of seeing that the Hun does not gather the Continental market into his grasp.

It's really dreadful how apathetic we can be.

We could get "all het up" over a sincere, lively rivalry between New York and London for control of the world market. But when the poor, much-battered Hun is dragged into the issue by his hoofs and horns we feel tempted to yawn.

Really—how can a Hun plot be found in declaring that the largest city in a country at war with the Hun is the film capital of the world? Or are we mistaken—

Is America at war with Germany?

Practising What We Preach

"BUSINESS as usual" is the gospel of trade publications. Keep the wheels moving—through war as in peace—and you are doing your bit. Ruthless economy is the worst extravagance.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week offers its West Coast Edition as evidence that we are practising what we preach.

It requires but the most fundamental publishing knowledge to realize that this special section for readers of The West Coast offers no brilliant prospects of profit. Circulation is costly—its rewards never immediate. And we know of no more ambitious publishing effort than the intensive circulation of the West Coast Edition and the other sub-editions of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which will follow.

We offer this intensive circulation to advertiser and reader as our bit in "Keeping the Wheels Moving."

Is a Newspaper a Business?

PUBLISHING Mrs. Grace Humiston's photograph in a daily newspaper is public service. Publishing it in an animated motion picture newspaper is commercialism.

The one gains you credit for enterprise and progressive spirit. The other brings you before the bar of justice.

All of which raises an interesting question:

"Is a newspaper a business?"

Movement Spreading Swiftly to Boost Admission Prices

Exhibitors in Large and Small Cities, Faced with Ruin, Take Up Cry to Make Public Pay—Movement Spread to All Sections Like Wildfire—High Cost of Everything the Reason

"MAKE the public pay!" There, in a phrase, is the slogan coming from the exhibitors of big cities representing every section of the country.

Over the span of the last two years film rentals have jumped skyward, the item of music grows bigger and bigger, operators, ushers, all classes of labor have become more scarce and more costly.

And now, without concerted planning, but with almost country-wide unanimity, exhibitors with the larger houses are turning to the only apparent outlet:

"Make the public pay!"

As pointed out by these exhibitors, it is only the remarkable development in the advertising and elaborate presentation of pictures that has brought the public coming in sufficiently increasing numbers to enable most theatre men to keep their heads above water during the past year. But the limits in this regard have apparently been reached and the Fall looms up with expenses in every branch reaching greater proportions than ever.

"Aside from all other considerations—and there isn't an item in his theatre which doesnt' cost an exhibitor more than it did six months ago," declared one theatre manager to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, "the star evil is the principle cause for the big jump in the cost of picture exhibiting. But the public makes the stars, the public wants the stars, and will not be satisfied without them—so make the public pay."

Gradual Boosts Save Patron Loss

Mistakes of the past are being eliminated by exhibitors concerned in the present price-raising movement. Instead of drastic doubling or boosting of the admission such as usually results in the loss of patrons for an extended period, the present plan calls for gradual boosts to which the patron is educated before he fully realizes the action that has been taken. Theatres with ten-and fifteen-cent scales, for example, are introducing rows of twenty-five-cent seats. As the number of twenty-five-cent rows are increased, the ten-cent ones are to be gradually eliminated.

From two cities of the West come reports of price increases. Seattle reports as follows:

"It is very likely that higher admissions will be charged by the Seattle, Wash., exhibitors beginning this Fall."

One year ago the admissions were usually ten cents, both afternoon and evening. The first change made was to raise the admission to fifteen cents at 7 o'clock in the evening. This worked out very satisfactorily and the public made no complaint, as they seemed to realize that the exhibitor must get a higher admission on account of the better grade of picture being presented.

The theatres ran along this way for several months and then one of the larger ones raised to fifteen cents in the afternoon, making the admission the same day and night. The others evidently watched this theatre and saw that the change was successful for all of the larger theatres now charge fifteen cents for all performances.

The move that is being discussed now is to make the admission price twenty cents beginning at 6:30 each evening.

Salt Lake Also in the Van

Announcement has been made by the management of the Paramount Empress theatre, Salt Lake, of an increase in admission prices, the maximum price having been raised from twenty cents to twenty-five cents. This has not had the effect of driving away patronage.

Omaha Among the First to Move

Wilfred Ledoux, of the Empress Theatre, Omaha, declared to MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative: "We have increased our admission prices from ten and twenty to fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five. We have a better class of patrons and more of them. With expenses increased between thirty and forty per cent. during the past year it was necessary to reduce the quality of our show or increase the price. We chose the latter course and are glad we did.

"I find this is an opportune time for an admission raise, for people half way expect to pay more for their amusements as they are paying more for everything else. Along with other increases I just had word that the bill posters and house agents are now asking a raise from twenty to twenty-two dollars a week. Beginning September 1 the musicians in my orchestra ask five dollars a week more, and three dollars more for the leader."

R. D. Shirley, of the Muse, Omaha, declares: "My musicians have just announced a new scale. I was told today that a local newspaper was increasing its rate. Films also cost more, and I am still charging the ten-and twenty-cent price. The plan of a gradual increase to twenty-five cents seems a good one."

"Beginning this week," says Louis Marcus, of the Majestic, Council Bluffs, Iowa, "I have increased the admission price to twenty cents. It is necessary with the increase in every item of my expense. I have been watching the result closely all week and I find my patrons agree with me.

H. B. Varner Is Legislative Chairman of A. E. A.

Goes to Washington on Tax Bill—Strong Response from Theatre Men of Country to New Organization—Pettijohn's Replies to Slurs

HENRY B. VARNER, of North Carolina, who represented exhibitor's interests in Washington on the tax and other questions, was last week appointed chairman of the legislative committee of the American Exhibitors' Association. Last Thursday he left New York for Washington where he will represent exhibitors until the tax question is finally settled.

On Tuesday he was in conference with John D. Williams of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association. No details of the meeting were given out.

Plans are reported maturing for the organization of a Maryland branch of the new association. Guy Wonders, who is vice-president of the organization, and a Baltimore exhibitor, said last week it was not yet time to give aut the plans being made, but that he believed the Maryland branch would be shortly strong enough to apply for a charter.

At the same time, encouraging reports came in from other sections of the country. A telegram was received from I. M. Mosher, of Buffalo, stating that Mike Shea, big up-state exhibitor, had signified his intention of coming in with the A. E. A.

Michigan members of the Association will hold a state convention in Detroit, September 5 and 6. This branch is extremely active. At an organization meeting the following officers were elected:

F. F. Schneider, president; William Shuttle Helm, vice-president; John Brennan, treasurer, and King Perry, secretary. Mr. Perry talked enthusiastically of the prospects. He said:

"Things are going along here as never before in the interest of motion picture exhibitors. The A. E. A. is progressing nicely. We will have one of the biggest and best organizations in the country, by the time we hold the national convention here in 1918."

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the A. E. A., states that every mail brings in scores of applications for memberships, and a generous response in the way of dues.

In reply to an editorial appearing in the Exhibitors' Trade Review, last week, Mr. Pettijohn issued the following statement:

"If the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League wishes to indulge in personalities to create discord and hard feelings between the American Exhibitors' Association and the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, let them go to it. If we did not know that the N. A. M. P. I. was as "big" and broad as it is, we might be alarmed, but it is too comprehensive to be affected by an editorial that presents prima facia evidence of its purpose.

"The A. E. A. will always be in harmony with the N. A. M. P. I. in everything intended for the good of the industry.

"We have no answer to any of their personalities. We bury them with pity."

Industry Gives Three Rousing Cheers for Smokes Campaign

Leading Film Men Voluntarily and Heartily Endorse Movement to Give Our Boys in the Trenches "Five Minutes in America"—Offers of Help from All Quarters

"Will Help the Cause Along"

"Good luck!

"I heartily endorse the campaign, and it gives me great pleasure to help the cause along.

"With this object in view, I am having prepared a receptacle for use in theatre lobbies into which money contributions can be dropped. A detailed description of this and instructions as to how it may be obtained will appear in the next issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"Personally, I feel that we cannot do enough to add to the comfort of our boys in khaki. Keeping them in smokes is one of the little things that we can do and should do. And everyone can help.

"Picture fans are a generous lot and can be counted on to 'do their bit.' Every fellow who smokes can spare a cigarette, or perhaps a box or two, and the non-smokers can give their cash. Let us all pull together for the sake of the boys in the ranks.

"Good luck to the 'drop a cigarette' campaign."

Lewis J. Selznick
President Selznick Pictures

"A Flash of Inspiration"

"Practical patriotism, applied in a manner sure to arouse interest, is the best definition I can give of the 'drop a cigarette' plan that you have started.

"The idea of encouraging exhibitors to place glass bowls in the lobbies of their theatres to hold donations by patrons for our boys at the front is one that seems to me bound to be taken up by wide-awake exhibitors throughout the country.

"As soon as my attention was called to this good work, I arranged with my associates to have the required stands and bowls placed in the lobby of the Broadway theatre, New York.

"The present war has proved the indispensability of tobacco and cigarettes to the men in field camps and hospitals, as well as to those bearing the brunt of the fighting in the trenches. It seems to me that your laudable effort to help solve the problem of keeping the boys supplied with 'the makings' of comfort should result in success from every standpoint.

"It is a real flash of inspiration!"

Carl Laemmle,
President Universal Film Mfg. Co.

"A Patriotic Wave"

"I was very much interested in reading the article entitled 'Our Boys at the Front to Be Supplied with Cigarettes,' which appeared on page 1426 in your issue of September 1.

"Suggestions of this kind for exhibitors are bound to create an amiable relationship between the public and motion picture exhibitors, besides being a very patriotic move.

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS is to be congratulated on suggesting this plan to exhibitors, and particularly in offering to send a sign to each exhibitor who will request it free of charge."

C. N. Bristol,
Advertising Manager of Triangle

"Takes Place of Food and Water"

"This proposition goes to the right spot. The NEWS has hit upon the right idea, and I am certain the exhibitors of the country will answer the call and lend every effort to the support of the project.

"The cigarette to the soldier sometimes takes the place of food and water. For five minutes, with an American made 'smoke' he is enabled to visit home in spirit. The soldier has enough hardships without being deprived of his tobacco, and I am most pleased to see a leading trade magazine take up the cause in a vigorous fashion and institute a campaign such as this.

"The NEWS has the right idea."

Harry Garson,
C. K. Y. Film Corporation

"Idea Is Practical"

"Permit me to convey to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS my warmest congratulations upon the splendid movement you have inaugurated to supply our boys in khaki with cigarettes. I am certain that an instant and ever-growing success will greet your efforts.

"The response should be overwhelming, for your idea is as practical as it is commendable. Every exhibitor in the United States should welcome the privilege of co-operating with you in your campaign.

"Tobacco is a wonderful solace to men of action. The cigarette is at once so small, and yet so great, and nowhere is it more appreciated than in the trenches. Surely, the least we can do is to help make these trenches more endurable for those who are fighting for your country, your home and for you."

William Fox,
President Fox Film Corporation

"This Is Duty—Not Charity"

"Being a smoker myself, I can appreciate the importance of tobacco to the comfort of our soldiers. It is a fine thing that the NEWS has started and I am in hearty sympathy with it. Anything that tends to alleviate the hard conditions of life in the trenches is a mighty good thing for everyone to support. Giving in a cause like this ceases to be a charity—it becomes a duty. Good luck to the NEWS!

C. R. Seelye,
Business Manager of Pathe

"Great Good Will Come"

"I can see great benefit to the exhibitor in the excellent suggestion of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for a tobacco fund. Patrons of the houses, especially the neighborhood houses, will treasure a laudable rivalry in patriotism. Women, and men too, I dare say, will come oftener to the movies for the opportunity this offers each to 'do a bit.'

Joseph W. Engel, Metro Film | Jesse L. Lasky, Famous Players-Lasky | Wm. A. Brady, World Film | Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph | Adolph Zukor, Paramount | Carl Laemmle, Universal

Harry Garson, C, K. Y. Co. | Wm. Fox, Fox Film | Wm. Wright, Kalem | Lewis J. Selznick, Selznick Pictures | H. J. Brock, Inter Ocean | C. R. Seelye, Pathe

"We are all influenced by object lessons. The presence of uniformed men in the streets stimulates recruiting. For a like reason the glass globes at the theatre door will encourage the work of war relief and make it much more general. It will not be a matter of 'smokes' alone.

"The motion picture theatre is closer to the people than any other agency and can do more to spread the gospel of the hour. Great good will come of this move, I am sure. I fully expect the idea will 'take'—take spontaneously and take everywhere."

Albert E. Smith,
President, Vitagraph

"Paramount Exhibitors Will Help!"

"That is what I call a real patriotic move. Sincere congratulations to Mr. Wm. A. Johnson and the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. A smoke may not mean much to the person who is not a devotee of My Lady Nicotine, but any one who is will appreciate what it means to be deprived of tobacco. The boys at the front are deserving of every consideration from we who for one reason or another cannot go with them. Let's see that they have plenty of 'smokes.' Every Paramount exhibitor, I am sure, will concur in this sentiment and prepare to enlist the co-operation of his patrons."

Hiram Abrams,
Paramount

"Our Salesmen Instructed to Help"

"Not only does General Film heartily endorse MOTION PICTURE NEWS' campaign, but it wishes to co-operate. The idea is well conceived and practical, and the thoughtfulness behind it is bound to receive universal response from exhibitors. General Film has already directed its branch managers to support the plan to the fullest, and they have been instructed to bring the movement to the attention of every exhibitor whom they meet, and to boost it. Most motion picture patrons will welcome the opportunity to send, perhaps as often as once a week, some remembrance to the boys at the front.

"There is no doubt that the presence of one of MOTION PICTURE NEWS' bowls in the lobby of a theatre will add just so much to the popularity of that theatre. All our salesmen are instructed to work in putting the plan over. It is little enough for those of us who are left behind to contribute our mite to the comfort of those who must give their all."

Sidney R. Kent,
Sales Manager General Film Company

"Let's Make It a Success"

"Good business! I'm sure that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and Mr. Johnson are to be congratulated for this humane and patriotic effort to provide cigarettes for the boys at the front. Every exhibitor will find it well to help and if they all do their part there will be no dearth of 'smokes' for our soldiers. In the long hours of waiting, during the tedious times that are certain to come, when every comfort may be temporarily missing, tobacco will come as a wonderful nerve sedative. The plan in Europe has been a success—let's make it even a greater one here. Let us make sure that no man who enjoys the weed shall be deprived of its comforting influence while in the service of his country."

Hugh Ford,
Eastern Supervisor of Paramount

"Simplicity of Campaign Insures Success"

"A cigarette is a little thing and there are many who oppose its use, but of its necessity in the trenches there can be no doubt. I know this to be so from personal observation. We hear much of the incidents in which the wounded fighting man, brought from the field of battle in agony, asks first for a cigarette. There is no romance about this.

"The very simplicity of the campaign insures its success, I believe. The American people are the most generous in the world, both in big things and in little things, if the opportunity is made apparent in a simple way. That to my mind is the chief merit of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS plan. Almost every man who goes to the theatre smokes cigarettes."

Nat. S. Kaplan,
Russian Art Films

"Sends Five Dollars"

"I cannot too heartily commend both the timely and serviceable campaign you have inaugurated in conjunction with your cigarette fund.

"Its appeal should take particularly well all over the country and I believe you will have the genuine support of most of the progressive exhibitors, as the followers of your paper always look to you to do something new and novel. But what is even more important is that the idea is in keeping with your principles of genuine service.

"Personally to me, at this time this fund strikes an appreciative note, because I'll feel that when I am in the trenches, as I hope to be, inasmuch as I have been drafted, that someone in the industry is keeping a warm spot for the men on the firing line.

"Enclosed herewith find my personal check for five dollars ($5.00) to help along the good work."

Victor M. Shapiro
Gen. Adv. Mgr., Frank J. Seng

Note.—While heartily appreciating the generous spirit which actuated Mr. Shapiro, MOTION PICTURE NEWS is returning his check, as we believe that the industry is suffering enough now, through taxes, etc., and that the acceptance of direct contributions would soon bring matters to a point where film men would almost be forced to "dig down."

"Will Add to Theatres' Popularity"

"The boys in the trenches will have no more reason to be thankful than the theatre owners all over the country. Both will be equally grateful to MOTION PICTURE NEWS when this suggestion is carried out.

"There is no more patriotic class of men in the country to-day than the exhibitors of motion pictures. We can go to the Government for this. The men in the departments at Washington will say the theatre men of the country, particularly the movie men, have been a chief reliance in the present crisis. At this moment Government propaganda is being flashed in thousands of theatres.

"But while it is true that the film exhibitors are doing well, are doing nobly, how many patrons of the movies realize it? This glass globe at the door will forcibly

Leading Broadway Theatres as Well as Fox and Loew Chains Promptly Indorse Campaign and Plan Instituting a Vigorous Campaign at Once—Exhibitors Everywhere Hail Movement as Splendid Opportunity to Show Patriotism

TELEPHONES were busy in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS office all last week as exhibitors in the New York region called up to express their enthusiastic reception of the suggestion made last week, to inaugurate a vigorous campaign for sending "smokes" to our soldiers in France and Belgium. The Strand, Broadway and Rialto, as well as the Fox and Loew houses will participate.

Letters poured into the office all week from exhibitors requesting signs to post up in their lobbies, calling attention to the glass bowl where coins are to be dropped. The first order of these signs was quickly exhausted, and it is highly probable that the second edition of them will be gone before Wednesday of this week.

All downtown Los Angeles theatre managers have adopted MOTION PICTURE NEWS plan to collect cigarettes for soldiers and have cards and goldfish jars in the lobbies.

Frederick Miller, manager of Miller's theatre, was the first to get the plan operating. Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock the first jar was filled twice by crowds attending performances of "Jack and the Beanstalk," Saturday afternoon and night.

J. A. Quinn, of the Rialto, was enthusiastic. He has a soldier boy make an announcement before each performance. Harry P. Caulfield, manager at the Garrick, has several slides which are shown before each show.

Al. Nathan, manager of the Superba; Edward O'Neil, manager Clune's Broadway, and Edward Holland, of Woodley's have bets up as to which will secure the greatest number of cigarettes the first week.

This will develop into keen rivalry between all theatres. Other managers adopting the plan are Herman Bosley, Alhambra; T. Smith, American; Seymour Tally, of Tally's Broadway; Frank Dumond, Clune's Auditorium, and Dr. Harry Breckwedell, of Palace. Al Levy, Jr., Southern California salesman, Natural Cigarettes, is starting off every theatre adopting the plan with a good supply.

Seymour Tally does not smoke, so will daily put in the amount he would consume if he did smoke.

The following telegram has been received from the Wells Amusement Company:

"Congratulate you upon patriotic motive of your 'Smokes' campaign, and we are starting next Monday at five theatres which we operate. Send us five of the cards. Through your efforts American exhibitors will once more show their patriotism and the motion picture industry will score another point for ultimate victory in the world war.

"HOWARD WELLS AMUSEMENT CO.,
"P. W. Wells, President."

One of the surprising results of the campaign was the promptness with which offers came from the leading producers and distributors to contribute cash.

Film Men's Checks Declined

The checks and offers were declined, because MOTION PICTURE NEWS believes that film men are carrying enough burdens just now in the form of taxes, etc., and that if checks for the cigarette fund were to be accepted from a few, the others would feel compelled to contribute.

theatre men to do all that can be done to let our boys in France know we stand behind them. It is a splendid idea and will add greatly to the popularity of the motion picture houses."

"Soldier's Only Relaxation—I'm for It"

"I heartily concur with the plan inaugurated in this country by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to provide our boys at the front with smoking material. We who are at home can form no conception of the many tedious hours the men in the service of the country will be called upon to endure. When we light our after-dinner cigar or cigarette in the comfort of our home or club, we should pause to realize what it must mean to the soldiers in trenches or camps to have the means at hand of enjoying a few grateful puffs. It is almost their only relaxation. I am for it—and congratulate the NEWS and Mr. Johnson for the public spirited and patriotic impulses that inspired the 'drop a cigarette' plan."

Adolph Zukor,
Famous Players-Lasky

"Praise Due Mr. Johnston"

"Drop a cigarette! It isn't much, is it? But every smoker knows what it means to a man under a high nervous strain to have the materials of a smoke, providing he is a smoker—and statistics assure us that the majority of the boys at the front are in that category. I think Mr. Johnston and the MOTION PICTURE NEWS come in for a lot of praise for inaugurating the plan in this country. Exhibitors will make no mistake in co-operating to the extent of their ability to make the idea a whirlwind success and thereby bring added appreciation to the film industry, which has already done much toward aiding in the conduct of preparations for the great conflict."

Jesse L. Lasky,
Famous Players-Lasky

"Cigarettes a Safety Valve"

"The campaign to supply smokes for our boys at the front, as proposed by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is entitled to the cordial support of the entire industry and the public.

"It is fully recognized that cigarettes are the chief and, as a matter of fact, the only safety valve for the boys in the trenches. They are as much of a necessity as food, and any plan which will supply them in quantities is commemndable and truly patriotic.

"I want to congratulate the MOTION PICTURE NEWS on being the first to start on this plan, which is both practical and of the greatest human service."

Joseph W. Engle,
Treasurer of Metro Pictures Corporation

"Waive the Revenue Tax"

"The NEWS' initiative in starting a campaign by which the exhibitors through the people may send 'smokes' to our soldiers in France is most commendable. I would suggest that the next step would be to get the Government to waive the internal revenue tax. In this fashion the overhead cost will be reduced and the soldiers benefit by getting a bigger supply of tobacco and cigarettes.

"This project should have the universal support of the trade. The boys are fight-

Fund Gains Quick Recognition by Prominent Exhibitors

Campaign of Exhibitors for "Smokes" Has Been Merged with "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," and Will Be Known as "Motion Picture Division of Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund"

THE campaign inaugurated last week by MOTION PICTURE NEWS to supply "smokes" to our soldiers in France has been merged with the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," which is working along similar lines. The "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," which has lined up many prominent newspapers and organizations will help in every way possible the exhibitors who join the motion picture division.

The "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" sets forth its purpose as follows:

"Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" has been organized to collect money to pay for tobacco for American soldiers and sailors in France.

"The activities of the fund are approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Navy. The books are audited by the Audit Company of New York and the Irving National Bank of New York acts as banker.

"Every cent contributed to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" is used to buy tobacco. No money is taken out for administration. All stamps, labor, stationery, etc., are contributed.

"The tobacco is made up into packages, each with a retail value of forty-five cents. Each package costs the tobacco fund twenty-five cents, including packing and shipping to France.

"According to the plan, every person who contributes twenty-five cents to the fund will receive a message from an American fighting man. In each package is packed a postcard bearing the name and address of the person who contributed the twenty-five cents to pay for the tobacco. To show his gratitude, the soldier receiving the tobacco agrees to write a message on the card and send is to the unknown friend who furnished smokes for a week."

Owing to the fact that many patrons will drop pennies, nickels and dimes, it will complicate matters for the exhibitor to arrange to have postcards sent to his patrons from the grateful soldiers.

To get around this difficulty, the live wire exhibitor will build up an interest in his theatre's campaign, displaying the postcard messages prominently and making his patrons feel a personal interest in them.

ing, and we are at home. Therefore it is up to us to lighten their hours as best we can, and from what I have heard there is nothing more in demand among the troops than 'smokes' from home.

"A Penny for a Puff"

"The MOTION PICTURE NEWS is to be congratulated on its commendable movement to supply our soldier boys with smokes. The Kalem Company will cooperate in every possible way. Cigarettes are fragile. A large per cent. of the loose ones would be unusable when reaching the other side. Furthermore, disease could be transmitted. Would it not be better to use the splendid medium to solicit small sums of cash, using a slogan something like 'A Penny for a Puff'? With this great fund a committee can buy fresh cigarettes and tobacco. And you will find that tobacco manufacturers and wholesalers will quote extraordinary prices."

William Wright,
Secretary-Treasurer of Kalem

"Exhibitors Are 100% Americans"

"You are doing your 'war bit' a thousand times over when you get the public-spirited exhibitors of America lined up behind a plan to supply our fighting men in France with the tobacco they crave and need.

"We are sure you will find every exhibitor a '100 per cent. American' when it comes to placing in his lobby a receptacle for public contributions to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS' 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund.' And, while he will be doing it for purely patriotic motives, don't let him overlook the fact that he will be winning the good will of hundreds and thousands of relatives and friends of fighting men. The fine part of joining in a work of this kind is that one has the approval of his own conscience and of his patrons as well.

"We expect to see you make an immense success of your worthy enterprise.

"Count on us to help you through every avenue we command."

"The only improvement I can suggest upon the NEWS' 'drop in a cigarette' movement for the boys at the front would be to drop in a whole box of cigarettes—or perhaps a handful of cigars.

"This, however, is a case of hindsight and has no bearing upon the credit the MOTION PICTURE NEWS will get for originating a movement tending toward the comfort of our soldiers abroad. Of all the half-way rational habits of mankind, smoking is the most fascinating and the hardest to get along without. Perhaps this is because it is the most imaginative and at any rate it has a soothing effect to persons under nervous pressure.

"This is not a brief for the smoking habit, but an expression of the theory that if our brave men want to smoke they ought to be supplied with the means.

"The NEWS' plan is a happy thought."

William A. Brady,

"A 'Seat Tax' to Get Behind"

"Goldwyn most heartily endorses the campaign of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to supply our troops with cigarettes. If every man who buys a ticket of admission to a motion picture theatre leaves a penny in the bowl outside, the industry will be making a very real and vital contribution to national effort. Here is the sort of 'seat tax' that every producer, distributor and theatre manager should get behind.

"I have instructed all Goldwyn Exchanges to urge your splendid idea upon the owners of theatres booking Goldwyn productions."

Samuel Goldfish,
Goldwyn

"Heartily in Accord"

"I am heartily in accord with the movement set on foot by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. If there is anything which will lend to the comfort of the boys at the front, it is cigarettes and tobacco. I am certain the exhibitors and the public will come to the front in this worthy cause.

"The project is most timely and it should be a source of satisfaction to the NEWS that it is in the lead in suggesting it."

Louis Burnstein,
King Bee

"Add a Few Title Feet"

"Your article concerning the smokes for the boys at the front is one that is very timely indeed. Personally I am a heavy smoker and never touch a cigarette, yet can fully understand the comfort and genuine pleasure that the boys are bound to have from indulging in the temporary luxury of a smoke, and unquestionably the moving picture houses throughout the country should take the proposition with favor, for surely no one would care to be deprived of the opportunity of saying to the boys, 'Have a smoke on me.' Would you consider it an opportune suggestion for producers to add a few title feet to the pictures, drawing the attention of the public to the bowl in the lobby?"

Gaumont Publicity Man Off for Training Camp

Extended leave of absence having been granted Harry King Tootle, publicity manager of the Gaumont Company, Flushing, N. Y., his work will be taken over by Paul M. Bryan.

Mr. Bryan is editor of "Reel Life," Gaumont's Mutual magazine in film, which is issued weekly.

Mr. Tootle's leave is for the duration of the war. He has left for Plattsburg Barracks, N. Y., where he is a member of the Sixth Company of the Eighteenth Provisional Regiment of the training camps for officers.

Griffith Will Have Two Pictures Ready Oct. 1

A letter from D. W. Griffith mailed at Amiens, France, a town close to the front trenches, has been received by William E. Keefe, Mr. Griffith's Los Angeles personal representative. Mr. Griffith in this tells of some of his experiences in war-ridden France, and the scenes he made there with Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Robert Harron, and photographed by Billy Bitzer. The remaining portion of the pictures Mr. Griffith is filming in London, where he intended to use the old Vitagraph Studio. He has completed the Red Cross picture, and by October 1 will have two releases ready for Artcraft. At this time he plans to be back in America. He gives no information concerning the pictures he has made.

News Weeklies Band to Appeal Humiston Case Decision

Declared if Justice Ordway's Finding That News Film Are Not to Be Considered as Newspapers Stands, It Means End of Weeklies—Pathe and Mutual to Aid Universal Fight

UNFORESEEN complications have arisen out of the decision of Supreme Court Justice Ordway, that news film, such as the Universal Animated Weekly, are not to be considered in the same class as newspapers. This finding was made in the case of Mrs. Grace Humiston, the criminal investigator, who was instrumental in solving the Cruger murder mystery, and an injunction was granted by Justice Ordway restraining Universal from releasing the issue of the Animated Weekly containing pictures of Mrs. Humiston.

This injunction has been vacated by the refusal of the plaintiff to provide a bond of $2,500. This was required to protect the defendants in the event of a final decision favorable to themselves, as the attorneys for the Universal immediately filed an appeal from Justice Ordway's decision. The issue of the Animated Weekly containing the disputed pictures has been withdrawn from circulation, however.

Fight Decision to the End

The case is going to be fought by Universal and other companies to the limit, as it is recognized that if such a decision stands, it means the end of the weeklies. It is pointed out that any private citizen who happens to appear before the lens of a camera while a parade or other news event is being taken will have the right to sue for damages if the picture is released commercially.

Already, according to Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal Animated Weekly, several suits have been instituted on this basis, and business-seeking lawyers are, it is declared, looking into past issues of the Animated Weekly and urging possible complainants to start actions.

In connection with the Humiston case, said Cohn, when it was found the pictures taken were not of a nature to injure future plans of Mrs. Humiston to have a series of such pictures taken, permission was given by her private secretary to go ahead with the exhibition.

Pathe and Mutual to Help

Last week, Pathe, joining with Universal in the fight against Justice Ordway's decision, offered to stand one-quarter of the cost of the legal action. Mutual will, it is said, stand a similar proportion of the expense—in fact all the companies issuing News Weeklies are standing together for the mutual weal.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe exchange, in regard to the Humiston suit said on Monday:

"We contend that the news reel, when it publishes events which have been published in the newspapers, should be treated as the newspapers are treated. The decision rendered in the suit is wrong as a matter of principle.

"We claim that we should have the right to publish that which is news, and news is news whether it is expressed in print or in pictures.

Berst Expects Reversal

"We believe that the news weeklies have no cause for alarm over this court decision. Years of experience in getting out a news reel has taught us that the best way to avoid trouble lies in the use of diplomacy and then more diplomacy. In the seven years of its existence the Pathe Weekly (now the Hearst-Pathe News) has had no trouble whatever. Fortunately, far from objecting to being photographed for a news reel, 999 persons out of a thousand are ready to beg to be taken by a motion picture camera because no one has ever seen on the screen a news weekly, any portion of which violated good taste. Such a thing could be said truthfully of few periodicals. It is regrettable that the courts have failed to judge the weekly by the same standards they would apply to a newspaper."

N. A. M. P. I. ELECTION

By a vote said to have been 26 to 5, the Board of Directors of National Association at the specially called meeting, Monday the 27th, turned down the application for affiliation of the recently formed American Exhibitors' Association.

William A. Brady, after the vote had been taken, arose and in a long address indicated that he was strongly opposed to the action taken.

Brady was elected president of the National Association, Frederick H. Elliott was re-elected secretary, and J. H. Brulator treasurer.

"The Sunset Trail," Paramount Play for September

In "The Sunset Trail," added to the September releases of Paramount, Vivian Martin appears as a lonely little girl who longs for youthful associates in her California mountain home. Her wish is finally realized and love comes to her in the depths of the woods after certain experiences that come near to wrecking her life.

Director Melford has taken advantage of many opportunities for exceptional effects, and the final scenes, involving a rescue and reunion, are said to be unusually convincing as well as picturesque.

New Exhibitor Body in Embryonic State

ANNOUNCEMENTS were received last week by many of the prominent men in the independent field, from Herbert Lubin and A. H. Sawyer, to the effect that there will be plans made this week for the formation of an independent organization along the same general lines and for practically the same purpose as the First National Exhibitors' League.

It is unofficially announced that this new organization, though still in the process of formation, has made a tentative agreement with the owner of the "Warrior" to purchase the rights to this production and to make its initial bow to the independent field with this feature as the first offering. It is said that a meeting has been called for Wednesday night at the Hotel Astor, when preliminaries will be thrashed out and the foundation laid for this contemplated organization, and that it will be known as the Second National Exhibitors' League.

Messrs. Lubin and Sawyer are the sponsors, it is said, and these men will have an announcement to make after the meeting.

"A Way Around" to Sunday Shows Found in Delaware, Ohio

The Star theatre, Delaware, Ohio, has tried out the question of presenting motion picture shows on Sunday. From present indications there will be no further opposition to them in that city. Manager Buchman has the city authorities guessing. His mode of procedure was to place a sign in the doorway of the Strand announcing that the show was free, but that if any one wanted to of his or her own volition to make a contribution, they were free to do so.

Chief of Police Spaulding the next day appeared before City Solicitor Caylor and asked for a warrant for violation of a city ordinance which forbids shows on the Sabbath. Solicitor Spaulding informed the chief that, under the present statute, he was of the opinion that nothing could be done.

Needless to say, the movie fans of Delaware are rejoicing over the fact that they can see movies on Sundays. While there is a state statute forbidding the giving of shows on Sundays, it is not enforced in the larger cities of Ohio.

Universal's Conservation Films—Saving Food and Babies

Universal shows several subjects in the Screen Magazine, released September 21, to arouse interest in the great work of conservation now being carried on by the Government. A graphically illustrated lecture on the best method of canning and preserving corn is shown through co-operation with the Department of Agriculture.

The New York City Food Aid Committee has become so interested in this department that it has requested the editor of the Screen Magazine to make a complete reel of similar subjects to use in the propaganda work now being carried on.

The campaign to prevent the high death rate among babies is also given much valuable material in the series of pictures contained in this release.

Country's Exhibitors Rally to Government's Aid

Theatre Men Reply as One Offering Every Effort Toward Furtherance of Patriotic Propaganda—Indiana in the Forefront

THE prominent motion picture exhibitors who were recently appointed as State Chairmen of the National Committee by President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at the request of the President of the United States, have promptly taken up the work of organizing the exhibitors in their respective states for the purpose of utilizing the film and screen to spread broadcast throughout the nation information in regard to the plans and purposes of the various Departments of the Government during the period of the war.

Of the forty-eight Chairmen appointed by President Brady on July 3 only four have not been heard from, this delay being due to the fact that the exhibitors appointed in these localities are away from home and therefore not aware of their selection as representatives of the National Committee.

In a majority of the other forty-four states and the District of Columbia the organization of exhibitors is now well under way and in several states conventions of the exhibitors have been held which have established new records for attendance indicating their desire to aid in this patriotic work.

One of the first replies received was from Frank J. Rembusch, President of the Indiana Exhibitors' organization in which full plans of organization for government, and tender of every aid within the power of the state, was proffered.

Charles H. Bean of New Hampshire brought the subject to the attention of fellow exhibitors in the form of a circular letter sent to every exhibitor in the state. Ninety per cent of them answered almost immediately, and the rest are expected to respond quickly.

To lend to this opinion the meeting of exhibitors held in Manchester ten days ago brought the largest attendance ever recorded by the state. A resolution passed offered the fullest possible support and co-operation to the President and the various Federal Departments, by the motion picture theaters of New Hampshire.

The Idaho Theater Men's Association were also most active, recently sending to theater owners and managers a pertinent statement calling for their aid.

Letters have also been received from the following State Chairmen advising as to their plans for organizing the exhibitors in response to the appeal of President Brady, Chairman of the War Co-operation Committee of the National Association: Jo. E. Rickards, Phoenix, Arizona; H. M. Thomas, Omaha, Neb.; A. B. Nomand, Shawnee, Okla.; H. T. Nolan, Denver, Colorado; C. W. Meighan, Portland, Oregon; A. W. B. Johnson, Birmingham, Ala.; Saul S. Harris, Little Rock, Ark.; Frank A. Garbutt, Los Angeles, Calif.; Theodore Jelenk, Wilmington, Delaware; H. M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; Howell Graham, Chattanooga, Tenn.; C. D. Cooley, Tampa, Fla.; Wm. Oldknow, Atlanta, Ga.; Geo. K. Spoor, Chicago, Ill.; F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; C. E. Glamann, Wellington, Kansas; Lee L. Goldberg, Louisville, Ky.; Alfred S. Black, Rockland, Maine; Louis B. Mayer, Boston, Mass.; E. M. Clarke, Natchez, Miss.; Thomas Furniss, Duluth, Minn.; H. Charles Hespe, Jersey City, N. J.; H. B. Varner, Lexington, N. C.; B. J. Sawyer, Cleveland, Ohio; Charles H. Williams, Providence, R. I.; H. B. Hurst, Deadwood, S. D.; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas, Texas; Edward J. Fisher, Seattle, Wash.; A. D. Flinton, Kansas City, Mo.; F. A. Stage Set for Political Play at Ocean City

Questions of National Scope Expected to Be Discussed—Big Exhibitors from All Sections to Be There—Movie Ball and Banquet

UNUSUAL interest is attached to the joint convention and exposition of the State Exhibitors' Association of North and South Carolina, Virginia, Maryland and District of Columbia, called for Ocean City, Norfolk, Va., August 30, 31 and September 1 on account of the present disturbed exhibitor conditions.

During the past week word has come in not only from the big exhibitors of the states holding the convention, that they would be on hand, but from theatre men from many sections, particularly the South, so that the gathering will not be strictly a local one, but a territorial one.

Hence it is now felt that not only local matters, but those of national scope will be discussed, and that in particular action will be taken by southern exhibitors to definitely cast their lot with one or the other exhibitor associations. While technically still a part of the National Association, theatre men of the Carolinas, Virginia and Maryland, headed by Jake Wells, president of the American Exhibitors' Association, lean strongly to the new organization's ideas. A warm political fight is expected to enliven the three-day session at Ocean City.

Among those who will be present are Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association; Lee Ochs of the M. P. E. L. A.; Guy Wonders, of Baltimore; Samuel Trigger, New York; Harry Crandall, Washington, and Frank Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.

An exposition will be held in connection with the convention.

Brooklyn Exhibitors to Fight Music Demand

Members of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn met Saturday night at the Duffield theatre, and voted unanimously to use only music not controlled by the American Society of Authors and Composers, which is making a demand for a license fee.

Price Boosting Spreads

I have not lost patronage because of the move. In fact, I have been rather surprised to find attendance keep up right to the mark."

Baltimore Awaits Concerted Action

Baltimore is another city where admission boosts are being talked, exhibitors appearing only to await concerted action by all the theatres. "It is probable," reports the MOTION PICTURE NEWS correspondent, "that steps will be taken shortly for a general increase. A few of the larger exhibitors opposed the move, but the majority are for it. In some cases admissions have already been increased. Bernard Depkin, director-general of the Parkway Enterprises, is among those favoring the move. He declares:

"The admission at the McHenry has already been increased to fifteen cents from the former ten. We are going to advance the price at the Parkway to a thirty-five cents minimum. To give the better class of pictures it is absolutely necessary to advance the scale."

Guy Wonders, manager of the Wilson theatre, and vice-president of the American Exhibitors' Association, is an enthusiast. He says: "How is the time to make the increase if we are to live up to the standard of the present-day photoplay and maintain all that is expected in the present-day theatre."

Louis DeHuff, of the New theatre, and Louis Schlicter, of the Bridge, are among those who declared their willingness to advance prices if concerted action were taken. It is likely that developments will come within the next few weeks.

Secretary Charles Goodwin, of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League, predicts that an admission price boost is inevitable. Manager Buhler, of the Central Market Street Theatres Company, operating six houses, announces that his company is considering a raise and will announce its decision Labor Day.

In the Philadelphia territory Paramount is urging its exhibitors to charge a fifteen-cent minimum. The Coliseum and Tioga Theatre have already complied and others are expected to follow.

Triangle Using Parcel Post at Cleveland

Irwin Hirsch, Cleveland manager for Triangle, says that the most aggravating evil he has to contend with in the film business is the express company. Lately he has tried the parcel post, and says the service is much more satisfactory and not any more expensive.

"It is of special value for reels sent to small towns in Ohio," said Mr. Hirsch. "Some of the large express companies do not go into these small towns. This necessitates a transfer of the films from one express company to another, with the result that sometimes the smaller town exhibitor gets his film, but most often he does not. Parcel post is promptly transferred and promptly delivered. Until the express companies realize that they must provide service we shall stick to parcel post delivery."

W. D. Buford Tells Origin of "Mother Love and the Law"

W. D. Buford, general manager of the Crystal Photoplays Corporation, which has produced "Mother Love and the Law" for states rights distribution, estimates that fully $50,000 has been expended in completing it. Mr. Buford says:

"The best talent obtainable was essential to film such a sensational story. We were fortunate in obtaining as the director, George A. Siegmann, whose long association with D. W. Griffith had put him in a class by himself. His portrayel of Silas Lynch in 'Birth of a Nation' and of King Cyrus in 'Intolerance' made him famous.

"O. A. C. Lund, formerly of the World Film Corporation, wrote the scenario and Abram Scholz, long with D. W. Griffith, was cameraman. Instead of depending on the imaginings of fiction we have woven a story around the Dollie Matters case. Ever since I first read of this case in the newspapers I was fascinated with the possibilities latent in it. So strong was the hold it had upon me that my first move after being elected vice-president and general manager of our company was to go before the directors and urge them to screen the story."

Lee Says His Organization Is Fast Rounding Into Shape

JOSEPH F. LEE who is sponsor for the newly formed State Rights Association which is yet in the process of formation, but which Mr. Lee says will be placed on a permanently organized basis within the next week, announces that he has received communications from many of the prominent state rights men in the country informing him that they will be pleased to consider his proposition. Mr. Lee says that his plans, which have been submitted in brief to representative men in every territory of prominence in the country, have been received with favor and that he expects to be in a position to announce the personnel of his organization.

"I am not going at this proposition in a hurried manner," said Mr. Lee, "for I realize its far-reaching importance. When I make definite announcements concerning my plans, they will have been formed on a sound basis and I will be ready to set the machinery of this organization in action and obtain results from the start. I will have an important announcement to make next week."

Ada Patterson Says "Today" Is Better Than Play

Pathe says "Today," starring Florence Reed, is expected, from results at its special engagement at the Strand theatre, New York, to be one of the big sensations of the new season.

One of the tributes to it is a letter from Ada Patterson of the New York American to Harry Rapf, the producer, in which she says: "I regard 'Today' as the vindication of the motion picture. No critic nor enemy of the new art can stand against it, for it shows how much better a picture may be than the play."

Florence Reed, Frank Mills, Alice Gale and Gus Weinburg are in the cast.

Lesser's Independent Organization Completed

The State Rights Distributors, Inc., with Sol Lesser, President; Louis Haas, Vice-President, and Louis Mayer, Treasurer, In Market for Negatives—Forty Offices Established

THE State Rights Distributors, Inc.—this is the name under which Sol Lesser's organization made its official bow to the independent field of the motion picture industry, last week, when it was officially announced by Leon Netter, special representative of Mr. Lesser during his absence from business activities owing to illness. The organization was completed and the personnel announced at the meeting last Wednesday night at Hotel Astor. Mr. Lesser, of San Francisco and New York, who sponsored the initial movement, was elected president, and Louis Haas, of New York, vice-president.

The purpose of the organization, primarily, is to buy negatives of the features offered on the independent market, which meet the approval of five of the seven members constituting the Purchasing Committee. If five of the seven members elected to serve on the Purchasing Committee agree that a feature submitted by the producer or manufacturer is available for their purpose, the feature is purchased and the different territories in which there are representative exchanges, supply their share of the purchase price, the amount figured on a pro rata basis. To each of these territories is assigned a certain percentage of the total amount representing the purchase price of a feature. For example: The New York territory which will be considered as a whole and not divided into two territories as it is by some state rights buyers, will be taxed a larger percentage than is any other representative territory. The percentage figures approximately 15 per cent of the whole for New York. The other territories will be taxed accordingly.

Mr. Netter announced that there are, at the present time, forty offices in active operation and prepared to handle every phase of the new organization's business. These offices are located at points of vantage in the United States and Canada, and, eventually, it is announced, the world markets will come within the jurisdiction of this organization. At the present time arrangements have been completed whereby the United States and Canada can be supplied with the exception of the territories comprising the states of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico. The reason given why these territories have not been assigned representatives is, it is stated, because there is active competition among several independent exchanges for the opportunity of handling the business of the organization in these particular territories. Mr. Netter states that a decision will be reached and the selection announced in the next issue of this publication.

The Purchasing Committee of this organization will meet in New York at any time that the manufacturer has a production to submit for its approval. All productions will be passed upon in New York, until further notice, at the temporary offices of Leon Netter, Longacre Building. Mr. Netter is assistant general manager and temporary secretary of the organization. All manufacturers having productions to offer on the independent market are invited to submit same for the approval of the Purchasing Committee.

This committee is composed of the following representative state rights' men: Nathan Hirsh, New York; Louis B. Mayer, Boston; Daniel M. Vandawalker, Indianapolis; S. A. Lynch, Asheville, N. C.; Leon D. Netter, Cleveland; Sydney B. Lust, Washington, D. C.; J. J. Allen, Toronto, Can. Five of these men will constitute a majority, and with their stamp of approval placed upon a production, it is purchased and the other two abide by the decision of the majority. All transactions will be carried out on a cash basis.

The negative of the production to be purchased will be taken outright where this is possible, but it is said that if the committee decides that a certain feature is particularly adapted to their needs, prints will be considered for the territories which the manufacturers or producers see fit to release. It is desired, however, to purchase the negative where this is possible.

Louis Mayer, of Boston, is treasurer. The president and vice-president are given above. The board of directors is composed of the following members: Sol Lesser, Louis Haas, Harry L. Dollman, of Indianapolis, Ind.; S. A. Lynch, J. J. Allen, C. D. Struble, of Kansas City, Mo., and Louis Mayer.

It is announced that the organization now has five productions under consideration and the Purchasing Committee will take action this week. The names of the first features purchased will be announced later. It is said that an extensive advertising campaign will follow the purchase of each feature to be distributed through the organization's branches, and that the exhibitor in each territory will be given an opportunity to book the offering, having an equal opportunity with his fellow exhibitor.

Alice Brady to Be Her Own Producer

Alice Brady, who left the World Film Company a week ago, has decided to produce her own pictures. Her present plans are to screen eight multiple-reel pictures a year, the first to be a cinema version of one of the most successful plays on the speaking stage, a picture nearly every producer in America has tried to make.

During the week many flattering offers were made to the young woman by some of the largest companies. That these propositions did not attract Miss Brady is manifest from the filing at Albany of incorporation papers for Alice Brady Pictures, Inc., with a capital of $250,000.

The first production of the new company, it is said, will be ready for release October 15. It is likely one of the largest distributing companies may be used in marketing the pictures, but this is to be determined. Early announcement will be made of the method of distribution adopted.

Harry Raver Resigns Presidency of Art Dramas

To Devote Attention to American Productions and Exploitation of Twenty European Features—Completes Picture with Frank Keenan

HARRY RAVER, president of Art Dramas, last week tendered his resignation. A successor has not yet been announced.

No changes in the releasing make-up of the program are indicated in the action of Mr. Raver, his reasons for vacating the executive chair being expressed by him as purely personal.

"My resignation as president and director of Art Dramas, Inc., need occasion no surprise," said Raver, "as I have for some time contemplated turning over the reins to one whose sole time and energy could be devoted to its multifarious details, leaving me free to supervise my American productions and, as well, the exploitation of a new series of twenty or more European spectacular and novelty productions which I have recently imported, one of which, 'The Warrior,' has just closed a successful run at the Criterion theatre.

"My Art Dramas association has been pleasant and profitable and the program has made wonderful strides, through the efforts of no one individual in the organization, but because every man has done his share, backed by a progressive and loyal group of territorial distributors who have expressed faith in the program by their patronage."

Mr. Raver has just completed a production of "The Public Defender," by Mayer C. Goldman and Frank W. Harris, two members of the New York bar, starring Frank Keenan, Robert Edison, Alma Hanlon, John Sainpolis and Florence Short. This is to be followed by others of the same type and with the same personnel constituting a series of pictures based on ideas prominent in the public mind, without reference to sex problems or stories dealing with social evils.

Prominent Picture Women Raise Ambulance Fund

Division of Stage Women's War Relief Society Is Circulating Letter Among Professionals to Inaugurate "Movie Ambulance Fund"

THE motion picture division of the Stage Women's War Relief Society, which last May inaugurated its work among picture folk at a dinner-dance given at the Hotel des Artistes, New York, is now concentrating its efforts in raising a fund for the purchase and maintenance of ambulances for use in France to be known as "The Movie Ambulance Fund."

Paula Blackton, as president, and Bess Meredyth, assisted by Nancy Palmer and Anne Scott in the respective positions of secretary and treasurer, the leading lights in organizing and putting through the dinner-dance, are at the head of this new enterprise.

A few excerpts from a letter now being circulated among the professionals of the trade tell the story. "Because of the demands upon the time of the picture players and the arduous nature of their daily work," it says, "it was realized that their co-operation must be largely limited to cash contributions. . . In order to purchase and maintain ambulances in France, plans are now formulated for raising money to be known as "The Movie Ambulance Fund." A book of twenty shares, at five dollars each a share, is enclosed. We earnestly appeal to you to sell at least one book."

The chief workers in this new enterprise are Alice Joyce, Mae Murray, Ruth Roland, Alice Wilson, Jane Gail, Roshanara, Nancy Palmer, Blanche Sweet and Anne Scott. Others who have subscribed for the hundred dollar books are Anita Stewart, Alice Brady, Mollie King, Anna Nilsson, Doris Kenyon, Irene Castle, Theda Bara, Madge Kennedy, Dorothy Gish, Mabel Normand, Jeanne Eagles, Dorothy Bernard, Winnifred Allen, Vivian Cabanne, Mary Alden, Madeleine Delmar, Florence La Badie, Beatrice Ditson, Edna Hunter, Gertrude Douglas, Hazel Isham, Donna Bain, Bessie Barriscale, Hazel Neason Smith, and Virginia Pearson.

Mrs. Sydney Drew was the first actress from New York to send in her hundred dollars—a personal contribution, and Ruth Roland's hundred was the first received from the Pacific Coast.

Letters have been sent to all producers as well as to the many actresses at the studios and every one approached on the matter has given the members of the Ambulance Fund the heartiest encouragement in the way of financial assistance.

Schwaalbe Has Peter Pan Films for Philadelphia

Henry M. Schwaalbe, of the Electric Film and Supply Company, Philadelphia, has secured the Peter Pan film releases for eastern Pennsylvania. Good booking is reported.

First National Releases Through Wolfberg in Ohio

It is announced from the offices of the Harris P. Wolfberg Exchange, Lyceum Building, Pittsburgh, that the First National Exhibitors' releases will be distributed in Ohio territory through the Wolfberg exchanges. To date the First National's release is "On Trial," and the future productions of Chaplin. Mr. Wolfberg said that twenty-four hours after this announcement "On Trial" opened at the Walnut theatre, Cincinnati, for a week's run. From present indications, said Mr. Wolfberg, "On Trial" will break the record for fast booking, which up until now has been held by "The Crisis."

Watch for E. V. Richards, Jr., of New Orleans

As a testimonial to his regard for their general welfare, and the policies he has made part of their daily work, E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, Inc., was made the recipient of a testimonial at the Globe Theater, New Orleans.

Nearly 250 employees of the local staffs of the Saenger Company presented him with a diamond studded platinum watch, as a token of their esteem and admiration.

The Globe organ pealed forth the strains of "Auld Lang Syne" as the jewel was passed among the assembly for inspection. It is solid platinum, octagon shaped, of Gruen movement, and its cover case is diamond studded with the initials in one corner, and the Shrine emblem in the other, Mr. Richards being a member of El Karubah temple of Shreveport.

Hoyt G. Morrow Leaves Paramount at Dallas

Hoyt G. Morrow, who has been sales manager of Artcraft-Paramount at Dallas, Texas, has resigned to take a connection at Dallas with another distributing organization.

After a short vacation trip with Mrs. Morrow in Colorado, Mr. Morrow will plan an active campaign. Twelve years of experience has given him an extensive acquaintance throughout the South and southwest.

Uniformed Men to Help Autoists into Theatre

Theatres in Buffalo are making special efforts to attract automobile trade by stationing uniformed attendants outside to escort auto parties into the house. Manager Ira M. Mosher, of the Palace theatre, was the originator of this idea. He informs motorists of the innovation in every issue of the Buffalo Motorist.

In the larger Buffalo theatres these days, it is a rare thing not to see a capacity house in the evening. The auto has been a great aid in bringing patrons to the downtown houses. Machines are massed in the streets around such places as the Strand, the Academy and Shea's Hippodrome. Persons living in the outlying districts and the suburbs get a refreshing ride and a good film entertainment.

Cafe Shown in "Lesson" Picture —Owner Starts Suit

The Universal Film Company and the Superba Theatre Company of Los Angeles were made defendants in a damage suit for $100,000 filed in the Superior Court last week by Samuel A. McKee, owner of McKee's Cafe in Los Angeles. An injunction was asked to prevent the showing of this picture in this or other cities by McKee. The film in question is titled "The Double Standard," and a number of the scenes show the front of McKee's Cafe, together with subtitles which McKee states that cafes in cities are pitfalls for young girls and dangerous to the morality and welfare of the inexperienced.

The injunction was denied by Judge Finlayson, who presided at the hearing, and the complaint was amended to prevent the showing of scenes in which McKee's cafe was shown. Temporary injunction was granted on this revision, and when papers were served on Manager Al Nathan of the Superba the scenes in question were eliminated and the showing of the picture continued. The hearing of the case has been set for August 20.

Horace L. Conway with Wolfberg Forces in Pittsburgh

Horace L. Conway, who was manager of the General Film branch at Milwaukee, has joined the Harris P. Wolfberg forces at Pittsburgh. It is announced that Mr. Conway will in all likelihood be stationed at the Pittsburgh office and operate in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Bluebirds for Tobacco Fund

Marcus Loew gives ten per cent. of the gross receipts at his New York theatre this week to swell the fund being raised by the New York Sun and Evening Sun for the purpose of buying "smokes" for Uncle Sam's soldiers. N. T. Granlund, who spreads publicity for Marcus Loew has charge of the "stunts" to be run in connection with "tobacco week."

Bluebird will provide features that will furnish entertainment half the time—"Mother O'Mine" and Dorothy Phillips in "Triumph," being listed for three days. Both of these features are set for release week starting Labor Day, "Mother O'Mine," with Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford starring, being a Bluebird Extraordinary, circulated on state right lines, with "Triumph" as the regular program feature.

Universal Films Departing 69th and Auto Races

Human interest scenes of the famous Sixty-ninth regiment on its way to Berlin, via Mineola, L. I., pictures in Universal Animated Weekly No. 86, just released, show what New York City thinks of the "Fighting Irish."

Another topic of timely interest is the arrival of the Imperial Japanese War Mission at San Francisco.

The Speedway at Sheepshead Bay, N. Y., is the scene of record-breaking automobile races. Ralph De Palma gains the speed king's crown by defeating Louis Chevrolet and Barney Oldfield on the saucer track at the rate of 110 miles an hour. This picture stands unrivalled, Universal says.

Paralta President on Important Western Trip

Carl Anderson Goes to Los Angeles After Signing of Walthall— Far-reaching Developments Are Promised as a Result of Visit

ON the even of the departure of Carl Anderson, president of Paralta, for a four weeks' visit to Los Angeles Studios, the deal whereby the new Henry B. Walthall productions will be made at the Paralta Studios in California, and distributed by Triangle, was closed.

This is Mr. Anderson's first visit to the West Coast since the formation of the Paralta corporations in February and March last, and it is one of not a little significance to the future development of the Paralta interests.

With the Henry B. Walthall Company added to the Kerrigan and Barriscale companies as producing units at the Paralta Studios, this plant will become a very busy place. These companies do not, however, represent its capacity and at least four more organizations can work there with substantially separate accommodations for each.

Mr. Anderson's visit to Hollywood will have much to do with bringing the Paralta Studios up to their maximum producing capacity and increasing the production of star feature films of the highest excellence under Paralta management. The development of Mr. Anderson's present plans, it is said, will have a far reaching influence on the production and distribution of photoplays of the higher class.

At the time of his departure Mr. Anderson said: "On my return to the coast I shall have several very important announcements to make to the trade in relation to our future plans and certain negotiations that have been in progress for many weeks.

"The gentlemen behind the Paralta corporations entered into this work after two years of most careful investigation of the whole proposition of picture making and its possibilities. It is their purpose that the progress of Paralta shall be rational and constant and that its productions shall as constantly increase in artistic excellence and importance.

"To these ends we shall work, backed by experience and all needed capital. We are confident that in a very few weeks the Paralta name will be one of recognized standing, both with the public and exhibitors.

"Our first release will be J. Warren Kerrigan's production of 'A Man's Man,' founded on Capt. Peter B. Kyne's story of the same title.

"We are quite willing to have our ability as producers judged by this photo-drama and I feel quite free to say that any organization that can produce a picture like this in the first eleven weeks of its existence is one in which both exhibitors and patrons of picture theatres may have confidence.

"'A Man's Man' will be released by the Triangle Distributing Corporation on the Paralta plan in September and I am confident that after that production has been seen, the second Paralta release, Bessie awaited with unusual interest."

Military Reception for Lieutenant Victor Smith

Victor Smith, brother of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, got a military reception when he arrived at the studio from Plattsburg last week.

He resigned as production manager of Vitagraph and was one of the first men to enter training. He is now a second lieutenant in the quartermaster's department and will soon take an examination for captaincy.

Vitagraph employes decorated the studio buildings with flags and bunting, procured a military band and organized a mounted guard of honor, composed of actors and studio attaches in uniform, which met the lieutenant at Ocean avenue in Brooklyn and escorted him to the big Flatbush plant.

Bombs had been planted along East Fifteenth street for a distance of two blocks outside the studio, and as Lieutenant Smith approached the gate these were exploded singly and in salvos.

As he entered the studio grounds Mr. Smith received a wild cheer, accompanied by a salute from two hundred revolvers in the hands of actors and others.

Triangle President Makes Flying Trip to Coast

Stephen A. Lynch, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, left New York last week for California. Mr. Lynch's visit to the Coast may have something to do with the many rumors that have been circulating for the past three or four weeks relative to the big things that are about to be done in Triangle.

Inquiries at the office of the Triangle Distributing Corporation fail to reveal the purpose of his visit to the West, but the opinion prevails that Mr. Lynch has some very definite objects in mind.

Life in Cantonments in Hearst-Pathe News

Relatives and friends of soldier boys who have enlisted or been drafted into the great national army will have an opportunity to see them at work in the training camps in motion pictures.

Kendall Banning, director of the Division of Pictures of the Committee of Public Information, has granted permission to the Hearst-Pathe News cameraman to visit all of the cantonments throughout the United States where the soldiers are training. Several cameramen will be assigned at various times to each of the training camps, where they will spend several days picturing the defenders of the nation in the preliminary work that they must undergo prior to their departure for the battlefields of Europe. The work of these cameramen will form one of the most important connecting links of American history. Men who are rookies today, and who may later occupy high positions in the world events, will be shown undergoing the grinding detail of camp life.

As rapidly as the pictures are taken they will be forwarded to Washington to be passed by the official censors, after which they will be shown each week in the releases of the Hearst-Pathe News.

Universal Mystery Serial Taken by Marcus Loew

"The Gray Ghost," from Arthur Somers Roche's Story, "Loot," Booked Over Circuit — Unusual Characteristics Looked to for Success

MARCUS LOEW has booked "The Gray Ghost," Universal's big mystery serial, founded on the Saturday Evening Post novel, "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche. This fifteen-episode thriller, starring Priscilla Dean, Eddie Polo, Emory Johnson and Harry Carter, will be shown in all Loew theatres throughout Greater New York, beginning Monday, September 10.

Having made money with previous Universal serials, Mr. Loew is confident that "The Gray Ghost" will break a few records, owing to the originality of the plot and the excellence of the cast, headed by Priscilla Dean.

The story deals with the exploits of a super-criminal, so elusive in his personality and movements that all of the police officials except Jerry Tryon, a central office detective, believe him to be a mere phantom of the imagination. This strange master spirit of the underworld possesses a powerful influence over Morn Light, a beautiful actress, played by Priscilla Dean. The explanation of this relationship is so inextricably bound up with the secret of the Gray Ghosts's own baffling identity that it is claimed unusual suspense is developed in the dual riddle.

An extensive advertising campaign will be launched in the newspapers and by circularization of patrons simultaneously with the serial's release as a Loew feature.

Fox's "The Spy" Opens at Globe

"The Spy," a timely Fox production, presented with the intent to awaken easy-going Americans to the danger of the German Secret Service, will begin a two weeks' engagement at the Globe theatre on Monday evening. Daily matinees will follow. It is based on a story by George Bronson-Howard.

The story, laid for the most part in Germany, is said to have the attraction of the well-builded detective drama, exhibiting the requisite qualities of suspense, mystery and excitement.

Dustin Farnum, it is promised, adds new laurels to his reputation as Mark Quaintance, an American millionaire idler, who offers his services to his country, becomes a spy in Berlin, and finally steals a book containing names of ten thousand of the Kaiser's emissaries in America. For this he suffers death, along with his sweetheart, a German spy who turns against her government.

Better Studio at Fort Lee for U. S. Amusement

The U. S. Amusement studio, at Fort Lee is being extensively remodeled and enlarged. Herbert Blache is anxious to have it second to none. Plans were just completed by a competent contractor. Work was started as soon as "Behind the Mask" was screened.

The new plans will give almost double the floor space of the present arrangement. New lightings are being installed, extra scene docks are being built, and some large open air stages are to be shortly constructed.

Carefully Selected Cast for "Behind the Mask"

Mme. Alice Blache, who directed "Behind the Mask," oncoming U. S. Amusement-Art Dramas, says the members of the cast were especially selected, each for the particular part.

Catherine Calvert plays the heroine and Richard Tucker, who supported her in "Think it Over," takes the part of a dashing English nobleman who suffers a woman's vengeance though innocent. Kirke Brown has a difficult and unpleasant role, as the man who ruins the girl's father.

Norma Talmadge Wants no War Publicity—Not a Bit

Norma Talmadge, who is producing "The Secret of the Storm Country," at Ithaca, has ordered her press agent not to use her name in connection with the war. She says she was moved to do this by reading in the papers that an American captain had captured the first German prisoner—and the article did not give the captain's name.

It seems there is a rule that only the name of Pershing and his next in command may be mentioned in news from the front. Miss Talmadge said:

"If the men who are doing the fighting for us on the battle front cannot have their names mentioned in the American newspapers it certainly seems to me to be in bad taste for us who are safe here at home to rush into print on any and all subjects in connection with the war. I do think that playing on the war to get space in the newspapers at the present time is something that all of us should religiously avoid."

"Our Mary" Gets Carload of "Spuds" for Orphans

While in the northern part of California taking exterior scenes for "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," her new Artcraft picture, Mary Pickford received an appeal to help an orphan asylum in Los Angeles.

The exhibitor in a neighboring town was the owner of a large truck garden. He and Mary got their heads together and Miss Pickford made two personal appearances before his audiences. In return the farmer-exhibitor sent a carload of potatoes to the orphan asylum.

Progress on Productions for Art Dramas

Marian Swayne intends to start work shortly on a new production for Art Dramas' program. The Erbograph company has just finished "The Little Samaritan," under the direction of Joseph Levering, and the star is resting, preparatory to a hurry Fall and Winter of constant work.

Work is progressing rapidly at the U. S. Amusement Corporation studio in Fort Lee on an Art Drama, which is still untitled. Catherine Calvert is starred in this.

Jewel Picture, "Sirens of Sea," at Broadway

"SIRENS OF THE SEA," a six-part super feature of Jewel Productions, Inc., will go into the Broadway theatre, August 26, with Louise Lovely, Jack Mulhall and Carmel Myers taking the leading parts, Allen Hollubar is the director and the story is by Grace Helen Bailley.

It has to do with the finding on a Pacific coast island of a small girl who is adopted by wealthy Americans dwelling on the island, where she is placed in a fashionable school, attended by girls from the States. Cruising in search of adventure is a blase millionaire who, through field glasses, sees a novel sight, when the girl students don weeds and ukuleles and dance on shore. He lands with a young companion and then things begin to happen.

The settings of the piece are said to be unusually elaborate and a cast of 1,000 was continuously employed for the production which took six months to complete. Miss Myers, here for the first time, becomes a Jewel star. Her swimming, dancing and diving stunts are said to be among the most daring ever introduced into pictures. A special program will accompany the offering at the Broadway, where unusual preparations have been made for its premiere.

This is the second of the Jewel's offering, the first having been "Pay Me," with Dorothy Phillips in the stellar role.

Manicure Girl Romance in "Devil McCare"

Crane Wilbur appears as "Devil McCare" in the Horsley-Art Drama of the name. Juanita Hansen is Mary Archer, the manicure girl, who cuts an important part in the life of "Devil." She leaves the city barber shop and becomes manicure in the shop at the hotel in Sour Lake, largely on his account.

Mary becomes the idol of Sour Lake and far outshines Vera, Devil McCare's ward. Devil has a thrilling battle with "Parson" Brown—over Mary, of course.

Demand for Picture Supplies at Army Camps

The Paramount-Artcraft exchange, at Seattle, recently received a request from the Motion Picture Bureau, Boston, relative to prices and shipments on over a hundred features to be used at army posts in the West. As no specified picture was named the letter was turned over to the Portland office to be taken up with the post officials at Vancouver Barracks.

Cantonments throughout the United States as well as the great battleships will be fitted with complete motion picture outfits. One concern alone in Chicago has received an order for 350 latest model motion picture machines to be distributed for this purpose through the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A.

Influential capitalists are striving to get locations from the Government at these cantonments to erect suitable theatres for vaudeville and pictures to entertain the khaki boys. Alex Pantages is making efforts to locate one of these amusement palaces at American Lake cantonment.

Essanay Player Disputes Draft

Bryant Washburn, the hero of Essanay's Skinner stories of the screen, is getting a deal of publicity these days in the Chicago papers that he has not sought. Bryant was among the top numbers in the national army draft and he was recently called for examination and passed. He filed an exemption plea with his local board, contending that he had a wife and baby dependent upon him.

The Federal authorities disputed any right to grant him an exemption and Major Chiperfield's Government agents here learned the fact that Bryant had a bank account of $5,000 tucked away and that his wife would be able to support herself and child by becoming a motion picture actress. Washburn vigorously and wrathfully attacked this decision of the authorities during last week with statements in the papers.

Edgar Selwyn's "Nearly Married" Is Madge Kennedy Play

Edgar Selwyn has provided the next vehicle for Madge Kennedy, to be produced by Goldwyn Pictures. It is the picturization of his comedy, "Nearly Married," which enjoyed a long run in New York.

This is the first of Edgar Selwyn's plays to be produced by Goldwyn. Until he himself became a film magnate there was little chance of his plays being adapted to the screen. For a long time he resisted the offers of motion picture magnates and now that he is an associate producer he is glad he did resist these offers.

"Nearly Married" supplied Miss Kennedy with another role admirably adapted to her talents, in which the star of "Baby Mine" and "Twin Beds" will be seen at her best.

"The Man Without a Country" at the Broadway

"The Man Without a Country," Edward Everett Hale's appeal to patriotism, is the basis of a multiple-reel photoplay produced by the Thanhouser Film Corporation which Jewel Productions, Inc., will present at the Broadway theatre, beginning September 9, featuring Florence La Badie and H. E. Herbert.

Mr. Herbert made his first appearance on Broadway five years ago as Billie Burke's leading man in Pinero's "Mind-the-Paint Girl." Ernest C. Warde, the producer of many photoplays, including "The Vicar of Wakefield," is responsible for the staging of the cinema production of the Hale story.

The present-day version is the work of Lloyd Lonergan, after the story written by Mr. Hale in the Summer of 1863.

To Run "Blue Ribbon" Feature Every Day

A. J. O'Neill, of the Vitagraph New York office, got a contract with the "Movie Dome," at Broad Channel, near the Rockaways, to run a "Blue Ribbon" feature every day in the week. A yearly contract was made.

This is a new place of amusement opened July 21 for the season. Thirty-one subjects have been selected by the exhibitor.

Convention at St. John, N. B., a "Hummer"

Merrick Nutting to Make Principal Address—Problems of Industry in Maritime Provinces Are to Be Discussed

EXHIBITORS in all parts of the Maritime Provinces are planning to get to St. John, N. B., September 8-9, for the second annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The program has been distributed and it outlines the schedule of a meeting certain to be of consequence to the industry.

In St. John the owners of the local theatres are preparing to make things pleasant for the visitors. Every exhibitor who intends to be there is requested to send his name immediately to Steve Hurley at the Unique theatre, St. John, this to make the task of the local entertainment committee easier.

NEXT WEEK'S ISSUE

On account of the Labor Day holiday, Monday, September 3, next week's issue of Motion Picture News (Dated September 15) will go into the mails one day later than usual.

For one thing a steamer trip on the River St. John is planned for Sunday. It is one of the finest streams in the Provinces and for scenic beauty is unrivaled. It is likely that a stop will be made at one of the popular resorts for a beach meeting and a "Sit-Around Chat."

The same evening there is an auditorium session at Keith's Imperial theatre. Vitagraph, through its president, Albert E. Smith, has promised that Rose E. Tapley, player and lecturer, will be present. So many desire to meet this star that admittance will be by card. Miss Tapley is to illustrate her "Studio Talks" with moving pictures screened especially for the occasion.

Others who will be on the program of the convention are Lesley Mason, W. Stephen Bush of New York and Merrick R. Nutting, editor of the Canadian Film Digest published in Montreal. Mr. Nutting has recently made a close study of conditions in the industry in Canada. It is expected he will suggest a practical solution of the existing trade problems, some of which are acute owing to the war.

New officers are to be elected, probably the first day of the convention. The retiring president will make his annual address. There are reasons why this will be interesting this year. On the local committee are the following:

W. H. Golding, president of the league; S. C. Hurley, secretary; F. G. Spencer, vice-president for P. E. I.; W. C. McKay of the Opera House, A. B. Farmer of the Star, R. G. March of Pathe, G. A. Margetts of Universal, Miss Kathleen Golding and Miss Alice Fairweather, motion picture editor of the St. John Standard.

Courts Reverse Censors and Impose a Fine

The Supreme Court of the State of Washington has upheld the lower courts in fining William H. Smyth of the Strand theatre, Seattle, $50 for "exhibiting a picture depicting scenes of violence." There is no further appeal.

An odd feature of the case is that the picture, "War's Women," had already been passed by the local board of censors of the city of Seattle. The fine was imposed in the City Court despite the action of the censors, thus nullifying the proceedings of the official body.

Branch managers met January 9 and supported Mr. Smyth in his fight. The latest decision is an uppercut. The Lamson Film Company, who own the picture, is deprived of a year's business.

Los Angeles Theatre Runs "Come Through" Twice

The Bluebird Herbert Rawlinson release, "Come Through," which played two weeks continuously at the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, recently, has been rebooked by Manager Al. Nathan for a return engagement of one or more weeks beginning August 20.

The film played to capacity business at the previous engagement, and was taken off because bookings previously made by the exchange could not be cancelled, so Universal says.

Censors Trying to Get Better Writers for Photoplays

The Review Committee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, in co-operation with members of the National Committee for Better Films, is increasingly active in regard to advising on the acceptance of scenarios offered for production.

Every effort is made to develop this co-operation with the producing companies and it is hoped during the coming winter to secure the interest in scenario writing of additional dramatists of national reputation.

Plans are being formulated looking to a series of conferences with writers of national standing, with a view to more complete co-operation between writers. The National Board and the producing companies.

"Our Mary," for Charity, to Referee Chaplin "Fight"

Mary Pickford, the popular Artcraft star, has played many roles in her eventful young life, but at the Mason Opera House, Los Angeles, at the benefit given for the French Emergency Hospital fund, she will be seen in something absolutely different—as a prize fight referee.

Miss Pickford has offered to referee the fistic encounter which is to be conducted by Charlie Chaplin and Eric Campbell, his "heavy."

Anna Case's Musical Career Has Been Meteoric

Grand Opera Star, Engaged by Julius Steger to Appear in Special Productions, First to Be Commenced in February, Favorite with Public

Anna Case

OF interest to the independent producer, the general public and the industry at large, is the announcement that Julius Steger has secured the services of Anna Case, the Metropolitan Opera Company's American soprano, for special productions in which she will be featured. Miss Case will enter the motion pictures for a limited period under the personal direction of Mr. Steger and she will devote the time to this work which is not actually taken up by her work on the concert stage. Her first production will be commenced in February, immediately following her concert engagements. It is said that before she would consent to sign a contract, Miss Case insisted upon a series of camera tests to assure herself that she was making no mistake in entering the new field of endeavor.

Mr. Steger is most enthusiastic over the closing of this deal and announces that Miss Case will meet with the same success on the screen as she has in opera and on the concert stage. He says that as a screen personality, she possesses extraordinary qualifications and that the scenario he has had prepared especially for her, will give her every opportunity to present herself in pictures with the same personal attraction as has characterized her appearances before grand opera audiences.

Miss Case's popularity is reflected in the reception given her by more than 4,000 New Jersey guardsmen, at Camp Edge, Sea Girt, N. J., last week, when she presented the soldiers with a phonograph and one hundred records and sang for them. "The Star Spangled Banner" and "Our America," her own composition. She also made an informal address, in which she gave a brief outline of her rise to the position in the musical world which she now holds—that of American soprano with the Metropolitan Opera Company, with a world-wide reputation on the concert stage. Following her visit to the camp, Miss Case was the guest of Governor Edge, at his home at Sea Girt.

Miss Case is one of the few American girls who, through sheer ability, has made her way to the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House. It is said that when Miss Case first began her musical studies she lived in New York for three months on an allowance of $75, which was loaned to her by a friend. She first attracted the attention of Governor Stokes, of New Jersey, and through his efforts she was given an engagement at Bellevue-Stratford in Philadelphia. Andreas Dippel next heard her and she was offered a position with the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Miss Case's first production under the personal direction of Mr. Steger, will tell the story of a poor American girl, who, against great odds, through force of character and talents, rises to a position of dominance in the world's greatest opera company. In regard to this production, Mr. Steger said:

"It will be a photodrama for the millions of clean-minded Americans, without sex problems, without 'triangles,' without unwholesome suggestiveness, it will lend an uplifting, gripping true-to-life story of a girl who embodies the finest attributes of the real American-girl character."

Essanay's New Idea, "Animated Sub-Titles"

Essanay is pleased with the success of its innovation the "animated sub-title." The reader will play a large part in subsequent Essanay leaders. The idea was first presented in "The Golden Idiot." Those who have seen this comedy will recall the conversation between characters shown in a blocked off corner of the screen without interfering with the action.

Recent tendency has been to eliminate as many sub-titles as possible, though it is realized sub-titles might be made a great asset of any production. The trouble with the ordinary kind is that those who read rapidly are forced to sit through several yards of film added for the especial benefit of slow readers.

U. S. Senators Get Inspiration from Films

Francis Holley, director of the Bureau of Social Economics at Washington, D. C., has written as follows to H. J. Allen, at Calgary, Western Canada.

"Those war maps are magnificent and after showing them at the Arlington Auditorium last Saturday evening was obliged to run them again in my own apartment for the benefit of Senator Hiram Johnson and Senator Owens, who had already seen them once.

"I am delighted to know that these films may be shown in training camps, for we have applications from all of them practically for films of this subject.

"I want to thank you and your Calgary office for thes films, which arrived in good condition."

Nell Shipman Not Under Any Exclusive Contract

Nell Shipman wishes to correct a statement which has appeared recently to the effect that she went to the West Indies in the employ of a film company. She is not under exclusive contract to any one for either her services or her scenarios.

Miss Shipman has long realized the great difficulty of procuring suitable material for original and picturesque feature plays, and her six-month trip to the West Indies was undertaken upon her own initiative with a view to procuring "somewhat different" material for leading producers.

In this she was successful, and although some of her stories of "The Spanish Main" and "Bucaneering Days" have been disposed of, her 'piece de resistance' is being retained until arrangements can be made with one of the foremost directors for its production.

Nell Shipman is at present in California concluding a contract for delivery of a number of photo dramas, but will soon return East to supervise the production of one of her more recent stories, which is to be released on the open market.

Carmel Myers with Jewel

Carmel Myers has joined the forces of Jewel Productions, Inc., and made her first bow as a Jewel star in "Sirens of the Sea" at the Broadway theatre. It is understood that Miss Myers will shortly be featured in an important Jewel production.

Patriotic Thanhouser Feature to Be Released Sept. 9

It is announced that Thanhouser has submitted to Pathe a Florence La Badie picture called "War and the Woman," which is to be released in five parts on September 9.

"War and the Woman" is a patriotic picture, in which Florence La Badie stars. She is supported by a cast including Tom Brooke, Wayne Arey, Arthur Bower, Ernest C. Warde and Grace Henderson. The picture was written by Philip Lonergan and directed by Ernest C. Warde.

It deals chiefly with spies and the secret service, and there is said to be just the right amount of war stuff in it to give it a big punch. The hero is an aviator, and with American aviators going to the front every day now, the picture is up to the minute. Suspense and thrills begin right at the opening of the picture. Florence La Badie as a patriotic young American falls under the suspicion of the United States Secret Service, because of the activities of her stepfather, who is acting as the agent for a foreign government.

It is said that thrills and complications follow each other in quick order throughout the play.

"Whither Thou Goest" Is Booking Strong

Klotz & Streimer, Inc., which company have the rights to "Whither Thou Goest," report good bookings. Mr. Klotz, president of the company says that he is arranging to release one feature a month. He is negotiating for the rights to several popular novels and plays which he will have adapted to the screen.

Dollman, Indianapolis, Ind.; S. A. Lyncy, Ashville, N. C.; J. J. Allen, Toronto, Canada; C. D. Struble, Kansas City, Mo., and Louis Mayer, Boston.

Mr. Pritchard is to marry Miss Ethel May Blair, of Corona, L. I., and Mr. Piltz is to marry her cousin, Miss Celia Mae Spalding of Prattsville, N. Y.

Walthall Heads Own Company as Star-Manage

Productions of Well-Known Actor Will Be Made at Paralta's California Studios, and Releases Will Be Through Triangle

NEGOTIATIONS concluded on August 20 place Henry B. Walthall in the position of star-manager, at the head of his own independent producing company. He will personally select the subjects for production and be final authority in connection with each photo-drama in which he appears.

This development was brought about through negotiations conducted between N. William Aronson, Walthall's personal manager, and Carl Anderson, president of Paralta. The corporation will be called the "Henry B. Walthall Pictures Corporation."

Under contracts signed by Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., and Henry B. Walthall, for himself and company, the production of Mr. Walthall's pictures will be made at the Paralta studios in Hollywood, Cal., and will be released by the Triangle Distributing Company on the star series plan.

Mr. Walthall left for Los Angeles last Wednesday afternoon, planning to stop over one day in Chicago to complete some personal business. His first vehicle has been selected and will be put in production the moment he reaches Hollywood. Who is to be his director and cameraman Mr. Walthall would not state before his departure, but he did say that Mary Charleson, who had been his leading woman in several productions in which he had recently appeared, would continue to play leads in his new company.

Mr. Walthall is regarded by competent critics as one of the most finished actors on the screen. He has frequently been referred to as "the Mansfield of the screen."

He is thirty-six years of age and became a moving picture actor in 1910. He had played on the legitimate stage before that, making his debut in the Murray Hill theatre stock company under the management of the late Henry V. Donnelly.

Before taking the train for Chicago last Wednesday, Mr. Walthall said: "The formation of my company, the arrangements we have made with Paralta to make our productions at their Hollywood studios and distribute through the Triangle Distributing Corporation, bring into actual realization a dream I have cherished for five years.

"I shall endeavor to make my contributions to the silent drama distinctively art productions, but yet not that exalted kind of art that has spelled suicide, sometimes, in the past.

"My definition of the word art as I shall endeavor to interpret it, really means great stories convincingly told on the screen by players of the highest talent, with adequate scenic backgrounds in art and nature."

Sidney R. Kent, General Film, Returns from West

Sidney R. Kent, general sales manager of General Film Company, has returned to New York City after spending six weeks among branch offices of the company. Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver and many other cities were visited by him.

One of the objects of Mr. Kent's trip was to install advanced merchandising methods in the exchanges. A large part of his time was also devoted to effecting special co-ordination of branch activities in distributing product in line with important new projects which are being directed from headquarters.

Conferences with many exhibitors occurred during Mr. Kent's tour. He reports a hugely increased and very lively interest among exhibitors in regard to General Film affairs.

Knowledge the Greatest Fertilizer of Ideas

Advance Information Gives the Exhibitor a Chance to Think Over Plans for Exploitation — How It Prevents Repeated Errors

ADVANCE information on pictures is especially valuable for theatres issuing house organs and printing their own programs. Even where these are of a very modest size the exhibitor will profit by using short paragraphs about coming attractions and about players that are soon to come to their theatres. Theatres publishing programs and changing their bills twice a week or oftener should always carry the full programs for the next week, and where short reels are used in addition to the features, these should also be mentioned. Some of the exhibitors using a regular service complain that they are often not able to get the names of the short reels and that very frequently after they have been advised that they were to have this or that picture, a sudden switch has been made.

Except in case of emergency there is no more reason why the exchange men should not be able to furnish the names of these pictures than they are to give the list of features, and the exhibitor will find it to his advantage to make this stipulation when he signs his contract. This advance information on the short pictures is especially valuable where the theatre is showing, say, once a week, a series of pictures in which a particular star is playing. The followers of these players want to know the title and it will increase business to have these names in advance so as to be able to announce the title of the next picture while the current film is being shown.

Advance information allows the exhibitor to make his preparations for the use of slides. It gives him opportunity to order these from the exchange or to make his own. However, the use of slides on future attractions should be used somewhat sparingly, for throwing a large number of announcements on the screen has only the effect of confusing the spectator and drawing attention from some particularly strong announcement. Many exhibitors report that they prefer to run several slides about the attraction they are to have the next day rather than to go too far in advance into the exploitation of future pictures.

Calendar in Lobby

An excellent suggestion along this line for houses having a daily change policy is a permanent weekly or monthly calender in the lobby which will give the names of the current productions and the stars. This will interest the followers of particular players who are always anxious to know in what vehicle their favorite is next to be. This, together with the program publicity, forms an advance directory for current attractions and features no bookings at the expense of current offerings. The calendar can be placed in a permanent place in the lobby and kept constantly up to date merely by changing the cards opposite the various days of the week.

Many of even the smaller theatres published in the cities find it of great advantage to publish the bills for the entire week in the Saturday or Sunday papers and theatres in towns where there are only weekly papers will get an equal amount of service from this plan. Many patrons will clip these advertisements and preserve them during the week. Scores of the smaller theatres have found that this method is cheaper than distributing programs and that it brings new faces into the theatre while the program method merely reaches the more or less regular patrons.

Somewhat different problems are offered in the case of an unusually notable attraction and the exhibitor will be tempted to place all of his emphasis on this. But the consensus of opinion of the most successful of first-run exhibitors is that these should not be advertised any further in advance than is necessary to get the accompanying reading matter publicity from the newspapers. It will be found in some cities that it will add to the publicity to advertise the picture a week in advance in your Sunday papers, for then the newspaper will probably accord you an additional story and possibly a picture on the production, if you use increased space with him. This advance advertising is also valuable where you know that your competitor is going to make a special splurge at a particular time.

However, exhibitors should be warned here that it is very bad policy to advertise strongly a poor picture simply because you are advertising it against some strong fea-

Vitagraph Sees Great Aid for Exhibitors in Service Bureau

NAT S. STRONGE, director of publicity for Vitagraph, believes that the Exhibitors' Service Bureau is going to be a big aid in the motion picture field and congratulates the NEWS on starting it. Mr. Stronge makes some suggestions which are to be carried out in this department. An article on "Arriving at Your Own Business" will appear next week.

Mr. Stronge writes:

"To succeed, a trade paper must be of service to its readers. The readers of Motion Picture News, owing to the matter carried in its text pages, must necessarily be exhibitors. For this reason Mr. W. A. Johnston and the Motion Picture News are to be congratulated on starting the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. This bureau, if properly and conscientiously handled, should develop into the biggest force in the motion picture trade paper field.

"My idea is that you should start at the very beginning and make an effort to teach the exhibitors to be real business men, and to keep records which will enable them, at all times, to ascertain if they are running their business at a profit or if they are losing money. If you can start on this one idea you will have established a foundation for future building.

"First show the exhibitor how to keep his books and how to arrive at a proper figure for film rental and the usual overhead charges. By performing this one piece of work your bureau will have done more along constructive lines than has been accomplished by any trade paper in the field.

"As a national organ I hardly think that you can go too much into detail in any matters affecting the business. For instance, I do not believe that you could tell, in more than a general way, the best manner to promote one certain picture and have the advice suit all localities. But one of the things you can do is to watch the successful showmen in the motion picture business and dwell continually on the manner in which they promote the pictures that they show in their houses. By doing this you probably will convey suggestions to the less successful showmen."

Bringing Home the Bacon

Where and How We Can Save Money for You

WITH this issue the Exhibitors' Service Bureau starts a series of talks to theatre managers on advertising. This is only one of the phases of SERVICE that we mean to give you.

These talks are to be "down to the ground" discussions. Much of the matter contained in the first ones of the series may seem very obvious to many of you. They are meant to be. They are published as a primer of the science of moving picture advertising.

This bureau has the services of a man who has had many years of experience in the newspaper field and special training in preparing copy for exhibitors. He is employed to tell you not only how to advertise through a series of talks, but to tell you what is the matter with the advertising that you are doing, where you are doing too little and too much, where you can get a maximum of results. Aids will be given in making your mechanical effects more pleasing and consequently giving your advertising more "pulling power."

This bureau is ready to prepare your actual advertising copy for you, to advise you on the space to use and when to use it, to plan an advertising campaign for you on a single picture or a series of pictures.

ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS TO ASK.

Send us specimens of the advertising that you are using, no matter whether you are operating the biggest house in a principal city or the only house in a small city. We may not be able to print them all, but we will take up your specific problem with as much care as if we had only that one subject to deal with and you will get speedy action.

A little later we will deal here with the problems of house organs, programmes, heralds, and then with various special advertising stunts. We will eventually cover the whole field of exploitation and you will get the benefit of the fruits of long experience.

This Is Your Chance

IN the meantime send us in copies of your programmes, handbills and the like, and do not wait until you see the following articles to ask us advice on any particular point.

You may be wasting a lot of money and allowing your competitor to take your business away from you by not sitting down and writing a letter to the EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU.

We are not going to tell you that your work is good simply because we want to flatter you. But we are going to search for the errors.

We are not going to simply refer you to the "exhibitors' aid book" issued by some manufacturer, simply because that is the easiest way, for we think that a lot of these suggestions that we have seen are bad.

YOU ARE GOING TO GET GENUINE SERVICE.

Advertising your pictures is only one of your problems. You have others with ticket selling, with house arrangements, with a thousand and one things. Instead of worrying over your troubles and making costly experiments bring your trouble to us and let us tell you that the experiments of others have proven and how you can save yourself time and expense.

Lots of exhibitors do not know and admit that they do not know. They ought to be eager for advice.

There are a lot more who thought they knew and now are wondering why they are not succeeding. That's another class that this bureau wants to aid.

From both of these classes we want to hear the stories of trouble, a sketch of the situation.

The Motor Car Parallel

DO you know what made the automobile industry? Its beginnings were something like those of the moving pictures. The general public thought the first automobiles curiosities—jokes of the moment—enjoyed them as a fleeting thing. And then there jumped into the industry hundreds of makers with little capital and no experience. A good-sized volume could be filled with the names of "gas wagons" that have "buzzed their little way and passed from here."

But then old Master Efficiency entered the field. The manufacturers looked out for service, and they hired business experts and industrial chemists, found out what was wrong and remedied the faults until the industry is one of the most profitable of all today.

What was the great fault with the automobile business at that time? Simply that the public took so promptly to these machines as an amusement that certain individuals thought the public really had to have their brands. There are a lot of moving picture people who are operating on this same principle.

There grew up waste in their factories, waste in distribution, inefficiency in salesmanship and failure in exploitation. But SERVICE cured these ailments, just as they can cure yours, Mr. Exhibitor. At first the automobile makers couldn't see why the public did not buy their wares. A manufacturer in Indianapolis couldn't see why his car didn't sell as well as that of a manufacturer in Detroit. Apparently it was made as well, it was offered at the same price—the Indianapolis creation was at least called an automobile just as well as that of the Detroit product. But the SERVICE that the Indianapolis man called in showed him where the little errors were that separated him as far from results as much more apparent things. He got the aid of men who knew what was the matter and succeeded.

SERVICE can do the same for you. Never before have you had an opportunity for this aid. Never before have you had a bureau operated especially for you, a bureau that didn't have behind it something to sell you.

Here is your forum. Here is the place to come with your hopes, your plans, your criticisms and complaints and your stories of success.

The Door of Opportunity is open.

Psychology of Theatre Advertising

Preliminary Article of a Series Telling You How to Put Your Theatre Before the Public and Through the Newspapers

WHEN the advertising man from one of the local papers comes to your theatre and urges you to advertise, too many of you exhibitors view him with suspicion—that is, if you have not been an advertiser in the past or have used the print only spasmodically. We are going to urge you to advertise. We know that advertising pays and that it will pay all classes of exhibitors. But the advertising must be governed first by what the theatre has to offer, no matter the location of his theatre, and second, by possible clientele to which he may appeal.

When the small house is advised to advertise, the manager, in most cases, presupposes that he is being urged to spend his money on the same scale as the biggest downtown house. Of course, such is ridiculous, and if the advertising solicitor knows his own business, he is not going to advise any theatre owner to spend more than enough to get results. He certainly does not want to convert a possible asset into a liability by forcing the exhibitor into the business discard. And it does not require any diagramed, intricate plan to show you how to advertise. It's very simple if you follow common sense rules.

Before we enter into detailed discussion of newspaper advertising, let us suggest that the invitation is open for each exhibitor, big and little, to bring his specific problem to us and let us offer him the advice of men who are familiar with the field on what he has failed to do in the way of advertising and what he has wasted by advertising in the wrong way.

Drop Us a Line

Let us hear from you about the territory to which you have to appeal, the seating capacity of your house, the character of your offerings, your net profits and losses and the amounts that you are spending for advertising in newspapers and otherwise. Let us have specimens of the newspaper advertising that you are doing and, where convenient, of that which your competitors are using. We ought to be able to help you a lot.

After years of careful investigation it is the belief of those who have studied the situation in all parts of the country that no exhibitor is getting the maximum patronage who fails to advertise his pictures. There are methods and methods, but the basic principle is the same. The moving picture field without daily newspaper advertising would be like a city telephone system without a directory. A personal search, physical exercise, would finally find you out the number of the phone, but it would be decidedly inconvenient if the number were changing every few days and you had to make the search all over again each time you wanted to communicate with the party. The comparison may be a little far-fetched, but it is true.

"The Great Train Robbery" was the first big success of moving pictures. In many sections of the country the film was exhibited in tents as part of "carnival" organizations or street fairs; in others vacant stores were used for the temporary showing—the plan followed was that of the "freak" that was on tour of the country. There was the same "barker" out in front of the show, the same canvas "scenes," the same atmosphere of the "fakir." Moving pictures were born into public notice in the grand old days when the nickleodeons were in full bloom. No one ever thought of advertising a nickleodeon. Wasn't the tin-pan music and the "gent" out in front with his cane pointing the way enough to attract your attention? As a matter of fact, you never PLANNED to go to a nickleodeon. You merely "dropped in" on your way down the street.

Beginning of Things

To this fashion of affairs, then, the moving picture was born. In most cities the men who owned these penny-in-the-slot wonder houses were the men who became the original moving picture exhibitors. There were few men in the country who believed that the animated film was anything more than a passing novelty and there was little attempt to put the business on a business basis. So far as advertising was concerned that was merely evolved from the painted banners to the gaudy posters, until a moving picture show could scarcely be recognized as such unless the entire front were covered with screaming pictures showing the villain hurling the heroine over the cliff. Then, in the larger cities, the picture shows came in flocks, the main street lined with them.

In those days no one ever started out to go to a particular picture show or to see a specific film. One simply walked down the street and looked over the display and picked one's choice. One picture show was little part of an evening's enjoyment in the cities. One made a round of them, three or four in an evening being nothing exceptional. There wasn't any reason to advertise a moving picture show in those days, everyone thought, for a moving picture show was only a moving picture "show."

Then evolved the popularity of certain players, the familiarity with brand names, and the various changes and growth in the industry with which every exhibitor of today is familiar.

We have recalled here a series of well-known facts because we want the exhibitors to get the psychology of advertising as the basis for a series of talks which will be printed in this department.

What Is Your Policy?

Are you operating your theatre today on the theory that the people of your city or town simply want to see "a moving picture show," that they care nothing whether an exhibitor allows his business to run itself or looks out for their needs, that they are coming to your house largely as a matter of chance? Of course you know that such conditions no longer obtain, but what are you yourself doing to bring the patrons to your house as many times as possible?

Newspaper advertising is one of the greatest agencies—if used with discretion. And its use applies to you whether you are running the biggest theatre in a city of a half million or the only theatre in your community. That is a mighty wide range to cover, but we are going to try to do it here, first addressing these articles largely to the men who are not advertising and who are passing up opportunities to increase their profits. And so, for the time being, we are going to pass by in this particular series the theatres in the larger cities running the biggest attractions, the first-run houses in the principal centers and the leading downtown houses in the important communities. Most of these realize the necessity of advertising, and though we believe that many of them are doing the wrong sort of advertising, we will consider this elsewhere.

Now, Mr. Non-Advertiser, what are the benefits of newspaper advertising to your house?

Following Strong Ideas

First, it has the advantage of the "brand" advertising, the sort of printers' ink that has made Ivory soap and Budweiser beer known to every man, woman and child in the country—to those who don't drink beer, and, we started to say, to those who don't use soap. It keeps the name of your theatre before the possible patrons of your community, no matter whether you are running a neighborhood house that, theoretically, appeals to only the patrons of one section of the city, a downtown house that is running pictures a couple of weeks or months after they have been shown by the first-run theatre, an exhibitor who is located in a city of 50,000, where he has four or five competitors, or the owner of the only theatre in a smaller community.

You may think that because you have the only theatre in the town that everyone knows the theatre is there and that it would be folly for you to advertise it. Let's carry our comparison still further. Everyone in the country knows Ivory soap. Do the makers, accepting that as a fact, act on the principle that everyone is going to buy their product or do they continue to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars a year to keep the name before the public that already knows the name so well?

Constant Advertising Necessary

But, in the second place, you not only have a brand to keep before the public in the name of your theatre, but you have a constantly changing assortment of goods to offer and you are not selling the product that you have to offer because the public NEEDS it, but because you want to convince the public that it is something that they ought to have. No matter whether you are changing your bill once a week or daily, you ought to work on the theory that are you attempting to get every patron in your entire section to see each new bill that you present. Of course you know that you are not going to do that, but this is the only sound theory on which to base the conduct of your house. You know that slides will not reach the patrons who were not in your theatre to see the slides, that your program is not going to carry information to persons who do not get a program, nor, will you reply, does every person read the newspaper, but business experience of the greatest successes in the country shows that more people can be reached at a lesser per capita cost by the local advertiser through the newspaper than through any other media. So through the newspaper you should have your current bill before the public every day, with the name of the star at least. You then not only have placed your brand before your public, but you have supplied each possible patron with a DIRECTORY of your theatre; you have put your wares for each day before him.

Elements to Weigh

In the third place, remember that moving picture advertising of today is not based merely on the worth of that particular space in the paper. Right here there are many elements to be considered, so many that only a few may be suggested. First you have to take into consideration the familiarity of the public of today, through newspaper and magazine reading with the personalities of the players, coming productions and the gossip of the screen world. If you are running at a later date in the larger city the same film that the downtown house has shown weeks before, you have to figure the considerable percentage of people who, for one reason or another, distance, other engagements, or the like, who did not see the picture. If you are located in a small town you have to figure the element of your patrons who have read the big city papers and are waiting to see the film. In all such cases these possible patrons will use the newspaper as a directory.

Finally, a result that will come from your advertising in the daily newspapers is the reading matter publicity that you will get. Practically all of the dailies, with the exception of New York, Chicago and possibly a few other cities, make it a point to give the theatres free reading notices on Sundays and accord the larger advertisers pictures in the "lay out" of local attractions for the week. Many of the newspapers accord the larger advertisers reading notices each day and in the smaller papers the treatment is even more liberal. This is the sort of advertising that you cannot buy, and it is given by the newspapers.

When you stop to consider that some three years ago motion pictures got practically no newspaper space and were hardly mentioned except as freak, and that now many of the newspapers employ high-class men at good salaries and print pages and sections devoted to films, you can quickly see the value of this form of publicity.

It is to your advantage to tie yourself up with the papers that are giving the most attention to moving picture matters, everything else being even. You will find, in most cases, that when the moving picture exhibitor shows the desire to do "his bit" as well as he can afford it that the newspaper will give your house fair treatment and do a great deal beside printing the display advertisement.

PERSONALITY OF SHOWMANSHIP

Are you getting your personality into your business? Are you capitalizing yourself? Are you making yourself your theatre?

Personality does not mean that you must stand in front of your house in a dress suit and smile in gratification at everyone who comes into your house. It means that you must impress your interest in the public, your care for the public, on your patrons.

We know of one man who could scarcely speak the English language. He was, unfortunately, gr uff in voice and unwieldy in physique, yet this man impressed his personality by the class of pictures that he showed, by the manner in which he kept his house in order, in his attention to detail; in short, by the full satisfaction that everyone who paid a dime at his ticket seller's desk secured.

This man could not go out and individually welcome his patrons, but he could present the personality of showmanship, exemplified in giving the public a little more than a square deal. He gave his attention to his business and the public soon came to know that, and so when it came the time that he had to give up the service that he had used ever since he established the house, he was able to carry everyone of his patrons smilingly into the new service without a regret.

YOUR IDEAS AND OURS

PARENTAGE MESSENGER offers a suggestion in the advertising of "Parentage" which ought to go well in the smaller communities. It suggests that the theatre owner go to the milkmen of the city and offer them annual tickets to the local theatre for the privilege of placing on each bottle of milk on a certain morning before the opening date of the picture a tag, which may be secured at a low rate from a local printer, bearing a picture of the "Parentage" baby, and a cheery greeting, starting "Good morning! Are you interested in babies?" and then following this up with your announcement.

The only question with this idea is whether you can get the dairyman to do it. If you can you are bringing the appeal right home to every mother in your city.

RIGHT along this line comes an idea from L. D. Sands, manager of the Sands theatre, Warsaw, Mo. On his opening of the first of his Vitagraph service he had a number of blue ribbons bearing the words "Sands theatre; Vitagraph day." He and his employes went about town pinning them on everyone. He reports an increase of business.

We do not believe that this plan would go well in most communities. We ourselves would rather resent being asked to form a walking advertisement for a theatre and we think that most others, except the children, possibly, would feel the same way about it. But it's a good idea—if it will work.

MANAGER N. P. HYATT of the Orpheum theatre, Webster City, Iowa, has issued the first copy of his program, which will be published weekly. It is about our idea of what a program should be in a town where the theatre can get the merchants of the city to advertise. Mr. Hyatt is evidently paying the cost of his printing with his advertising. The program consists of twelve pages and devotes one page to telling of each day's feature (there is no Sunday bill), a short sketchy account of the production, without attempting to give the plot of the various offerings. It's the sort of a program that will last, because it is one that the patrons will preserve for the week.

WE have before us suggestions from several producing companies on how to advertise their current productions, which were all taken from popular novels. The suggestions range all the way from the usual booksellers' display to tacking up a card in the local library. Of course, the bookseller's part is going to help in the general publicity and is always good, though getting mighty tiresome. Instead of the library suggestion, why not get from the librarians the list of the persons who have taken the volume out of the library and then you will get the real personal touch with the minimum of letter writing?

GENERAL FILM announces a new slide for the O. Henry series which bears the reproduction of a crayon bust of the great story writer, drawn by E. A. Bushnell. The slide ought to carry a special appeal, for the ordinary patrons, though familiar enough with the O. Henry works, haven't the slightest idea of how this painter of present-day foibles and tragedies looked in life. It's not a slur on his memory to admit that there are quite a few of your patrons who have asked: "Who is this fellow, O. Henry, anyway?"

Knowledge and Ideas

ture of your rival. The object of your advertising should always be to build business for the future. Your main object in advertising an advance attraction against your competitor should be to prevent his taking business away from you on that date, and not to draw his business to your house with a poor picture. You will probably find that you have drawn a new customer into your theatre and that you have sent him away believing that you are showing a low average of production.

The Second-Run Man

The situation differs in the case of exhibitors that are showing pictures later and want to take advantage of the publicity that has been secured by the first-run man. At first blush this would seem an unfair advantage, yet the smaller theatre has actually booked the picture and is entitled to any capital that he may be able to make out of the fact. He is simply trying to retain the patronage of his regular clientele.

In one of the principal cities where the theatres are divided into neighborhood and downtown houses, the latter have adopted the policy of throwing on their screens at the same time that first-run houses were showing productions an announcement like this:

> Wait and See "The Pearl of the Antilles" at This Theatre, Friday, November 18

That announcement has the effect of holding the purely neighborhood patronage not only to see the film at the neighborhood house, but at the same time brings the patron to see some other film on the evening that he might otherwise be tempted to go downtown and see the widely advertised picture.

Similarly, it is well for the exhibitors in the smaller towns around a large city to take advantage of the exploitation of a picture in the neighboring metropolis, especially where the city papers have big circulations in the smaller communities. Thus theatres in smaller towns around Boston or Philadelphia would get the fullest value of all that the bigger exhibitor has done. This effect can be obtained by running a slide or a small notice in your local paper that the production will be seen at your house at a certain future date. The future patrons will then follow the publicity in the city papers with more interest and the valuable word-of-mouth advertising is created. When the small town exhibitor begins to advertise the picture for himself he will find that a considerable share of his patrons are already familiar with it.

Local Newspaper Aid

An important result accruing from advance knowledge of your pictures is the aid that you will be able to get from your local newspapers. Even in the larger cities the regular and consistent advertisers will find the newspapers are willing to run little items of news about the stars in coming productions or the productions themselves. In this case the exhibitor must be content to have the newspaper use a few lines about the production without making it a free advertisement by running the name of the theatre and the date. You will find that a three-line squib saying that "Mary Jones will be seen here next as an Irish girl who marries a real English lord in 'Molly Mavourneen'" is the sort of advance matter that you want to get into the paper. If Mary Jones is one of the stars regularly appearing at your theatre you will find the patron ready enough to couple up her appearance with your house. The public does not always need the obvious.

Advance information has many other advantages. There are half a dozen exhibitors in a single city who give careful attention to the followers of particular stars. For instance, where he knows that Mary Jones has a large following among his clientele, he is not only governed by this fact in his bookings, but he carries the same idea into the exploitation. And this need not be an expensive exploitation, for it may simply resolve itself into reminders that Mary is soon to appear in her new production at your theatre. Various managers have worked up lists of admirers of various players and mail out announcements to those they believe will be interested. This, as well as any other personal information system, is of value in building up for the future of the house.

Almost every section has a favorite who was born in that territory and naturally the advertising power of that star is greater. This advance information should enable the exhibitor to capitalize this popularity. If you are booking regularly the pictures of some star who came from your section, watch MOTION PICTURE NEWS and the publicity sent out from the film companies. When you see a news item about her that will interest the public call it to the attention of the local newspaper or use a squib in your program. Again, you need not do the obvious advertising, for the more interest you build up in one of your players the greater your eventual profits are to be.

These are just a few of the ideas that will occur to the exhibitor if he makes an advance study of his pictures. But the greatest benefit from this system of knowing about your productions in advance is that it will give you time to plan for them in advance. One of the most successful exhibitors in the country keeps a record of what each big star does at his theatre, keeps a memorandum of the manner in which he exploited the productions and the mistakes he made. Just as soon as he books another production of the same player he refers to his record and is able to take the fullest advantage of his past experiences.

Experience Helps

Knowledge is the greatest fertilizer for ideas. When you begin gathering this information you will find that you are starting to think about what you will do with the coming production when you do get it. You will find yourself unconsciously discussing it with your patrons, that you are putting a little extra effort on the production.

Especially where the picture requires some special kind of advance treatment, official war pictures to be shown in Cleve- you will be much better prepared to act. As a matter of fact there is rarely a picture with which you cannot do a little extra, that will not bring you a little more money if you get your own interest stirred up in it. You will find that you are taking a new lease on life in the picture game, and the enthusiasm that you are bound to get over your coming attractions will find reflection in what you tell others.

There is still further advantage that will come from this familiarity, for this study will leave you so well informed that you are much less apt to be sold poor features and you will soon find yourself a much better business man. You will be surprised, too, at the little time required for this work.

As we have suggested, you should follow MOTION PICTURE NEWS closely and read all about the programs that you are using or the state rights and independent pictures that you are considering. And when you have actually booked the productions, see that the exchange men supply you with all the advance information that they have and that they give you a list of the cuts, advertising aids and other matter that will be supplied. Every exhibitor has to try a certain number of experiments for himself, but you will soon find just what material you can use.

In case you have booked any picture and have no advance information about it, write to this bureau and we will tell you what you should have had and how to go about getting it when you deal with the same service again. And if you need information about a picture that you are going to show, take your trusty typewriter in hand and let us hear from you. We will probably be able to put you on the right track that will bring money into your box office.

Six Pages Announce Theatre Opening

On the occasion of the opening of the new Empire theatre, Montgomery, Ala., the Advertiser of that city devoted six pages, including advertising and reading matter, to the house. The special section, which was published the morning of the opening day, carried a layout with scenes in the theatre and photographs of Owner N. C. Bell and Manager H. C. Farley.

Practically every concern which has any part in the construction or furnishing the house, various film services, banks and merchants contributed to the advertising. Of course this special section was worked up by the newspaper and at no expense to the management. It is a good idea for the builders of new theatres to bear in mind. Even if your newspaper does not think of the idea, call attention of the advertising man to it. It's a good way to give the new house a slap-bang start.

Airship Announces War Film in Cleveland

Manager Miles of the Miles theatre of Cleveland, O., arranged with an aircraft company to have a Zeppelin fly over the city every day this week at noon. Those who saw it were rewarded with more than just the sight of the machines in motion. Passes were dropped during the flight which admitted the finder to see the first land, "The Tanks at the Battle of Ancre," which was shown all week at the Miles.

Marian Swayne in "The Little Samaritan," a Story of Simple Charm and Appeal

(Art Dramas Five Reel Prouction)

"The Little Samaritan" is the latest Art Dramas offering, featuring Marian Swayne, the clever little screen star who has been seen to such good advantage in other Art Dramas releases. The story was written by Rev. Clarence J. Harris. It was produced under the direction of Joseph Levering by the Erbograph Company for the Art Dramas program. In the supporting cast with Miss Swayne are: Carl Gerard, Lucile Dorrington, Sam Robinson, Bernard Niemeyer, Charles MacDonald, Mrs. Allen Walker and Olive Corbett. There is no attempt at pretense in this story. It is a simple story of everyday happenings carrying with it a touch of delightful appeal, which is bound to find the right spot in the hearts of all who see this charming little actress present the role of Lindy Gray, a little girl of good impulses and an unselfish disposition. The scenes are laid in a small town, inhabited by people who know little of the world excepting the narrow confines of their own little village. They are narrow minded, bigoted, selfish, and everything that goes to make for unhappiness for the ones who try to look on the sunny side of life. Lindy Gray was one of those who saw all the good things in life, and found herself to the bad things—not because she was narrow-minded and wanted to think that the bad things did not exist, but because she wanted them to play no part in her life. Because she is a product of uncertain parentage, she is disliked by the other girls, who, like their parents, have cultivated the selfish views. In the new minister she finds a friend, who understands her and knows that she is far better than the ones who seek to bring her into disrepute. The collection money is stolen, and an old colored man is accused. Lindy feels that he is not guilty, and rather than see him sent to prison she confesses to having stolen the money. The minister feeling that it is about time to expose the bigotry of his congregation, tells the true story, and holds Lindy up as an example of the true Christian.

Marian Swayne, in "The Little Samaritan," will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Miss Minter presents the part of "Charity," a charming little character who, with her brother, called the "Prince," take possession of the home of the millionaire, and demonstrates just how they would entertain in it if they were the sole possessors. It all comes about because Charity and the Prince meet Merlin Durand, the son of the millionaire, whose millions do him very little real good because he is of a miserly turn of mind. He is not in accord with his son's idea of how money should be spent, so that "Sonny" is told to get out into the big world and hustle for himself. "Charity" is all sympathy, and she makes an endeavor to persuade the millionaire miser that he has treated his son harshly. She and the "Prince" invade the old man's library intending to place the matter before him and plead for "Sonny's" cause. When she and the "Prince" arrive they find that the old man has gone out and the servants have taken a night off. She gets a great idea. Why couldn't she invite her friends to the castle and have a night of it? She could. She and the "Prince" invite a vaudeville performer, a burglar and Sam, the "Bum," to be their guests. When the party is at its height, in walks old man Durand. The Prince is acting as master of ceremonies. "Betrayed," a Story of the Border—Miriam Cooper in Role of Senorita

(Fox Five Reel Production)

Miriam Cooper, the pretty, little Fox star, who has had such a rapid rise to stardom on the screen because of her excellent work in some of William Fox's biggest productions, is seen in "Betrayed," a drama of the border. The production was made under the personal direction of R. A. Walsh. Miss Cooper has the role of a senorita. Carmelita Carrito is her name and she lives in sunny Mexico. Three men are in love with the senorita. They have one thought and that is to marry the dashing little senorita who has captivated the hearts of all. Carmelita is an aristocrat even though her fat, indolent father is not the kind that usually passes as a "highbrow." The fame of the great bandit, Leopoldo Juares, has reached the ears of the fair Carmelita and she being of a romantic nature and a lover of adventure was pleasantly surprised to find the bandit an uninvited guest at her home. When the bandit left she found herself thinking of him and sitting by the window she fell asleep and dreamed. Then comes William Jerome, an American army officer. He came to her house in search of the men who had recently made a raid across the border. There was something about the young army officer that kindled the fire of love within her soul. Carmelita's first lover, Pepo, was forgotten. She was to decide between the bandit and the young officer. She writes Jerome a note, telling him to meet her at a designated place. She says that she will be there with Leonoldo and that Jerome is to creep upon him, finish him with a shot and then, she informs him in the note, she will be his. Leopoldo intercepts the note, reads it and then sends it on his way to Jerome. He also has a scheme. He and Carmelita keep the engagement. He makes Carmelita wear his coat and hat. When Jerome arrives, he mistakes Carmelita for the bandit and shoots her. He is captured and shot. Then Pepo comes upon the scene. She awakes from her dream and finds Pepo at the head of a troop of American soldiers. They have surrounded her house and have captured Leopoldo, the dreaded bandit. Ella Hall in Rousing Comedy Drama, "The Charmer"—Miss Hall's Best

(Bluebird Five Reel Production)

The story of how a little girl, left homeless by a disaster at sea, is offered as "capital prize" at a church bazaar raffle and is won by a spinster lady of the "hardshell" variety, is told in this late Bluebird picture with Ella Hall, the little golden-haired girl, whom you have seen in some of Bluebird's best features, in the leading role of Ambrosia Lee, the little orphan. The story was written by J. Grubb Alexander and adapted to the screen by Fred Myton. When this little girl is rescued from the sea by the beach-combers, she is taken to the general store at Penntucket, where the male population deside that she shall be offered for raffle at the church bazaar, and so she is. The prize is won by Cynthia Perkins. Once located in her new home Ambrosia resumes her study of Grimm's "Fairy Tales" and awaits the arrival of her Prince Charming. Don Whitney (James McCandlas) arrives in the town of Penntucket, having been sent there by his mother and father, who were having domestic troubles, the outcome of which is that Mrs. Whitney goes to the divorce courts to settle it all. Ambrosia, the orphan, meets young Whitney, and learning of the trouble his father and mother are having, she writes his father, telling him that the fairies will adjust matters and all will be well. The divorce case goes on. The lawyer for Mrs. Whitney had arranged for a hired corespondent to testify in Mrs. Whitney's behalf, but she failed to put in an appearance at the trial and Ambrosia took it upon herself to be "corespondent" and takes the witness stand. How this little girl is instrumental in patching up a domestic affair to the satisfaction of all concerned and how she brings happiness into her own life, is told in this fire-reel production, "The Charmer," a Bluebird, with Ella Hall in the featured role. Belle Bennett, Martha Mattox, George Webb and Frank McQuarrie are in support.

"The Charmer," with Ella Hall in the featured role will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"Who Was the Other Man?" Story of Mistaken Identity—Francis Ford Featured (Butterfly Five Reel Production) . .

A case of mistaken identity. "Who Was the Other Man?" a picture in five reels, is of the Butterfly brand with Francis Ford and Mae Gaston in the leading roles. Mr. Ford has the dual role of James Walbert and Ludwig Schumann. Both characters meet in a Paris hotel and both are impressed by the same girl, Marion Washburn, the daughter of Senator Washburn of Texas. Schumann is waiting instructions from his government. He is a member of the secret service. He makes inquiries concerning the girl he has seen at the hotel and learns that she is an American on a pleasure trip and about to return home by the next steamer. Herbert Cornell, a young society "fop" of Washington, has asked for the hand of Marion. Marion's father refuses him unless he show that he is capable of bigger things than leading the society show in Washington. Marion's father tells Cornell that if he will undertake to bring certain plans relative to an international canal and place them safely in certain hands, he will consent to his marriage to Marion. Marion has received the good news by wireless and is happy. Her happiness is mistaken as encouragement by Schumann when he sees her at the Paris hotel. He is prepared to address Marion when he sees a stranger enter the hotel, who resembles himself closely. Walbert is his name. As Walbert leaves the hotel desk he is handed a note by a mysterious stranger. The note reads that he is to take the steamer on which a certain young lady is sailing for America. There is also enclosed a photograph. Walbert realizes that he has been mistaken for another. Who was the other man? This question will be answered at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, when Francis Ford and Mae Gaston wil be seen in the latest Butterfly picture, "Who Was the Other Man."

Hobart Henley's Thought Film of Real Life, "Parentage"—Instructive, Entertaining

(Frank J. Seng—State Rights)

Hobart Henley's thought film of real life, "Parentage," deals with a very unusual subject matter. It presents a wonderful cast of carefully selected types. The story of "Parentage" deals with a score of vitally human questions which enter into every one's daily life. These unusual types and these vital, forceful questions have been combined into a dominating, compelling screen drama by Hobart Henley. Mr. Henley presents the featured role. In this production which will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre, more big, vital questions are considered than in any single story ever adapted to the screen. Each of these questions has been smoothly blended into the home-like atmosphere of the offering so that the big truths are made more effective and impressive through being presented as a part of the lives of these human, home-loving, small town folks, who seem to live on the screen. This picture has been kept entirely free from the sensational and sex problems. There are no unreal villains, vampires or seducers. It is a story of real life—the kind of life that is led by thousands and passed unnoticed. It is because the life that is depicted in this drama is so common that it is never called vividly to our attention. You will be surprised how interesting and entertaining so-called common, everyday happenings can be made to appear on the screen. Have you ever asked yourself the question, why some children are "good" and others are "bad?" Are children welcome in your home? Do you realize the influence of your life on that of your children? Are you ask for health rather than for wealth, from the man who wants to marry your daughter? Do you tell your boy about the vital truths of life, or do you allow him to learn them from the boy on the streets? Have you thought that your business standards may affect the business career of your son? Do you realize the effect of environment on children? All these questions will be answered by "Parentage" when it is shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Free Phone Service Given by Indianapolis House

Here is a theatre that believes in giving service to its patrons.

The Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, which has just reopened after having been rebuilt by Barton and Olson, has provided a mezzanine floor where there are located free desks and telephone service. There are also men's smoking rooms and women's rest rooms in the basement.

The free telephone idea is one that is bound to have a big appeal in the larger cities where the custom is to have pay stations. But even in the smaller localities it can be worked out by having a 'phone easy of access to the public. How often are you asked by some patron to use your 'phone? Very likely the instrument is on your desk where you are working, or in the cashier's box or at some other place where it is inconvenient either for yourself or the patron to use.

In the bigger cities the idea of the "free" telephone service is going to make a hit. The ordinary person doesn't like to drop a nickel in the slot to have the privilege of using a 'phone. It is one of the services that he seems to think he should get free and the manager of the big house who accords this sort of service is getting a lot of advertising out of it.

Even if you have a smaller house, why not install a special instrument for the use of the public? Then use a slide telling of the location of the 'phone and the fact that it is for the service of patrons.

Small Town Booking Shows Popularity of Pictures

A striking commentary on the hold which motion pictures have on the people of the country at present is provided by the distributing department of Vitagraph. Out of a batch of contracts which were received at the home office of the company last week six were from towns of less than eight hundred population.

The Bell theatre of Wesley, Ia., a town with 466 residents, booked "The Battle Cry of Peace" for two days, and the same subject was booked by the Electric theatre of Ortley, S. D., for one day. Ortley has a population of only 175 people. The Idle Hour theatre in Eden Valley, Minn., a town of 740 people, also booked this feature for two days.

In Peever, S. D., which has 259 inhabitants, "God's Country and the Woman," a special Blue Ribbon feature released a few months ago by Vitagraph, was booked for the Bailey Opera House for a day, and in Buxton, N. D., which boasts 400 residents, the same feature was booked for a day's run at the Buxton Opera House.

"The Fall of a Nation," the Thomas Dixon spectacle which is being released through Vitagraph, had a two-day run in the Grand Opera House of Chetek, Wis., which has only 700 population.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

William N. Selig's Plans for "The Railroader"

William N. Selig has special plans for the exploitation of "The Railroader" and will announce these to the trade shortly. Wonderful sets of scenery were used in this drama and the cast is described as "all star." George Fawcett in leading role is supported by Thomas Santchi, Bessie Eyton, Fritzi Brunette and others.

The picture is from Albert Payson Terhune's novel "Caleb Conover." A masterful man, engrossed in self, takes everything, leaves nothing, and in the end discovers, when facing a prison term, that there is a divinity that shapes our ends.

Hint of Trouble Over Wm. A. Brady's "Burglar"

Wiliam A. Brady has received the following letter from Alice Kuser of No. 1402 Broadway, New York:

"Having noticed extensive announcements of a forthcoming World picture based upon Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's story, 'Editha's Burglar,' and the play founded thereon, by Augustus Thomas, I should be very glad if you would inform me as to the authority under which you have undertaken the making of this picture, as I represent both Mrs. Burnett and Mr. Thomas in other negotiations to this same end."

At the offices of World Pictures it was stated yesterday that the film rights in "Editha's Burglar," now called "The Burglar," had been purchased in good faith from the owner.

It was asserted further that Mr. Thomas no longer retained any interest either in the play of which he is the author or the right to transfer it to the motion picture screen.

The play is on the regular World program October 22, with Carlyle Blackwell as the star and Evelyn Greeley and little Madge Evans as the "featured" players.

Stunts for English Actress in "Tides of Fate"

Alexandra Carlisle, who plays the star role in the new World-Picture Brady-Made titled "Tides of Fate," is an English actress of celebrity for her rare beauty and surpassing gifts in acting.

Her greatest triumph in London was registered upon her appearance there in the leading role of "Everywoman" some years ago. Last season she was chosen by George C. Tyler for the central personage in "The Country Cousin" during the long run in Philadelphia.

The "Tides of Fate" contains a number of exceptionally thrilling episodes. In one of these a runaway saddle horse upon which Miss Carlisle as the heroine is taking her morning spin plunges from a high cliff into the river, from which she is rescued by "the wrong man."

Blackton Formally Resigns from Vitagraph

Producer Drops Office of Vice-President and Secretary, Holding He Needs All His Time for His Own Studio Work

HAVING completed the taking of scenes for his first production for Paramount, "The World for Sale," a screen version of Sir Gilbert Parker's widely read novel, J. Stuart Blackton has formally resigned as vice-president and secretary of the Vitagraph Company of America, with which he was so long associated.

Commodore Blackton feels that inasmuch as he will henceforth devote all his time to his own productions, he would be unable to properly fill the offices he has held with Vitagraph.

The name of J. Stuart Blackton has been associated with the motion picture business for a good many years and he has been admittedly an authority on production.

In his new enterprise the production of the Blackton pictures, he has achieved something that he believes will prove highly satisfactory to himself as well as enable him to introduce new ideas in artistic effort in film production. The fact that Sir Gilbert Parker, whose works are being translated to the motion picture screen under Commodore Blackton's supervision and personal direction, has been exceedingly complimentary in his references to the scenario of the first picture made by Mr. Blackton, indicates that the latter has already made a splendid start.

Extreme care will be exercised in all the productions from the Blackton studios—care in the matter of investiture, choice of locations, costuming, and particularly in the selection of casts. So many of the characters in Sir Gilbert Parker's novels are "types," as for example that striking figure, Druse, the gipsy king, in "The World for Sale," that it is not easy to find actors to fit the roles. Since nothing but actual perfection will satisfy Commodore Blackton, the hunt for "types" is often a merry chase.

Hand to Hand Fight" in Charles Ray Picture

Charles Ray's first Paramount picture is being produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. The title of the picture is "The Son of His Father," and it depicts the efforts and final success of a rich man's son, Gordon Carbhoy, when he is given five thousand dollars and told to "go to it," by his dad, who has become disgusted with the lad's spendthrift characteristics.

There is a hand-to-hand fight scene in the picture that is said to be the most effective, the most realistic, that has ever been enacted upon the screen.

Mutual in Cleveland Has New Accountancy System

The Cleveland office of the Mutual Film Corporation has installed a new accountancy method that is scheduled to revolutionize the film industry. It is much simpler than the methods previously employed, much more correct, and involves a saving of no less than 25 per cent. of the running expense of the office.

W. E. Lusk, efficiency man for Mutual, and at present in charge of the local office in the Bellmount Building, said that this method alone had involved a saving of a quarter of a million dollars for Mutual for the year 1917.

Rowland, president of Metro; Maxwell Karger, general manager, of the Super-Feature Studio; B. A. Rolfe, general manager of the Meteor Studios at Sixty-first street, New York; and Fred J. Nazimova is now studying the historical atmosphere of the story, written by Mabel Wagnalls, daughter of A. W. Wagnalls, president of the well known book publishing firm of Funk and Wagnalls. The star will have the part of a "daughter of joy" in Paris, regenerated by the influence of the mystic "rose bush of a thousand years," a miracle-performing shrub.

Charles Brabin is directing this picture, which Albert Shelby Le Vino has adapted for the screen.

New Patriotic Picture

"Draft 258," by William Christy Cabanne and June Mathis, is the name of the new patriotic production in which Mabel Taliaferro will have the leading role. "Draft 258" is the successor to Metro's photodrama, "The Slacker," and is being directed by Mr. Cabanne, also responsible for that recruiting drama. Walter Miller, Millicent Fisher, Camilla Dalberg and Eugene Borden are prominent in Miss Taliaferro's support.

Emily Stevens is engaged in the production of a new picture, as yet unnamed, adapted by Mary Murillo from the story by Charles A. Logue. George D. Baker is directing this seven-act production, in which the star has the role of Nan Kennedy, a girl who becomes a crook in spite of herself and becomes involved in a tangle of circumstances. Earle Fox, Frank Currier, Paul Everton and Ricca Allen are among the prominent members of the cast.

For Viola Dana has been chosen Joseph Arthur's old-time success, "Blue Jeans." John H. Collins is directing this production, the screen version of which has been made by June Mathis.

Harold Lockwood has begun work in "Paradise Garden," another "book" story from the pen of George Gibbs. Fred J. Balshofer is directing it. Vera Sisson, seen in "The Hidden Spring," has been engaged as leading woman.

Weekly Drew Comedies Continue

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, creators and co-stars of Metro-Drew Comedies, are just completing a playlet devoted to the subject of food conservation. It is called "The Patriot." Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew will continue to complete one comedy a week.

Mme. Petrova is the star in "The Silent Sellers," a five-part feature production directed by Burton L. King. Included in the cast are Mahlon Hamilton, Violet Reed and Henry Leone.

"Polly of the Circus" Cost Goldwyn $250,000

Money Invested Deliberately to Give Exhibitors a Good Fair Profit — Statement Made Officially by the Company

IT is officially announced that Goldwyn spent $250,000 on "Polly of the Circus," a Mae Marsh play, released September 9. It is stated this was invested deliberately to give exhibitors a profit-making picture. The Goldwyn statement says:

"The statement may be made with complete accuracy that the releasing of so expensive a production to exhibitors at a regular schedule price—the same price as other Goldwyn Pictures that are to follow—is without a parallel in the industry. Such pictures as 'Polly of the Circus,' whether obtained by accident or design, invariably have been separated from a company's other productions and released to exhibitors at advanced rental prices or played directly to the public at higher prices of admission.

"The owners of Goldwyn, watching the growth of Margaret Mayo's immense photo-spectacle, have from the beginning intended to give the exhibitors this and other immense productions which would bring the public flocking into the motion picture theatres—feeling that this policy of liberality would establish Goldwyn more quickly than anything else that might be done. There is no secret psychology in a policy of this kind, for it is merely a sane mercantile system which assumes that patrons who are satisfied with a company's product will return again and again to buy from the same company, providing the goods sold maintain the high standards established at the beginning.

"Here and there persons expert in film affairs have seen 'Polly of the Circus' at projection room showings in New York or Fort Lee, and it has been by no means unusual to hear some of these spectators ask: 'Why should a picture of this magnitude be given to exhibitors at the regular rental prices established for your other Goldwyn productions?'

"One of the great advantages of Goldwyn's careful and cautious production operations, which have been underway for the past ten months, is that the Goldwyn productions that are to follow Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus"—starring Madge Kennedy, Mabel Normand, Maxine Elliott and Jane Cowl—are equally powerful in story, star and quality, and are designed to keep Goldwyn showmen at the very forefront in their communities regardless of the pictures that may be released in other houses on the same dates."

George V. Hobart to Write Scripts for Lasky

George V. Hobart, one of the most successful of American playwrights, has been engaged by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to prepare exclusive screen material for that organization.

Hobart will devote the greater portion of his time to this work and he has already completed at least one original script. He is engaged in writing a highly dramatic photoplay for the Japanese star, Sessue Hayakawa. It is said this possesses an intensity and interest that marks it as a genuine novelty.

Perhaps the greatest success of Hobart's career and his first serious drama was "Experience," a modernized version of the old morality plays, which had its genesis in a five-scene sketch with music written for and staged at one of the famous Gambols of the New York Lambs Club.

Among the plays to his credit may be named "Sally in Our Alley," "The Candy Shop," "Moonlight Mary" and "Our Mrs. McChesney," in collaboration with Edna Ferber, who wrote the stories of the redoubtable female drummer, portrayed on the stage by Ethel Barrymore. This year's "Follies" owes its clever libretto to Hobart.

"Make Cheerful Pictures to Counteract War's Tragedy!"

George K. Spoor, President of Essanay, Calls on Industry to Continue Sharing the Burden of Present Crisis by Giving Happy Diversion to Those Left at Home

A CALL to arms to the producer and exhibitor—a call different and yet aligned with that taking the young manhood of the nation to the battlefield—was issued last week by George K. Spoor, president of Essanay.

His statement, in part, was as follows:

"The motion picture industry, both manufacturer and exhibitor, must, and I know it will, accept its full share of the burden in facing the present war crisis. It has had to give generously of its players, its business heads and its technicians to join the army at the front as have other businesses.

"It remains for those who are left to do what they can to alleviate the conditions under which the world is staggering. Outside of material aid, I know of nothing so much needed, nothing of so great importance, as to furnish the public with enlivening humor.

The Public Demand

"This will entail no sacrifice on the part either of manufacturer or exhibtor, as humor is greatly in demand at all times, but especially now that the nation is giving its sons to the battlefields of France. And what the public calls for is ever worth while.

"It will, however, entail no inconsiderable effort upon the part of the manufacturer, as genuine humor is not easy to find and still harder to develop. But it is well worth the effort, both in the heartening of a depressed public and in supplying something for which there is so great a demand.

"It needs no seer to discern that humor, in both literature and photoplays, is what is most needed to alleviate the tragedies of life and instill a cheer that will help to lighten the burdens of the time. It is up to manufacturers and exhibitors alike to attune themselves to the needs of the public and to supply the want.

"The heavy, the dismal, the tragic, will be banished, or at least will become the exceptional. The public, in times of peace and prosperity, may like to witness tragic situations, to view the elemental in man, to watch the clash of intense emotion, the play of passion. But the war now is furnishing the tragedy. The public is so satiated with the grim and bitter facts that it revolts at the lesser imitations. What it wants from the front is facts, what it wants in motion pictures is recreation.

Essanay's Aims

"Essanay already is striving along this line. It has aimed in the past few months, and still is aiming, to produce not tragedies, but the light comedy pictures, plays that will not depress, but cheer. It has sought for the best humorists to write its plays and the best comedians to present them.

"It is not aiming at slapstick, though this may have its place, but the homey, comedy drama pictures, which carry heart interest, fascinating plots and at the same time a vein of genuine humor, photoplays that present normal life, life sane and real, with all its little touches of humor of the incidents of the everyday world.

"To do this it secured works of such humorists and cheerful fiction writers as George Ade, Henry Irving Dodge, Clarence Budington Kelland, Robert Rudd Whiting, George Barr McCutcheon, Samuel Merwin, Arthur Stringer and many others. Many humorists undoubtedly will be developed, as always during such times, and Essanay is ever on the lookout for them.

Encouraging Production Units

"And Essanay will continue to search for the fascinatingly humorous stories in the best magazines and the books of the day from which to make up its photoplays, not neglecting to encourage similar efforts in its own staff of writers.

"Not least of its efforts has been to develop its players in these lines and to seek others from both the screen and stage. Among its present staff of leading players who have shown a decided bent in interpreting the light comedies are Bryant Washburn, Taylor Holmes, who made such a success in "His Majesty Bunker Bean," Little Mary McAlister and Jack Gardner, of musical comedy fame.

"That Essanay's policy of producing pictures of the light comedy type, pictures filled with humor and comic situations, has been proven correct is shown by the reception of such productions as the three Skinner plays, "Skinner's Dress Suit," "Skinner's Bubble" and "Skinners Baby, "The Golden Idiot," "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," "Filling His Own Shoes," "The Breaker," "Little Shoes," and many others of a similar type."

"Les Miserables" is to be a Fox Picture

William Farnum Is to Have the Part of Jean Valjean—Frank Lloyd to Direct Production—On Standard List

WILLIAM FOX announces a picture version of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" is under way. Work upon it has gone forward for some time at the Fox Studios at Fort Lee.

William Farnum is appearing as Jean Valjean in the classic. Mr. Farnum, Fox says, is infusing into his portrayal a fineness of characterization, a depth of artistry, seldom achieved, and worthy the master figure of literature who wrote the book.

The photoplay is being screened under the direction of Frank Lloyd, who supervised "A Tale of Two Cities." Mr. Lloyd is especially well equipped for the successful transference of "Les Miserables" from the printed page to the screen. Mr. Lloyd feels that he has in Hugo's work a production worthy of the best in him, and this he is giving.

The players supporting Mr. Farnum have been selected with care, and attention also is being given the photography. In the filming of Hugo's classic are required scores of night scenes. Mr. Fox is desirous of producing in "Les Miserables" a drama which shall be the perfection of workmanship, to have the highest artistry to add to the inherent power of the story.

Hugo's composition was many years in the writing and was not published until the author was sixty years of age. In 1862 "Les Miserables" appeared on the same day in ten languages—an event till then unparalleled in the annals of letters. The book really represented the efforts of a life's work. Directly it came before the public, it was acclaimed everywhere a masterpiece.

The three score years which have passed since the publication of "Les Miserables' have brought it more and more praise from critics and laymen.

"Les Miserables" is, without question, the most splendid epic and dramatic piece of fiction ever created or conceived. That is the manner in which Swinburne, the famous poet, described it. It is the epic of a soul transfigured and redeemed, purified through heroism and glorified through suffering; the tragedy and the comedy of life at its darkest and its brightest, of humanity at its best and its worst.

"Les Miserables" will be a William Fox Standard Picture, and the second of the number in which William Farnum will appear.

Charles Miller to Direct Norma Talmadge Pictures

Charles Miller has been engaged by Joseph M. Schenck to direct the Norma Talmadge photoplays. The first will be Grace Miller White's "The Secret of the Storm Country."

Mr. Schenck's attention was called to Mr. Miller by the work he did under the Triangle banner, for Bessie Love in "The Sawdust Ring," for Dorothy Dalton in "The Flame of the Yukon," and for Bessie Barriscale.

Harry S. Northrup has been selected for a prominent part, that of the principal villain, Roger Carmichael, in Edith Storey's first Metro starring vehicle, "The House in the Mist."

Vitagraph Is Active Rival in Serial Field

Albert E. Smith Announces His Company Will Compete with Other Producers of Episode Plays for 52 Weeks in Year

VITAGRAPH is to become an active competitor in the serial field, according to an announcement made last week by Albert E. Smith, president of the company. In making the announcement President Smith said:

"It is not alone my intention to make serials a part of our regular program, but, in fact, we are already working on a second serial which will follow up 'The Fighting Trail.'

"We are not yet prepared to announce the name of the new serial, but I can assure you that, notwithstanding the fact that every one who has seen 'The Fighting Trail' prognosticates that it will set a new high mark of success among serials, we expect that its successor will not alone equal but surpass this record.

"The story is by Cyrus Townsend Brady and myself, and as this is the first time that I have collaborated with the doctor, I am leaving no stone unturned to make our collaboration successful.

"This announcement in itself should set at rest any competitor's statement that we will not have a serial on our program continuously."

Mr. Smith announces that in the future Greater Vitagraph will make enough serials to run fifty-two weeks every year.

Four hundred exhibitors from the Greater New York territory saw four episodes of "The Fighting Trail" at the Strand theatre on Monday and applauded the thrills vigorously.

In the absence of Albert E. Smith and Walter W. Irwin, president and general manager of the company, Nat S. Stronge, publicity director, made the preliminary announcement from the stage and was well received by the exhibitors. Mr. Stronge said that in the opinion of Mr. Smith and Mr. Irwin "The Fighting Trail" is the strongest serial yet produced. They stake their business integrity on this. Mr. Stronge added:

"It is a fact well known to the entire motion picture industry that many serials heretofore produced lose their drawing power after the first few episodes. It was with this fact in mind that Greater Vitagraph deliberately showed the fifth, sixth and seventh episodes, and declared that all exhibitors must see the entire serial before booking it."

Owing to the fact that the trade showing at the Strand theatre had to be limited to two hours, it was impossible to show the entire thirty-one reels of "The Fighting Trail." Vitagraph set a precedent by showing the first episode, which consisted of three reels, and then jumped to the fifth, sixth and seventh episodes, two reels each.

Fox Takes 3,000 to "Palace" in Nigger Slough

William Fox's most recent acquisition is an Egyptian palace in Nigger Slough, south of Los Angeles. On one of the islets, so low that in the wet season it is covered with water, the workers of the William Fox studio built Cleopatra's regal home. From the banks of a stream, they built a stone platform, with broad steps leading up from the water's very edge.

Here the majestic Queen landed from her barge, walked slowly to the landing place above, and amid the cheers of her subjects entered her Palace. The building itself was a massive stone structure, fashioned in the heavy square style peculiar to the Egyptians. Its walls were highly decorated with carven figures and hieroglyphics, painted in the bright reds and oranges of the Pharaohs.

There several weeks ago, 3,000 people knelt in homage to Cleopatra, the Queen. There Theda Bara has been showing the power of her art in the picture she is making.

The inhabitants of Nigger Slough were interested spectators during the entire proceeding.

Juvenile Authority Writing for Universal

Judge Willis Brown, widely known throughout the United States as a juvenile authority and educator, has entered the motion pictures. That is, the founder and first judge of the Utah juvenile courts and the originator of the Boy City movement, has written a number of stories for the screen which are to be produced by Universal.

The first of these stories to be filmed is entitled "Nancy's Baby," in which Violet MacMillan will be starred on the Butterfly program. A series of boy stories will follow.

It is in connection with his Boy City idea that Judge Brown has made the greatest contribution to the advancement of children, particularly boys.

For seven years the judge has conducted a regular city of boys, containing at times as many as one thousand "citizens." The astonishing developments of civic responsibility and adroitness in business displayed by these boys when placed in control of their own welfare has created the keenest interest in educational circles in this country.

Judge Brown is the author of the United States Parental Court bill now in Congress.

James Vincent to Direct Pathe's "Hidden Hand"

"The Hidden Hand," the Pathe four-star serial which stars Doris Kenyon and features Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton, is being directed by James Vincent.

This is the first serial Mr. Vincent has directed and he says he is surprised to find that the atmosphere, sets, story and acting required for a Pathe serial are of the kind that is required for the best features.

He took the part of the juvenile lead in several dramatic productions, among them being "As a Man Thinks," with John Mason, and "The Man Who Stood Still," with Louis Mann. He had the role of Jack Hale in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," and was leading man for Kalem for several years.

"Her Hour," with Kitty Gordon, Waiting Release

The next Kitty Gordon play for World-Pictures Brady-Made will not be published until mid-November. The title is "Her Hour," and it narrates the heart affair of a beautiful stenographer and the boss.

The drama is already completed, but must take its turn upon the far-ahead World schedule.

William Fox Provides "Resuscitation Squad"

"Queen of the Sea" Company, and Annette Kellermann, at Bar Harbor, Me., Have Life-Savers, Muscular and Liquid, Always Ready

IN preparing for the production of the William Fox subsea picture, "Queen of the Sea," with Annette Kellermann, John G. Adolfi, director, and his assistant, John W. Kellette, organized at Bar Harbor, Me., a "resuscitation, first aid and sanitary squad."

In the water scenes hundreds of young men and women take the part of mermen and mermaids. The efficacy of the preparations was proved when a young woman became exhausted and before guards could reach her went down. The pulmotor provided by the director restored her quickly. Had this failed another pulmotor was ready.

In addition to two local physicians who are always within call, a diminutive Red Cross unit is constantly on location. It consists of Miss Eleanor Shields, a trained nurse, skilled in first aid treatment, and a complete supply of requisites for minor injuries. In addition there is a late model stretcher for the transportation of those too badly injured to walk.

The picturesque rocks which abound in Bar Harbor are extremely treacherous and in addition to being slippery as glass at the water's edge, are covered with barnacles which are sharper than the proverbial serpent's tooth. A fall does not always mean a broken limb, but it is certain to result in numerous razor-like cuts and scratches.

There are torniquets, bandages, adhesive plaster and restoratives always on the location. In addition the trained nurse keeps a supply of hot coffee and tea, as well as blankets, on hand to give to chattering mermaids and mermen when they come from the icy waters.

Bar Harbor is amazed at the endurance of the mermaids and mermen. They remain in the cold water for hours, while even the native here cannot remain in more than a few minutes.

During the work here six seven-passenger automobiles and four immense motor trucks have been in use to transport the company to and from their hotels and the location. A number of horses are used in "Queen of the Sea," and Miss Kellermann is carried on one of them. To prevent the possibility of accident one of the most expert horsemen of the country was brought on from the West to do about three minutes' riding.

Norma Talmadge to Have Charles Miller's Direction

Charles Miller, who for two years directed many of Triangle's greatest productions, has been engaged by Joseph M. Schenck to direct the Norma Talmadge photoplays. The first effort of Mr. Miller's new affiliation will be Grace Miller White's "The Secret of the Storm Country," on which Miss Talmadge will begin work next week in Ithaca, N. Y., where the original scenes of the story were laid.

Mr. Schenck's attention was called to Mr. Miller through the work he did under the Triangle banner, for Bessie Love in "The Sawdust Ring," for Dorothy Dalton in "The Flame of the Yukon" and for Bessie Bariscale.

Mackenzie Directs "Seven Pearls"

Announcement is made of the fact that Donald Mackenzie, the director of "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Shielding Shadow" is now directing the new Pathe serial "The Seven Pearls" starring Mollie King and Creighton Hale.

As five episodes were already completed at the signing of the contract between Astra and Mr. Mackenzie, he took up the direction starting with the sixth, and his arrangements call for the completion of the series.

Studio Leased for Petrova—Two Stories Chosen

Production of First Subject Begins Sept. 3 at Old Biograph Studio—George Irving Selected as Director—Unique Contract Insures Good Plays

PETROVA PICTURE COMPANY, the organization that will produce and market Mme. Petrova's personally supervised pictures, announces that the actress has leased from Lewis J. Selznick the Biograph Studio, New York City, until arrangements have been completed for a permanent Petrova studio. The production of the first picture will begin early in September.

Mme. Petrova has selected George Irving to direct her first picture. Mr. Irving was chosen because of his work in the direction of "The Witching Hour," "Jaffray," and "Raffles."

Two stories are now being prepared for production. One is written by Mme. Petrova, the other is a popular novel said to be full of dramatic situations. These two stories will be the first and second Petrova pictures. Both will be in seven reels. Decision will be made within a week as to which of these stories will be produced first.

Since the announcement to the trade of Mme. Petrova's intention to produce her own pictures, it is stated that four big releasing companies have made advance offers for her productions. The policy of the company is to confine its efforts at present solely to making the picture, leaving the distribution for later settlement, but in view of the big offers now being received, on which advance payments of $100,000 have been tendered, the company may decide that it is to its advantage to make an early decision.

An interesting feature of the arrangement between Mme. Petrova and Frederick L. Collins, president of Petrova Picture Company, is that unless both approve of the picture it will be "scrapped." In case one or the other disapprove of the completed picture, it is agreed that Mme. Petrova will freely devote her time to the making of a picture to replace it, and that Petrova Picture Company will contribute the necessary money. So far as is known this is the first motion picture contract in which appears a clause embracing this insurance of excellence to exhibitor and public.

Mme. Olga Petrova Now Heads Her Own Film Organization, the Petrova Pictures Co.

Goddard Calls Pathe's "Seven Pearls" Best Yet

Charles W. Goddard, who wrote Pathe's latest serial, "The Seven Pearls," is quoted as having said it is better than any of its predecessors.

In collaboration with Paul Dickey, actor-playwright, Mr. Goddard has written plays, including "The Misleading Lady," "The Ghost-Breaker," "The Last Laugh," "The Man from the Sea," "Miss Information." Probably the most successful of these was "The Misleading Lady," which played continuous for seven months at the Fulton theatre in New York City, and has been playing for more than a year at the Playhouse in London.

The successful motion pictures that Mr. Goddard has to his credit are "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Goddess," and others.

Sally Crute with Viola Dana in "Blue Jeans"

Sally Crute has been engaged to play Sue Eudaly in a Metro play, "Blue Jeans," with Viola Dana as star.

Sue Eudaly was a vampire in the days before there were any vampires, formally so-called. Her principal work for Metro has been done as Mrs. Gaden, the adventuress, in "A Wife by Proxy," with Mabel Taliaferro, and as Mary in "The Beautiful Lie," a screen version of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem, "A Reverie in a Station-House."

Intestinal Indigestion Won't Keep Chapin Idle

Benjamin Chapin, the "Lincoln man," was attacked with intestinal indigestion and ordered by Dr. James Adams Newsom, specialist, to stay in bed a few days.

When Dr. Newsom called the next day he was amazed—and just a little bit angry—to find Mr. Chapin propped up in bed in a conference on selling plans for the cycle of Lincoln photoplays.

Go to Mark Twain's Old Home for Scenes

Scenes in "Tom Sawyer," Jack Pickford and Louise Huff's next Paramount production, will be taken in the very locality where Tom lived nearly seventy years ago. The Pickford-Huff company have betaken themselves to Hannibal, Mo., where Mark Twain lived as a boy, and they will spend the next few weeks in taking the scenes for the story of "Tom Sawyer."

Mark Twain seventy years ago used to play hooky most of the time from school, so that he could explore the cave.

The scenes of the book are nearly all laid in the vicinity of Hannibal Cave and along the river, busy in those days with the traffic from the South, but today only a broad stream whose romantic days ended with the advent of the railroad.

Tom Sawyer, Played by Jack Pickford, for Paramount

Boys of all ages, from ten to ninety, will welcome the advent of Tom Sawyer, the immortal boy, in motion pictures and the much-loved juvenile hero, who seems to symbolize the real boy character as no other has ever done, will strut bravely across the screen when Jack Pickford portrays the character in his forthcoming Paramount production.

The fact that Louise Huff, the other member of the famous "kid" duo, will interpret Becky, is assurance, it is stated, that these two principal figures will be rendered to the last degree of perfection.

Ethel Clayton Overwhelmed by Her Daily Mail

New World-Pictures Brady-Made in which Ethel Clayton assumes the star roles are "The Woman Beneath," "The Dormant Power" and "Easy Money," all of which will be published betwen the present time and the opening week of December.

Miss Clayton's popularity with World fans has gone with great momentum.

Herbert Brenon Will Film "Empty Pockets"

Believing Mystery Melodrama Is Picture Theme of the Day, Live-Wire Director Picks Story from Pen of Rupert Hughes

THE success of "The Lone Wolf," convinces Herbert Brenon that the mystery melodrama is the picture theme of the day, except for a historical spectacle such as his "Fall of the Romanoffs." That is why he has selected "Empty Pockets," from the pen of Rupert Hughes for his next Selznick picture.

"Empty Pockets" is a story of crime, and the plot hinges around the most terrible of all crimes, murder. Properly handled, there is nothing that sustains the interest of a reader or of an audience like a murder story. Mr. Brenon feels confident that when his picturization of Mr. Hughes' thrilling novel is released, it will prove even more interesting to lovers of the plays of the screen than "The Lone Wolf" or any of the other films having murder for their theme.

Although he is still working on "The Fall of the Romanoffs" for its initial showing at the Ritz-Carlton on September 6th, Mr. Brenon has begun to direct "Empty Pockets," at his Hudson Heights studio. He has gathered together a cast of unusual strength.

The story has nearly a dozen characters of importance. This is to Mr. Brenon's liking. He has no use for the star system save in rare instances, such as Nazimova in "War Brides." He likes production that requires half a dozen or more people of more than average acting ability, but that has no one part that overshadows all others.

Vivian Rich New Member of Universal Company

Vivian Rich, one of Universal's latest acquisitions, is at present playing opposite Neal Hart in a five-reel feature entitled "The Bumble Bee."

Among the notable features in which she has appeared are "Holly House," "Pastures Green," and "The Little Troubadour," in all of which she played leads. Miss Rich also appeared opposite William Farnum in "The Price of Silence."

Vitagraph Signs Washington Square Players

Miss Alice Rodier, a member of the Washington Square Players during last season, has been signed on a contract by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and henceforth will be seen in Greater Vitagraph features. Miss Rodier, described as a petite young girl and an attractive blonde type, played the role of Edme in "Plots and Playwrights," the Washington Square Players' satire which was part of the repertoire at the Comedy theatre. She has had considerable experience in motion picture work, having played in the O. Henry pictures.

Frederick Rath at Work on Another "Crook Play"

Frederick Rath is at present completing the continuity on a five-reel Art Drama which the Apollo Company will produce. The play is a mystery story of crooks and detectives, and is said to contain some unusual situations.

Triangle Is to Exploit Facts—Not Fancies

H. O. Davis Holds That Production Activities of Studios Are as Important as Stars, Writers and Directors, in Publicity

STRICT adherence to facts and constructive exploitation that will keep public and exhibitor alike informed of production activities in studios and plans will be the keynote of future Triangle publicity, according to a new policy outlined by vice-president and general manager H. O. Davis, of the Triangle Film Corporation.

After an exhaustive study of various advertising methods and the results obtained by them, Mr. Davis has concluded that both purveyor and consumer are more interested in the quality of the wares and means used to attain a high standard of film product than in the units that compose the whole. He maintains that even a harmonious combination of the efforts of writer, director and actor is not complete without the further blending of hundreds of additional producing and distributtng details which are of equal importance to exhibitor and public.

According to Mr. Davis, advertising of stars and individuals will not be eliminated, but they will be subordinated to the finished production and the exploitation of the brand under which they exhibited. In other words, Triangle's advertising and publicity will concentrate upon the effort to convince both exhibitor and public that Triangle pictures are well worth selling and seeing regardless of the performers who make up their component parts. Casts will be selected for their ability to play roles assigned rather than for their individual fame or personal reputations, and no whim of star or director will be permitted to interfere with the quality on the screen.

"The newspapers and magazines have fought this fight in the past," said Mr. Davis, "and I think it behooves film producers to profit by their experience. We buy a publication on its merit and because it has earned the reputation of stability and consistent worth, and not necessarily because an individual is its editor or a contributor to its editorial pages. If we are enabled to enjoy the handiwork of a celebrated writer, incidentally, so much the better, but no publisher nowadays permits his fate to rest in the hands of uncertain individuals.

"Triangle's reputation and the appeal of the Triangle standard to both public and exhibitor must be upheld by and based upon consistent perfection of quality. The Triangle Film Corporation will be among the leaders of the industry when probably none of the individuals in the organization will be in existence, so we must build for permanent reputation and not for temporary fame of individuals."

Mary Roberts Rinehart Story for Paramount Play

There are, probably, few writers, particularly women, who have covered so large a field in their work as has Mary Roberts Rinehart, author of the famous "Sub-Deb" stories in the Saturday Evening Post, which will be interpreted upon the screen by Marguerite Clark in a series of Paramount productions. The first of these, a September release, will be "Bab's Diary."

Mary Roberts Rinehart made probably her first great success with mystery tales, and she rapidly evidenced that she was as great a mistress of the cause celebre as others who were already famous in that direction.

"Vic," as King, Picked Like a Cinderella

Victor Moore will release August 27 his newest comedy, entitled "The Cinderella Husband." It is based on the idea of the fairy tale, altered by Thomas J. Gray.

"Vic" is discovered in the opening scene at the washtub in the kitchen working his head off. It happens that there is a carnival in the town and the queen of the carnival is to pick her own king. Every man present is to put one of his shoes in the basket, and the queen, blind-folded, will pick out a shoe. Whoever the shoe fits will be the king of the carnival.

The "picking of the shoe" takes place and as luck would have it the queen picks "Vic's" shoe, much to the disgust of Mrs. "Vic" and her brother. "Vic" is made king, and from this scene on his troubles multiply thick and fast, caused by the wicked brother-in-law. In the end, however, "Vic" works it out so he lives happy ever after.

Author and Star See "Polly of the Circus"

"Polly of the Circus," Goldwyn's Mae Marsh play, to be shown first time in New York at the Strand theatre September 9, was run in the projection room recently before Margaret Mayo, who wrote it, and Mae Marsh, who was in the star role, and both were delighted.

Others present were Miss Marsh's mother, Mabel Normand, Joseph M. Schenck, Nicholas Schenck, Albert C. Wegman, William Moore Patch, A. S. Aaronson and Goldwyn's New York executives.

When the last fade-out had been flashed on the screen everyone present burst into applause for the star, the playwright, the cameraman, the director and for everyone who had a hand in its success.

Unusual Interest Attaches to Paramount Serial

First Production of Kind Released by Concern—Is Mystery Story by Anna Katherine Green—Kathleen Clifford Stars—October Releases

OCTOBER will witness the first release of a serial by Paramount. This will be a mystery-drama, starring Kathleen Clifford, vaudeville and musical comedy favorite, and is said to be of the most thrilling type. Anna Katherine Green, noted as a writer of mystery stories, is the author.

This serial is the first story Mrs. Green ever has written for motion picture production. It is not a dramatization of any of her previous works but a brand new tale with the Anna Katherine Green tangles and apparently unsolvable secrets. It will not be published in book form until after the release of the final episode. Exhibitors are thus protected so that the public can learn the details of the final twist in the plot only by seeing every episode through to the end.

Paramount is using every effort to make its first serial the finest production of its kind ever offered to exhibitors. The fifteen episodes are nearly completed and none will be released until it has passed every test and has met every requirement demanded by every Paramount picture. Each foot of film will be edited and re-edited, titles—all hand lettered—will be checked and revised and special trailers will be devised.

This serial will not be rushed upon the market. It is announced that, in order that there shall be no hurry in production, so that the exhibitor will not be forced to show pictures that have been rushed helter skelter through the process of production, the release date of the new Paramount serial will be nearly two months after the last print leaves the studio.

The title of the serial has not been selected. It will be announced shortly. Mrs. Green has not yet written the final chapter of the story and only she knows the final twist that will solve the many complications into which she has thrown her interesting characters.

Special service of most thorough nature will be given by Paramount exchanges to all exhibitors booking it. The advertising campaign will be of unusual extent.

Mrs. Green is the author of such famous mystery stories as "The Leavenworth Case," "Behind Closed Doors," "That Affair Next Door," "The Circular Study," "The Filigree Ball" and "Initials Only." Her most recent work, before the story that Paramount is serializing, is "The Mystery of the Hasty Arrow," which will be published in the fall.

Kathleen Clifford, star of the serial, is one of the tiniest actresses in motion pictures—and said to be one of the bravest. She was chosen for the first Paramount serial because she was one of the few actresses with genuine dramatic talent who actually possessed athletic ability and a daredevil spirit.

Sisters on Screen for First Time in Selig Skit

Fritzi Brunette and Bessie Eyton will in the forthcoming feature, "The Still Alarm," be seen for the first time in the relationship of sisters.

They have appeared together in four consecutive films, usually in the roles of rivals in love, but never on friendly terms. As Fritzi and Bessie in real life are the very best of friends, they are welcoming this opportunity to like one another "on" as well as "off."

Night Scenes—Real Ones—In "Behind the Mask"

In "Behind the Mask" the U. S. Amusement production, starring Catherine Calvert and released by Art Dramas, there are several night scenes which are said to be of surpassing beauty. One of these shows a searching party, all carrying torches, roaming through the mountains seeking the heroine. The picture was taken in the Adirondacks, where the story is laid.

Chapin Tells How It Feels to Be Hailed as a Lincoln

BENJAMIN CHAPIN, who is producing the Lincoln cycle of photoplays, after three years experience wearing a beard like that of the famous president, tells how it feels to look like Lincoln.

He says:

"I was showing in my projection room at the studio some of the first scenes taken for the Lincoln Cycle. One little girl had climbed on my lap and seemed completely lost as she watched the sreen until a close-up view of my face appeared. Then she said:

"'Why don't you grow a beard instead of using a make-believe one?'

"Now the strange coincidence lies in the fact that Abraham Lincoln started on his journey to Washington cleanly shaven as he had always been. A little girl, held up to greet the president-elect, coyly told him that he would be real handsome if he wore a beard. We all know that he immediately acted upon her suggestion, and the result is now well known.

"It is among those who actually lived in Lincoln's time that one hears and sees the most interesting things when the Cycle pictures are being presented. The "Call to Arms" was shown in honor of our Civil War veterans. When they saw my portrayal of their own beloved president on the screen, one by one, they gradually bent forward in their seats as though fearful of missing something on the screen and soon gave audible approval."

Rosemary Theby Signed for Universal Comedy Series

ROSEMARY THEBY has recently signed a contract with Universal to appear in a series of comedies with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. This will be the second time that Miss Theby has appeared under the big "U" banner.

Previous to her recent connection, she appeared in a series of comedies under the direction of Harry Myers which gained wide popularity. Miss Theby may also be featured to dramatic roles after she has completed the work already laid out.

Rosemary Theby came to New York from St. Louis in her early teens and invested all of her ready cash in a course at a school of acting, adding a post-graduate course in pantomime.

At the end of her course she made a week's tour of the theatrical offices in vain, and then gave willing ear to a friend who suggested the movies. As a result, Rosemary found herself on the payroll of the Vitagraph next day. Though very young, she was extremely conscientious in her work, and her progress was rapid. Within a month or two she was being featured in big productions.

In many of her roles she utilized her marked ability as a character dancer, and also won distinction for the originality of her costumes. In one of her best remembered characterizations filmed during her previous connection with Universal, Miss Theby took the part of a Hawaiian beauty, dancing the first "hula-hula" filmed.

Olive Thomas Creates New Broadway in Play

Production work was finished this week at the Culver City plant of the Triangle on a drama of New York life and Western adventure in which Olive Thomas will star under direction of Lynn Reynolds.

The name of Miss Thomas' new piece is "Broadway, Arizona," and the action of the story is all that the name implies. Miss Thomas plays the part of an actress who achieves sensational popularity on the "gay white way" and is later compelled to create a Broadway for herself when failing health banishes her to a Western desert town.

The exterior scenes of the production were filmed in the Big Bear Lake country in southern California, famed for its beautiful scenery.

Texas Guinan Is Latest Accession to Screen

Texas Guinan has deserted the stage for the studio and will shortly be featured in Triangle pictures.

During four seasons Texas was the favorite star of the Winter Garden shows, appearing in imitations of Jane Cowl, Laurette Taylor, Elsie Janis and Eva Tanguay. So accurate were her impersonations that they became a regular feature of the big revue. Her favorite creation, however, was the role of "The Merry Widow," which she played in New York and on tour.

The title of Miss Guinan's first picture has not yet been announced. She is at present engaged in learning the requirements of acting before the camera at the Culver City Studio and has already become a great social favorite in the film colony.

Kin of English Nobility in Photoplay

Eileen Dennes, last seen on the stage in Raymond Hitchcock's musical offering, "Betty," has a role in "The Unforeseen," in which Olive Tell is starred for the Empire All Star Feature Corporation. Her real name is Cowan, and she is the daughter of the late Lieut.-Col. Amherst Cowan, R. A. M. C., who was a cousin of the late Lord Amherst of Didlington Hall, Norfolk. Her uncle was Brigadier-General Lye, D. S. O., who was in command of the British troops in Mesopotamia, and who died as a result of wounds received in action there.

Though on the stage only three years, Miss Dennes has had a varied career. A little over two years ago she was a boarding-school miss in her native city of Dublin, but, tiring of the prosaic life, she up and left one day and went on the stage.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS spoke of Miss Tell as a Mutual star last week. More properly she is an Empire All Star Feature Corporation star, though pictures in which she is screened are released through Mutual.

No Poor Titles in Rex Beach Pictures, Says Beach

Rex Beach is at work on the preliminary details of his next picture for Goldwyn, the title of which will soon be announced. Mr. Beach is at his home on Lake Hopatcong. He said:

"The most capable of film editors err by missing the spirit of a picture and turning out titles of a tone—a literary tone—in discord to the tone of the story. Some are serious when they ought to be humorous and funny when they ought to be serious. Others are even ungrammatical."

Le Saint, Again Universal Director, Starts Play

Director E. J. Le Saint, who produced a number of pictures a year ago for the Universal, has rejoined that company and has started work on the filming of "The Man of God," a Western story by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton of the Universal writing staff.

Stella Razeto, well-known screen actress, who in private life is Mrs. Le Saint, will be behind the camera as co-director.

William Stowell will be intrusted with a prominent part in this picture, as will also daring Helen Gibson of "railroad" series fame. Hector Dion and Mildred Davis, Betty Schade and Millard Wilson.

Enid Bennett's First Ince-Paramount Production

It is whispered that a final selection for the first Paramount picture starring Enid Bennett, the charming little Australian actress, has been made at the Thomas H. Ince studios, in California. It is furthermore reported that the story is one embodying all of those qualities which are most eminently suited to the capabilities of the star.

Vivid Limelight on Mrs. Castle, Pathe's Star

Brooklyn Eagle and Albany Knickerbocker Run Four Column Articles While Publications Everywhere Sound Her Praises

PROBABLY more newspaper and magazine space has been devoted in the last few years to Mrs. Vernon Castle, so Pathe says, than to any one person except Woodrow Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt and Kaiser Wilhelm.

Such papers as the Brooklyn Eagle and the Albany Knickerbocker Press for instance, print four column articles with illustrations on Mrs. Castle's views as to war's effect on American women.

The New York Telegram devotes two columns to a picture and article about Mr. and Mrs. Castle's visit to the Pathe Studio. The St. Louis Star gives the famous couple front page position with a two column cut.

The Baltimore American, chronicling her coming appearance as a Pathe star calls her in its headline "The Best Known Woman in America" and says: "Her youth, beauty, charm and grace were widely recognized before she appeared in motion pictures but she has proved her right to be considered a screen artist of first rank."

The Pittsburg Leader says: "Mrs. Vernon Castle whose dash, grace, charm and picturesque personality have won her fame and fortune, is a Pathe star and has proven her popularity in this city."

The Birmingham Alabama News says: "Through her new contract with the house of Pathe, Mrs. Vernon Castle becomes one of the highest paid artists on the screen."

The Seattle Times says: "Chances are the stage will have to suffer through another season without the magnetic personality and nimble limbs of Mrs. Vernon Castle. She will, however, we are glad to say, be seen in Pathe pictures."

After having interviewed Mrs. Castle and seen part of one of her pictures, an important writer of the Newark Call said: "There is a big underlying theme in this picture. It is a strong story in which Mrs. Castle does the dramatic and emotional acting."

The Wilmington Star says: "That newspapers, exhibitors and public want the news of Mrs. Vernon Castle's activities, can be seen by the great number of inquiries received at this office. Theatre men from all sections express their belief in Mrs. Vernon Castle's drawing power as a screen star."

Marion Davis Remains in Pictures—Chooses Next Subject

MARION DAVIS is in motion pictures to stay. At least the young star, who left the cast of "Oh, Boy!" at the Princess theatre, New York, several weeks ago to make her film debut in her own story, "Runaway Romany," has decided not to return to the musical comedy stage for the present and this week begins work on her second photoplay.

Following the completion of "Runaway Romany," which is now nearly ready for Broadway showing, Miss Davies went to the mountains for a brief vacation, intending to resume her part in "Oh, Boy!" But last week she came back to see how she looked in motion pictures and was convinced she had a promising career in photoplay if she wanted to pursue it. She surprised the officers of the Ardsley Art Film Corporation by announcing her change of heart and they immediately submitted to her several scenarios by authors of reputation who are familiar with her stage career and see in her a fine type for the screens.

After going over the scenarios Miss Davies eliminated all but two, then finally she selected the medium for her second picture and is now up Long Island Sound filming the first scenes. It is announced that the company to be seen with Miss Davies in the new play, when completed, will be equal in ability to the players who appeared with her in "Runaway Romany." This company included Joseph Kilgour, Pedro de Cordoba, Matt Moore, Ormi Hawley, Gladden James and Boyce Combe.

Initial Artcraft Plays For Two Stage Stars

Next Offerings Are "The Woman God Forgot," with Geraldine Farrar, and "Barbary Sheep," with Elsie Ferguson in Lead

WALTER E. GREENE, president of Artcraft, announces the next offering under this trade mark will be Elsie Ferguson's initial photoplay, "Barbary Sheep." Geraldine Farrar's first Artcraft picture, "The Woman God Forgot," is being staged.

Mr. Greene said:

"Elsie Ferguson has performed her initial screen characterization with a result that exceeds even our own highly optimistic expectations. Upon viewing the first hundred feet of Miss Ferguson's first motion picture effort several months ago, I was particularly happy to see with what truly wonderful effectiveness this beautiful star of the spoken drama transferred her great art to the screen.

"The fact that Miss Ferguson is one of the most beautiful as well as talented actresses of the stage, of course did not necessarily mean that she would prove equally effective in motion pictures. Many well known favorites of the spoken drama have found to their great surprise that on the screen they were an entirely different person. But not so with Elsie Ferguson.

"Immediately upon seeing her first few scenes on the screen we realized the fact that if anything, this popular stage star was far more acceptable as a motion picture actress. We confidently feel that as a result of her own ability of adapting herself to motion pictures and the masterwork of Maurice Tourneur, her director, 'Barbary Sheep' will not only mark the triumphant film debut of this charming actress, but will instantaneously establish her as a favorite in the hearts of the patrons of high-class picture plays."

In "The Woman God Forgot," the Farrar picture, one of the elaborate scenes discloses the largest aviary in the world, especially built for this film. A number of views present the huge private swimming pool and garden of Montezuma's daughter. The garden and pool were enclosed in a wire netting 50 feet high and 400 feet long to prevent the escape of thousands of rare birds which filled the foliage.

Last week Director De Mille took a company of 200 people by special train into the Yosemite. This is the first time in the history of the photodrama that an organization of this size has been taken such a distance for the filming of a small number of scenes, but Mr. De Mille was convinced that in no other spot could the same effect be secured. The beautiful natural scenery of this locale, it is felt, readily repaid the producers for the expense of this trip.

In building the gigantic pyramid, the highest set ever used in a motion picture, a force of 500 carpenters and stone masons were busy nearly two weeks working night and day. This one set covers an area of over two square miles and is the site of an immense battle in which a thousand persons take part. The interior views of an Aztec temple also offer novel scenes, the huge sacrificial room with its flaming altar being reproduced in the exact size of the chamber in which the High Priest sacrificed his human victims to the Aztec Gods.

William Fox Presents "Standard Pictures"

"The Spy," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "The Honor System," and "The Conqueror" May Be Seen First and Then Booked

WILLIAM FOX announces his group of Standard Pictures which may be booked by the exhibitor after he has seen them for himself. The plan is an expression of Mr. Fox's idea of the best practical way to convince theatre owners of the faith he has in his product.

There are now available for exhibitors four Standard Pictures. These are "The Spy," revealing in melodrama the workings of the vicious German secret agents in this country; "Jack and the Beanstalk," the Fox fairy film of 1917, with more than 1,300 juvenile mummers; "The Honor System," a cinemelodrama, and "The Conqueror," based on the romance of Sam Houston's life.

The photo-dramatization of the great Texan's struggles will take the screen at the Globe immediately after "The Spy" has finished the fortnight's engagement, to which it has been limited. "The Conqueror" is the first of the William Farnum series of productions just as "Jack and the Beanstalk" is the initial release of the Fox Kiddies.

Exhibitors will also be able soon to book "Babes in the Wood," the second of the Fox Kiddie features, and others, including "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," "The Brownies," "Mikado," "Pinafore," and "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland." The eight light comedy dramas starring Jane and Katherine Lee will be part of the Standard Pictures.

The first of the Theda Bara pictures will be "Cleopatra." This will be followed by "Camille."

Following "The Conqueror" in the William Farnum series will come the drama, "When a Man Sees Red," from the story by Larry Evans; a film version of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables," an adaptation of Ralph Connor's "The Doctor," and many more.

The Fox Special Features can be booked now. These are released once a week and star George Walsh, Virginia Pearson, Gladys Brockwell, Miriam Cooper, June Caprice, Dustin Farnum and Valeska Suratt.

Too Much Accuracy in Tom Mix's Scene

Tom Mix, cowboy and star of Fox Film Comedies, will be picking up things with his lift hand for several weeks.

Tom was before the camera in a barroom scene. As he stood with the right foot on the rail and the right hand on the glass of firewater, the villain was to enter and shoot the glass from his hand.

"Make it close," Mix instructed the marksman.

The shooter made it closer than that.

Mounted Police for Pickford in San Francisco

Mary Pickford approached her automobile to go on location in San Francisco, and found it surrounded by a cavalcade of mounted policemen. The lieutenant informed her that Mayor Rolph had heard of her arrival in the city to do some work and had provided the police for her protection during her stay in the city.

Wherever Miss Pickford goes to film scenes she is immediately recognized and surrounded by huge crowds, which quite frequently interfere with her work.

"The Conqueror" Not Sam Houston's Life—Exactly

R. A. Walsh, who staged "The Conqueror," a new William Fox production, provided for a line following the main title to read "Not founded on fact." This is because the play does not follow the life of General Sam Houston in all respects.

Eliza Allen, as portrayed by Jewel Carmen, is historically true. Houston married her in 1829, when he was thirty-six years old, and she left him three months later. No cause was discovered for the separation.

It is true, too, that Houston returned to the Indians after the separation from his wife. There was no reconciliation, however. It remained for Walsh and Henry C. Warnack to devise a compact drama which would end happily for all concerned.

Brenon Finds Kerensky's Double in New Rochelle

Herbert Brenon has at last found a man who is enough like Alexander Kerensky, the "Man of Iron" in Russia, to pose for the role in "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

His name is W. Francis Chapin and he lives in New Rochelle. He is not a Russian, but his resemblance to Kerensky is so startling that the Russian Premier seems to have stepped from the Sunday photogravure sections right to the Brenon screen. Mr. Chapin has been posing before the Brenon camera for the past week and with the taking of his scenes the big feature will be ready for assembling.

Selznick Trailers to Show Players at Work

Selznick Pictures announces a novelty in the shape of "trailers" that are to go out with each future production. These are to be called "Little Journeys to Selznick Picture Studios" and will include flashes of coming productions, but in addition will give scenes in the studios, showing the stars and directors at work and bringing out the intimate side of their profession.

William Fox Gives "Baby Grands" Good Support

Part of the cast has been selected for the first of the series of Standard Pictures which Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox "Baby Grands," are to make.

Richard Turner, William T. Hays, and Robert Vivian have been chosen for leading roles. Mr. Vivian appeared in "Little Miss Happiness," "The War Bride's Secret," "Romeo and Juliet," and "The Scarlet Letter."

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Popular "U" Serial Star in Butterfly Feature

Francis Ford, director and star of "The Purple Mask," "The Broken Coin," and other popular serials, will have the featured part in the new Butterfly picture, "Who Was the Other Man?" released September 3. Mae Gaston will be seen in the role opposite Ford.

"Who Was the Other Man?" is described as a rapidly moving story of international intrigue in which Ford plays a dual part. Jessie Lowe and William Parker are the authors of the script, which has been directed by Ford with his customary vigor of treatment.

The plot revolves around the test put to a young man who becomes engaged to the daughter of a United States Senator. He is brought into a strange maze of circumstances, when intrusted with a mission designed to show his mettle, but emerges triumphant.

Pittsburgh Newspaper Man at Universal's Laboratory

Reginald Warren, well known as moving picture editor of The Chronicle Telegraph and the Gazette Times, two of the leading newspapers of Pittsburgh, visited the Universal laboratory at Leonia Heights, New Jersey, last week.

After inspecting every department of the huge plant, which turns out over 2,000,000 feet of finished film a week, Mr. Warren declared that it was the most interesting visit he had ever paid to any branch of the motion picture industry.

Four Leading Fox Stars Are in Sept. Releases

Farnum, Walsh, Virginia Pearson and Miriam Cooper in Subjects Said to Be Unusually Strong—Comedy and Tragedy Varying Themes

MIRIAM COOPER, Virginia Pearson, George Walsh and Dustin Farnum, are announced as the players starred in Mr. Fox's first four Fox feature releases during September. This group of films consists in:

A comedy drama of a romance in Mexico; a mystery photoplay built around present day life in New York City; a fast moving story of a love affair which began in a Chicago cabaret and ended with a wedding ring in a Balkan principality; and a visualization of a big man's struggles in the great snows of the Northwest.

These are the productions, with the dates of their release:

September 2, R. A. Walsh's drama, "Betrayed," with Miriam Cooper; September 9, Virginia Pearson in "When False Tongues Speak"; September 16, George Walsh in "The Yankee Way"; September 23, Dustin Farnum in "North of Fifty-three."

Although a definite decision has not yet been made, it is probable that "A Rich Man's Plaything," in which Valeska Suratt has the chief role, will be issued on the last day of the month. Carl Harbaugh is directing the subject.

"Betrayed" centers about Carmelita Carrito, whose worldly condition is that of a peon, whose soul is that of an aristocrat, whose heart is that of a coquette.

Miss Cooper appears as the senorita. The principals in the supporting company, James Marcus, Hobart Bosworth, Monte Blue and Wheeler Oakman, are all favorites of the cinema-goers.

George Scarborough wrote "When False Tongues Speak." Carl Harbaugh directed and has a part in the playing cast also. Hardee Kirkland is seen opposite Virginia Pearson. The company includes Claire Whitney, Carl Eckstrom and William E. Meehan.

"The Yankee Way," which will be sent forth on September 16th, is described as a "star-spangled comedy." It presents George Walsh as Dick Mason, a young millionaire who happens into a cabaret just in time to knock out a ruffian annoying a dazzling brunette. As soon as Mason ends the flirtation, he starts one of his own, and when the girl in the case writes him a note of thanks, concluding with the naive compliment, "You most wonderful boy," he would fight a dozen for her—and he does!

Enid Markey is the party of the second part. Others who figure prominently are Joe Dowling, Charles Edler, James O'Shea, Ed Sedgwick, Count von Hardenberg, Edward Cecil and Tom Wilson. Richard Stanton was the director.

"North of Fifty-three," as the title implies, was taken from the story of that name by Bertrand W. Sinclair. Dustin Farnum and Winifred Kingston have the leads. William Conklin, Edward Alexander, Rex Downs, Frank Lanning and Joe Mullally are cast in important parts.

Emmy Wehlen in "Miss Robinson Crusoe" (Metro)

L-Ko Comedies Ready for September Release

President Julius Stern, of L-Ko Comedies, has received his releases from Hollywood, Cal., for distribution during September through Universal exchanges. General Director J. G. Blystone has furnished two merrymakers by Phil Dunham (who lately gave up his work as an L-Ko comedian to become a director); Vin Moore and Noel Smith. Lucille Hutton, Gladys Varden and Myrtle Sterling are the featured ones in the September allotment.

On September 5 "Backward Sons and Forward Daughters" will be released with Lucille Hutton and Billy Bevan featured. The same players will be prominent in "Tangled Entanglements," set for September 26. Both of these comedies were produced by Phil Dunham.

"From Cactus to Kale" will be the issue for September 12. Noel Smith directed and Gladys Varden, Walter Stephens, Harry Griffith and Katheryn Young will be leading fun-makers. For September 19 there will be a Vin Moore release, featuring Myrtle Sterling and Al Forbes, under the title of "From Ranch to Riches."

Vitagraph's Five Feature Plays in October

"Princess of Park Row," "Love Doctor," "Dead-Shot Baker," "Bottom of the Well" and "The Flaming Omen" Are on List

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of the Vitagraph Company, announces that the October list of "Blue Ribbon" features will be as follows: October 1, "Princess of Park Row"; October 8, "The Love Doctor"; October 15, "Dead-Shot Baker"; October 22, "The Bottom of the Well'; October 29, "The Faming Omen."

These pictures have been completed and prints are being shipped to the branches of the Vitagraph.

Mildred Manning is the heroine of "Princess of Park Row," directed by Ashley Miller. Wallace MacDonald is featured with her.

Earle Williams is the star of "The Love Doctor," described as a "different" story. The director is Paul Scardon. In addition to Mr. Williams are Evart Overton, Corinne Griffith, Patsy De Forest, Adele De Garde and Webster Campbell.

"Dead-Shot Baker," with William Duncan, is the first of several features to be made from the "Wolfville" tales of the late Alfred Henry Lewis. Miss Carol Holloway, who did the big Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail," is his leading woman.

Evart Overton heads the cast in "The Bottom of the Well," with Vitagraph's boy, little Bobby Connelly, and Aida Horton, the three-year-old leading lady. Others are Alice Rodier, erstwhile Washington Square player; Agnes Eyre, Adele De Garde, Ned Finley, Herbert Prior and Bigelow Cooper. The picture was made by John Robertson.

"The Flaming Omen" will present Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman, who formerly was Alfred Vosburgh. Mr. Vosburgh changed his name recently at the suggestion of President Smith, because, while he is a Scot, he left that the name was too much of a Teutonic rumble. "The Flaming Omen" was produced under the direction of William Wolbert at Hollywood. Props and settings, a la Peru, entailed an extraordinary expense, but subsequent results warrant the expenditure.

Keystone Girls in Sprightly Comedies for September

KEYSTONE comedians and their directors have been working at high speed since Triangle took over the Fine Arts studio and installed what is said to be the most complete equipment ever devised for manufacturing comedy. A large number of new players have been added to the roster of old favorites, and several new directors, some of them graduating from the ranks of players, were put in charge of the various productions.

The first Keystone release for September, scheduled September 2, is entitled "A Shanghaied Jonah," and presents Billy Armstrong, Maude Wayne, Guy Woodward and a score of other comedians in an up-to-date version of the "Jonah-and-the-whale" fable, and which is virile to the last degree.

"His Precious Life," dealing with an insurance agent of more than the usual persuasive ability, is the production for September 9. Among the players are Louise Fazenda, Charles Murray, Slim Summerville, Dora Rogers and Wayland Trask.

The week following will bring forth "Hula-Hula Land," with a squad of Keystone beach beauties giving their interpretation of Hawaiian maidens, their dances and their methods of love-making. Maude Wayne, who won the prize in the recent Venice beach bathing parade, is the featured Hula-Hula girl.

Two of the comely Keystone girls, Mary Thurman and Claire Anderson, assisted by George Binns, are delegated to bring joy and thrill on the week of September 23 in "The Late Lamented."

The story of a Sultan's seraglio, such as pictured in a previous Keystone, "Oriental Life," is the feature for September 30, bearing the title of "The Sultan's Wife." Gloria Swanson is the harem queen for whom Bobby Vernon and Joseph Callahan brave the dangers of the Persian palace.

Edna Goodrich and a Few of Her Costumes in "Reputation," a Mutual Star Production

Four September Features Are Listed by K-E-S-E

This will be followed September 10 by another Essanay feature, "Pants," presenting Mary McAllister as star. "Pants" was written especially for this little girl, who is scoring such success in the Essanay series "Do Children Count?"

Mr. Kleine will announce the name of the K-E-S-E September 17 release in a few days and promises that it will be an exceptionally strong production.

"Men of the Desert," featuring Jack Gardner, an Essanay production, will be presented September 24.

Changes Made in Universal's Weekly List

Universal announces changes in its weekly schedule of releases which are designed to strengthen the list and meet the demands of a majority of exhibitors.

The Powers cartoon that has been released on Saturdays will be withdrawn, and a two-reel Bison will be released regularly in its place. The plan of releasing a three-reel Bison on alternate Tuesdays will also be discontinued. All three-reelers shown on Tuesday hereafter will be of the Gold Seal brand. Victor comedies will be made in single reels instead of double-reel lengths, as heretofore. They will continue to be released on Friday, together with the Universal Screen Magazine.

Kolb and Dill Picture Sets New Attendance Record

"Three Pals," a Mutual release starring Kolb and Dill, broke all attendance records of the Iris theatre of Pacific Grove, Cal., according to a letter from C. B. Clark.

"For your edification," Mr. Clark writes to Mutual, "I will say that Kolb and Dill in "Three Pals" broke all attendance records for this house since its opening. We have taken in more money on attractions where the admission price was advanced, but never have shown to as many paid admissions in one day."

Pathe's "Battle of the Somme" Draws Well

"The Battle of the Somme," released by Pathe, opened its second run at the Rex theatre in Seattle on August 12 to what the manager says is the largest business this theatre has ever done. The "Somme" has played two full weeks in Seattle within one month to good business.

Pathe reports that the Official Government War Pictures have had a marvelous drawing power.

Paul B. Jones, manager of the Rowland and Colonial theatres, Wilkinsburg, Pa., writes of the Somme picture as follows:

"Permit me to congratulate Pathe on the tremendous drawing power and the excellence of the timely screen feature, the Official Picture of the War."

Hoyt Comedies for September Announced

"A Midnight Bell" is the title announced by the Selig Polyscope Company for the latest Charles Hoyt farce comedy in two reels to be released September 3. A story of rural life is told involving the rival affections of the Punktown chief of police and Ezekil Slower, chief of the fire department, for the village belle, Amy Grey. J. A. Richmond is responsible for the direction. The cast includes William Fables, James Harris and Amy Leah Dennis.

Following "A Midnight Bell," the Selig company announces Hoyt's "A Contented Woman" for release September 27 and "A Bear Fact," another Selig comedy, for release October 1. They are released through K-E-S-E.

"Vic" Moore Comedy for Release August 27

Victor Moore will release August 27 his newest comedy, entitled "The Cinderella Husband." It is based on the idea of the fairy tale, but written in an up-to-date manner by Thos. J. Gray.

"Vic" is discovered in the opening scene at the washtub in the kitchen working his head off. Like Cinderella in the fairy tale, the best he gets is the worst of it. He is a slave in the house with a capital "S," and his wicked brother-in-law, who is more "law" than "brother," helps add to his misery.

Jean Sothern Dons "Slickers" in Art Drama

In "Peg o' the Sea" Actress Takes Role of Daughter of Fisherman and Takes Up Trade When He Is Taken Ill

"PEG O' THE SEA," which the Van Van Dyke Company releases on Art Dramas program, was written by Winifred Dunn, a young woman with over a hundred scripts to her credit. The scene is laid in a small fishing village.

Jean Sothern plays the daughter of a fisherman, and is as skilled in the trade as is her father. Consequently when he becomes ill she dons slickers and conducts his fishing fleet herself.

Blair, a young man from the city, has established himself in the village, and is working on an invention calculated to destroy submarines. He is in love with Eileen, a selfish city girl, who looks on him only as an amusement. She gives him no encouragement with his invention, and refuses to become engaged to him, although he declares his love constant.

Peg is saved from drowning one day by Blair, and from then on a fast friendship springs up between them. Peg finds herself falling in with Blair, and becomes jealous of Eileen.

Things come to a climax when Eileen becomes engaged to Blair, and then, a few days later, marries a millionaire. This breaks Blair's heart and he ceases work on his invention. One night he passes Peg's house, and hears screams. He rushes in to find her struggling with Butch, a disreputable man of the town. Blair throws Butch out of the house, and stays to talk to Peg. He finds her more interesting than he had supposed. When she displays interest in his invention, he invites her to come and see it.

Eileen returns later and tells Blair that her husband has died, and that she loves him. But he is no longer under her spell, and now realizes her worthlessness.

He goes back to his invention, and is so discouraged because he will not work that he attempts to destroy it. Peg, passing by, sees his intention and rushes in at the last moment. Then, while he is explaining it to her, he suddenly discovers what is wrong. This rectified, the machine begins to move, and he knows he has attained success. He also knows that he loves Peg, and he grasps her in his arms.

The taking of "Peg O' The Sea" was much of a vacation for the members of the company, for they spent all their spare hours in swimming and sailing. Miss Sothern, who is expert at both sports, spent so much time in the water that she got badly blistered with sunburn, and was forced to rest for two days, bathing in cold cream.

The interiors for "Peg O' The Sea" were constructed in the studio in New York, to which the company came on the completion of the vacation.

General Film Releases First Jeff Peters Stories

Work is progressing rapidly in the filming for General Film of the "Gentle Grafter" stories by O. Henry, the first being "The Atavism of John Tom Liftle Bear." These stories all concern the adventures of Jeff Peters, itinerant faker.

The motif of the story is amusing, but it ends in the electrifying climax that O. Henry loves to employ. It dwells upon the righteous indignation and excitement of an educated Indian when his heart is touched by the manliness of a little boy and the wrongs suffered by his gentle mother at the hands of a rascally husband.

Triangle Leads List With "Ten of Diamonds"

Other Releases Are "The Man Hater," "The Idolaters" and as Comedies "His Fallen Star" and "His Foothill Folly"

"TEN OF DIAMONDS," by Albert Cowles, and "The Man Hater," a Saturday Evening Post story by Mary Brecht Pulver, are listed as the first Fall releases from the Triangle Film Corporation, appearing on the program for the week of September 2.

"Ten of Diamonds," which is being featured at the Strand theatre, New York City, this week, concerns a girl of a cheap tenderloin cafe who is metamorphosed into a "lady" at the caprice of an idle young rich bachelor, who aims to play a trick on society by presenting her as a wealthy tourist spending the Winter in New York. The cast includes the featured players of "The Flame of the Yukon," one of the most successful of Triangle plays.

"The Man Hater" was published as a story by Mary Brecht Pulver in the Saturday Evening Post of June 9; it is issued as a picture by Triangle on September 2. Winifred Allen has the role of the fascinating man hater. She is supported by Jack Meredith, Harry Neville, Jessie Shirley, Marguerite Gale, Robert Vivian and little Anna Lehr. The production was directed by Albert Parker, assisted by Thomas F. Tracey, under the supervision of Allan Dwan.

The Triangle comedies for this program are "His Fallen Star," with Harry McCoy, Frederick Bertrand, Gladys Tennyson and Eddie Sutherland, and "His Foothill Folly," with Ray Griffith, Eleanor Field and Frank Bond.

"His Fallen Star" is the story of astronomers looking for a new star and of a young genius, Harry McCoy, who invents, with the aid of a box of fireworks, one for them. The inventive youth thereby wins the near-sighted astronomer's daughter as a bride.

The other comedy, "His Foothill Folly," is a burlesque of the Western bad man pictures. This Keystone gunfighter has his own private graveyard, his own particular brand of stimulant and his evangelical girl. It is described as a melodrama of laughter.

"A Shanghaied Jonah," featuring Maude Wayne, Billy Armstrong, Guy Woodward and the mermaid contingent of the Keystone camp, is the Keystone two-reeler that will enlighten picturegoers during the first week of the Fall. It is the fable of the ill-fated Jonah brought up to date.

A production which is considered by Triangle officials to be of unusual box-office merit is "Idolaters," starring Louise Glaum, which will be issued on the program of September 9. In this play Miss Glaum returns to the adventuress type that first brought her into prominence as an emotional actress. On the same bill Bessie Love will be featured in "Polly Ann," the tale of an orphan who becomes, in turn, slavey, barnstorming actress and heiress.

"Soldiers of Chance" to Head Vitagraph's Releases

VITAGRAPH will head September releases with the Oliver Curwood romance, "Soldiers of Chance." The mirth provoker for the week of September 3 will be "Gall and Golf," a "Big V" comedy.

In the cast of the drama, "Soldiers of Chance," are Evart Overton, Julia Swayne Gordon and Miriam Fouche, it being the premiere of Miss Fouche as a star. Formerly she was with Fox and appeared in "She."

The story breathes the spirit of outdoors and has a Central American locale. It tells of the devotion of a girl for her father, over whom hangs the shadow of murder.

The cast also includes Ned Finley, a returned Vitagraph favorite, who has the role of a rugged American and partner in a lumber venture. Denton Vane, Charles Henderson and Charles Kent complete a cast of uniform excellence.

The production was made under the supervision of Paul Scardon, who has injected a remarkably authentic atmosphere of Central American jungles and has also obtained some very effective battle scenes.

Lawrence Semon, who also directed "Gall and Golf," plays the "rookie" who digs trenches in his attempts to swat a defenseless little ball, evades flying golf balls with the dexterity of a South African dodger, becomes the possessor of a rare collection of jewelry, and woos a girl, all in the course of learning the game of golf.

Semon is assisted by the "Big V" riot squad, including Joe Simberg, Donald MacBride, Joe Basil and Earle Montgomery. Templar Saxe also appears in the picture.

War and the Woman," Serial Episode and Comedy by Pathe

FLORENCE LA BADIE in "War and the Woman," lauded by the producers as the best picture she has ever done, Pearl White in an episode of "The Fatal Ring," and a Harold Lloyd one-reel comedy, are features of the September 9 program of Pathe.

Pearl White stars in the tenth episode of "The Fatal Ring" serial, entitled "The Perilous Plunge." This is said to be probably the best episode yet of a serial that is breaking records. It is said that a large number of Pathe offices have already beaten their average on "The Iron Claw." This chapter contains a big thrill—the plunge of an automobile from the deck of a ferry boat into the Hudson River with seven passengers.

Harold Lloyd is the star in "Over the Fence," the one-reel comedy produced by Rolin under the direction of Hal Roach. This is not a Lonesome Luke comedy. It shows Harold Lloyd, creator of the Lonesome Luke character, in an entirely new characterization, one absolutely distinct from Luke.

"Over the Fence" is a baseball burlesque, in which Harold Lloyd is a studious young man. He comes to bat in the nick of time and saves the game. The first part shows him as the enterprising proprietor of a tailoring establishment of the "We-press-'em-while-you-wait" variety. He tires of pushing the needle, goes to the ball game, and then things happen thick and fast.

The "Know America" Combitone scenic release is entitled "Colorado's Scenic Wonders," and an International cartoon and scenic split reel, Hearst-Pathe News No. 74 and No. 75 complete the program.

Selig Comedies Get Advance Release Through K-E-S-E

William N. Selig announces advance releases of two-reel comedies in K-E-S-E service as follows: "A Midnight Bell" written by Charles Hoyt, released Monday, September 3; "A Contented Woman," written by Charles Hoyt, released Monday, September 17; "A Bear Fact," released Monday, October 1.

Each of these comedies is said to carry not only a plot of merit, but a succession of funny incidents. The Charles Hoyt farce comedies, released every two weeks in K-E-S-E service have proved exceedingly popular with the people.

Vitagraph So Far Ahead It Is Now Ready for Christmas

IN an official statement to exhibitors and the trade in general, Albert E. Smith, president, makes the declaration that Vitagraph is so far advanced in its production that the company could, if necessary, show its Christmas week feature.

John Robertson, formerly actor and director at the big Vitagraph plant in Brooklyn, has been brought back by Mr. Smith. He resigned from the Goldwyn staff after finishing "Baby Mine" with Madge Kennedy. Mr. Robertson directed Evart Overton in "The Bottom of the Well," a picture scheduled for Vitagraph's October program.

Thomas Terris, another well-known director, also has been engaged by President Smith, and is directing Alice Joyce in a new Robert W. Chambers play to be called "Anne's Bridge."

W. P. S. Earle is directing an O. Henry picture, "A Municipal Report," which will be made a five-reel Blue Ribbon feature. In this feature are Corinne Griffith, who has been Earle Williams's leading woman; Eulalie Jensen, last seen as Portia Perkins in "Mary Jane's Pa"; "Mother" Mary Maurice, George Forth, Arthur Donaldson and William Dunn.

"Next Door to Nancy" is the title of a picture in which Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald are working.

Earle Williams, directed by Paul Scardon, has started work in "The Grell Mystery," a strong melodrama, in which he is supported by an exceptionally fine Vitagraph cast.

William Duncan and Carol Holloway, having just completed a five-reel "Wolfville" play, have begun work on another.

"Reputation," First Edna Goodrich Picture, Sept. 3

The forthcoming Edna Goodrich pictures announced by Mutual are well under way. In addition to "Reputation," "Queen X" has been completed. "A Daughter of Maryland" will be finished before the release of "Reputation" September 3.

Fourth in the series will be "American Maid," in which Miss Goodrich will be directed by Albert Capellani.

"The Defeat of the City," 4-reel O. Henry, for Sept. 1

GENERAL FILM'S forthcoming O. Henry stories in more elaborate picture form are to be led off with "The Defeat of the City," four reels, scheduled for release September 1.

The plan for O. Henry pictures provides for one four-reel picture, expected to be presented every two weeks. A series of at least ten may be expected.

The two-reel O. Henry pictures will continue, owing to demand for short-length features of high merit. Western O. Henry stories are being produced. These will be put into the two-reel division, and one of them will alternate every two weeks with a 4-reel O. Henry.

Many of the O. Henry stories with Western atmosphere were published in his "The Gentle Grafter" series, and for the initial releases "The Atavism of John Tom Little Bear" has been chosen, it being one of the favorite Jess Peters adventures.

Three Broadway Star feature directors are working to provide O. Henry pictures for General Film. At the Eastern Studio Thomas R. Mills, who directed over a dozen of the first twenty releases, has finished "The Defeat of the City." At the Eastern Studio also is Martin Justice, who did "A Departmental Case," "The Coming Out of Maggie," and "The Discounters of Money," three current two-reel subjects. At the Hollywood Studio David Smith is doing the "Jeff Peters" stories and others with a Western setting.

The success scored by the O. Henry pictures, of which General Film is the distributor, is to be intensified by the new issues. The impressive standard of the pictures is to be maintained.

Rose Joins Advertising Agency

Norman S. Rose has resigned from Artcraft's publicity department to become associated with the George Batten advertising agency.

Maxine Elliott Distinctive in "Eternal Magdalene"

In "The Eternal Magdalene," a Goldwyn picture made from the play by Robert McLaughlin, it will be found, Goldwyn says, that Maxine Elliott does the most distinctive work of her career.

This picture serves to introduce Arthur Hopkins, producer of many stage plays, into the cinema field as a director.

Mr. Hopkins, in keeping with his reputation in the theatre, decided to introduce novelties in direction and lighting.

"The Empty Gun" Heads Universal Program

"THE EMPTY GUN," a Gold Seal drama produced by Joseph De Grasse, heads the Universal schedule, beginning Tuesday, September 4. The Butterfly picture released the day previous under separate booking arrangements will be a Francis Ford play, "Who was the Other Man?" The De Grasse production was written by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton, and features Lon Chaney, Claire McDowell and Sam De Grasse, all old Universalites.

"Looking 'Em Over," a Nestor comedy, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts, will be released the same day with "The Empty Gun."

Wednesday, September 5, is L-Ko Comedy Day, with "Backward Sons and Forward Daughters" as the two-reel feature, headlining Billy Bevan and Lucille Hutton.

The 88th issue of the Universal Animated Weekly, relased at the same time, all relates to actual news events of the day.

Lena Baskette is the star of the feature for Tuesday, September 6; "A Dream of Egypt," written by Myrtle Stedman and Nan Blair and produced by Marshall Stedman. Lena is adequately supported by Betty Schade, Fred Montague and Walter Belasco.

William Franey will be seen on the same day in a Joker Comedy, entitled "Officer, Call a Cop!" written by Arthur F. Statter and directed by W. W. Beaudine. Janet Eastman and Milburn Moranti also have parts in the story.

"The Curse of a Flirting Heart" is the title of the Victor comedy in which Max Asher again appears under Universal auspices on Friday, September 7. C. B. Hoadley wrote the script, which has been produced by Craig Hutchinson. Lillian Peacock has a part.

The 35th issue of the Universal Screen Magazine, bearing the same date, will contain illustrated articles.

Eileen Sedgwick and Fred Church will be in a two-reel Bison comedy drama on Saturday, September 8, entitled "The Lure of the Circus." W. B. Pearson wrote and produced it.

Gale Henry and Milton Sims are also scheduled for appearance on the same bill in a Joker comedy, entitled "A Gale of Verse," written by Tom Gibson and directed by Allen Curtis.

The 17th issue of the Universal Current Events will bring the week to a close.

Pathe Delays Release of "The Seven Pearls"

Hosts of Exhibitors Who Want the Serial Asked for Later Date—It Is Now September 16th—Merry Rolins on List

"THE SEVEN PEARLS," Pathe's new serial, featuring Mollie King, Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, announced for release September 2, has been postponed until September 16. The delay in release was made at the request of many exhibitors throughout the United States who wished to find place on their program for this serial but were unable to do so if it was released as originally scheduled.

"I consider 'The Seven Pearls' as entertaining and as well produced as any of our best serials," said J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe. "Mollie King, who did such excellent work in 'Mystery of the Double Cross,' plays the leading role in this serial. Creighton Hale, who became popular with serial fans by his work as the Laughing Mask in 'The Iron Claw,' is the leading man. Leon Bary, well known on the French and American stage as the leading man for Sarah Bernhardt, who made a success as the 'heavy' in 'The Shielding Shadow' and as the hero in 'Mystery of the Double Cross,' again enacts the role of the villain.

"The story, by Chas. W. Goddard, a well-known dramatist, who wrote 'The Perils of Pauline' and collaborated with Mr. Reeves in 'The Exploits of Elaine,' is one that will interest American audiences. It is romantic and thrilling. It has been well produced by the Astra Film Corporation, under the personal supervision of Louis J. Gasnier, and has the atmosphere that we put in our five-reel features, plus the snappy serial action."

On September 9 comes the first of the new one-reel Harold Lloyd comedies. "Over the Fence" is the title and it is a laughable burlesque on the national game.

The week of September 16 "Lonesome Luke Loses Patients" will be released. In this comedy we find "Luke" running a sanitarium which is a regular bonanza because of the big staff of hand-picked beauties whom he has secured as nurses. The sanitarium is very popular with men whose wives do not stack up in the pulchritude class. In this fact lies the undoing of the sanitarium.

Dorothy Phillips Now Has Woman Director

Ida May Park will devote herself exclusively hereafter to producing Bluebirds with Dorothy Phillips the star. Jack Mulhall and Lon Chaney will be featured in the support under the present arrangement, the new order taking effect with the release of "The Boss of Powderville," which Miss Park is now producing on the West Coast.

Miss Phillips has been working alternately under Miss Park and Joseph De Grasse, but Mr. De Grasse has now taken the direction of Franklyn Farnum, leaving his wife, Miss Park, alone to direct Miss Phillips. "Triumph," set for release September 3, will be Miss Phillips' last De Grasse picture. She will appear October 15 in "Bondage," which Miss Park directed, and will have "The Boss of Powderville" as her release among November Bluebirds.

Vander Veer Returns from West Indies

Willard Vander Veer, Gaumont cameraman, and his assistant, Norton Nellis, have returned to the United States after an interesting and eventful trip through the West Indies. They had several narrow escapes from accidents and were almost killed in Trinidad, B. W. I., when their car fell over an embankment.

They were arrested several times as either spies or suspicious characters. In Martinique, French West Indies, they narrowly escaped being shot as spies. All the West Indies are under martial law and photography is prohibited. Special Government and police permits have to be secured.

War Pictures Rushed from France for Gaumont

Gaumont will release through Mutual war pictures to form a part of Mutual Weekly No. 141 and "Tree Planting in the National Forests," a section of "Reel Life" No. 72.

It is a certainty, the news reel will contain battle pictures from the western front taken by the cameramen of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont and rushed to this country by the first steamer.

Millions of pine trees in Wind River nursery are grown from seed and when three years old are set out upon the mountain slopes which have been denuded of vegetation by forest fires. This is a remarkable picture as it shows just what is being done to protect the country from floods and soil loss.

Other pictures upon the same reel are "An Unusual Colt," a small Shetland pony, "Hunting Turtle Eggs," an exposition of the habits of turtles when they come to the beach to deposit their eggs, "Testing an Auto Tube," a remarkable exhibition of the tensile strength of an inner tube, and a picture from Alaska of "The Midnight Sun."

Ride Upstairs by Steamer, with Burton Holmes

It is to beautiful Norway that Burton Holmes takes his fellow travelers in his pictures during the week of September 3, which is one of the most wonderful travel pictures Paramount ever released.

You drive in the quaint little native "carioles" and "stolkaerres" through the marvels of scenic grandeur, to which you are properly introduced by a delightful journey by rail, which starts at Bergen and skirts the shores of Norway's celebrated winding fiords.

One of the delights of the trip is a cruise on the Telemarken Canal; it will be a novel experience for you to see your steamboat skip up stairs, but you will see it, if you go on this cruise—thanks to Mr. Holmes' Speedo camera, which converts a most interesting actual occurrence of thirty minutes into a most amusing performance of only thirty seconds.

BRAVE MEN—AND OTHERS

A fine heritage of daring and endurance was left by Garibaldi and his Red Shirts to his followers. To-day the sons of these very men are accomplishing unbelievable deeds on the mountain frontier that Italy is winning back from Austria. Where it would seem that only birds could find a way, Italian soldiers are advancing. In Universal Current Events 15 we see them holding a pleasure race up an almost perpendicular mountain wall.

Not all the victories of war are won in physical combat. Only time will disclose how great a factor in determining the outcome was the United States Mission to Russia, headed by Elihu Root. It is interesting to see this veteran exponent of intellectual power welcomed to New York by our youthful Mayor, himself a fighter of the first rank.

But what of those who do battle not against men and guns, but against helpless women and babies? Brief as it is, the picture that shows the funeral of child victims of Zeppelin raids is enough to drive home to the most indifferent the task that lies before humanity and democracy.

Just for a good laugh, the cameraman introduces us to a gentleman of color and inventive genius, who by means of a rain barrel, a "little watah" and a "little kole" routs the Oil Trust and puts to shame "Mister Millionaire's rawls rooster."

Pershing in Shell Factory Filmed by Gaumont

When General Pershing recently paid a visit to a French ammunition factory his trip was not permitted to go unrecorded by a cameraman of the Societe des Establissements Gaumont. The pictures are incorporated in the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 139, the current issue.

An echo of what was the greatest war up to its time was the reunion of the Grand Army of the Republic at Boston. The veterans are shown as they parade as proudly as they did when they marched down Pennsylvania avenue in 1865.

The unhappy accident at Brandford, Conn., in which nineteen persons were killed and forty injured, is shown in Mutual Weekly No. 139.

A sporting picture shows the speedway triumph of De Palma, winner of the great automobile race over Oldfield and Chevrolet. The latter is seen changing a tire in eleven seconds.

Gaumont Subjects Voluntary "Close-Ups"

The New York Exempt Firemen held their state convention in Flushing, N. Y. Their tournament was held right at the door of the Gaumont Company, and excellent pictures were secured for the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly.

The week was also enlivened for the Gaumont Company by having the street fair, which accompanied the convention, present its thrilling spectacles in the dark opposite the plant of Gaumont Company.

UNDER THREE FLAGS

Not many cities of this country can boast of having survived two ownerships before becoming a free community under the Stars and Stripes. Yet Monterey, California (Selig World Library 15), has such a history. On its modest Customs House have flown successively the flags of Spain, Mexico and the United States. It is interesting, having seen a panorama of the present city lying along the bay, to get a glimpse of the old frame houses of the mid-century and of the pathetically dilapidated home of Robert Louis Stevenson.

Catching big fish in southern waters occupies about a third of the reel. A pleasanter subject and one well handled is the Silk Industry of Japan, perenially fascinating. Excellent close-ups show the fine threads being wound from the cocoons soaking in hot water, and the later processes of winding combined threads on spools and weaving. The picture of the loom is taken at such an angle as to convey a clear idea of the action of heddles and shuttle, so puzzling to the novice. The picturesque costumes and characteristic Japanese smile of the nativewomen workers add a pleasant note to an interesting subject.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeL. Berg

ANCESTORS THAT SURVIVE

Unless one owns a famly portrait gallery, it is not possible to see what one's honorable forbears really looked like. Any horse, however, lucky enough to be driven around the New York Zoological Park or shown Ditmars' Ancestors of the Horse could get a line on what he has really descended from, and note improvements, if any. In no other place in the world is there so fine a collection of wild horses representing surviving types of the original horse from which our own equines are descended. Here are stocky, shaggy Celtic and Norse horses, and a family of wild horses of Mongolia, reconciled to captivity and hilariously happy when the snow lies two feet deep on their romping ground.

More dignified, though striking and even flashy of appearance, are their cousins the zebras, neatly stenciled from nostril to tail tip in black and white bands. Almost, we would say—well, what the farmer said of the camel!

WARWICKSHIRE AUDREYS

Into the Forest of Arden, among ladies and lords playing at being shepherds, Shakespeare introduced a real farm lassie, Audrey, and the shepherdess Phoebe. Were Gentle Will to wake up in his Stratford town to-day he would see a battalion of Phoebes and Audreys, in overalls and knickers, raking and weeding, and, when holiday time comes, indulging in all sorts of jolly games. At least, if the Hearst-Pathe News 68 tells the truth.

A sport of a less gentle nature is the automobile race held at Sheepshead Bay, in which Barney Oldfield, in his famous "golden submarine," tried for his former laurels, but had to yield to Ralph de Palma, who distanced him with an average of one hundred and seven miles an hour.

Agricultural needs are calling forth the best in agricultural implements. At Fremont, Nebraska, we are shown several types of reapers and binders, and specimens of the caterpillar wheels that made the great war tanks possible.

STUNG? MY NO!

The lion may lie down with the lamb—some day. Meantime, man, if he cooes gently as a sucking dove, in the right tune, may play with live, barbed bees and not get even a single prick. For confirmation of this see "All About Bees," a most interesting reel produced by W. L. Brind, Oxford graduate and longtime film man. Mr. Brind pictures the bees at home and at work, the impressive queen, the handsome drones, and the workers, those cogwheels of the whole bee machinery. He gives us microscopic views of the bee's tongue and of his antennæ, wherein lies his sixth sense. As for the "Bee Man," over whose naked body bees play harmlessly—see above.

The lively, well-written and humorous titles add not a little to the spectator's understanding and enjoyment.

SNOWS OF TODAY

Somewhere in this broad and happily altitudinous land of ours are snow and rushing waters, even in August, and Burton Holmes, in his recent reel, "In the High Sierras" (Paramount), has found them for us. Over the shoulders of snow-clad mountains the swift train carries us, till we find ourselves on the shores of charming Lake Tahoe, in California. A ride with a train of pack mules through the giant forests, now descending to a mountain torrent three thousand feet below, now climbing till at an elevation of three thousand feet we gain a panorama of solemn grandeur, and then our guide invites us to the Yosemite. The remainder of the reel pictures the almost unbelievable beauty of the waterfalls of the valley, with their sheer plunges of thousands of feet, their sheeted torrents and the churning rapids at their base.

AN ARTIST AT WORK

War posters do not differ in the making from baked bean posters, or those that set forth the charms of tobacco, tennis racquets or talcum powder. They happen to mean a little more to each one of us, however, and we watch the various steps in their manufacture (Pathe Educational, "Making a War Poster") with interest. Albert Sterner is the artist of the particular poster shown here, and we get an idea of the pains he bestows in the many studies of arms, legs and torso that are revealed. The drawing completed, it is redrawn on stone, whence it is transferred to the paper itself.

The Katzenjammer Kids have a thoroughly enjoyable time with some misplaced glue and an armchair whose spring does not possess the adhesive power necessary to keep it where it belongs.

AVIATION A LA MODE

Not all reverses occur on the battlefield. In the Universal Screen Magazine, 37, men are going in for fashions and women for wireless telegraphy. But don't be alarmed for the future of our race. The masculine attire in question is the latest in aviation suits, while the girls who are learning the principles of electricity, magnetism and the operation of a transmitter are themselves clad in wartime but very fetching costumes.

One phase of next Winter's food problem is taken care of by the proper canning of corn, as demonstrated by the Department of Agriculture. The process is simple, and the titles so clear and enlightening that even an inexperienced housekeeper can use the picture as a guide in her own work.

Meantime, hungry babies are fed and anxious mothers instructed at the Department of Health's Service Station. The dozens of twins, as well as the singly blessed infants, give evidence of thriving on the treatment.

A PASSENGER WHO KICKED

You want to send a token to a friend—an automobile, a half-pound kitten, or perhaps a fine terrapin fresh from the Eastern Shore. Give it over to one of our efficient express companies (see Paramount-Bray Pictograph 82) and in two hours it will be on the train headed for its final destination. We doubt whether any of the above articles travel via the endless belt and revolving cone which carry and sort the smaller of the 50,000 packages handled in an express depot during the day. In fact, as Br'er Tarrypin is still alive and vigorously kicking, we are inclined to believe he would object. But travel he does, and arrives, just as swiftly and safely as a neatly boxed pair of shoes.

Only too short are the glimpses of "Dentshawn" and the dancing lessons given there by Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn to men, women and little girls. Long enough, however, to show that even everyday prosaic Americans can catch the spirit of other lands and ages and express it with intelligence and grace.

Bobby wants to ride the surf. And what better vehicles than Goldie's ironing board? Goldie thinks otherwise and doesn't mind expressing her opinion, even if it costs her a surf ride herself and a lively encounter with a shark. You may be sure the shark didn't get the best of it.

TWO MEN IN A BOAT AND A DOG

The water was "too rough or too smooth, too hot or too cold, too hard or too soft." At any rate, they didn't catch a single fish, after a week of casting on the part of the Bald One, reading and dawdling by the Tall One, and sympathetic attention from the Little Yellow Dog. But what a splendid time they had, in "The Hard Road to Adventure" (Educational Films Corporation). As in other films which have preceded this, Mr. Bruce takes us through the magnificent forests of Oregon, over roads drown in Spring freshets, across still lakes, and over the shoulders of snowclad hills whence we glimpse cloud-veiled peaks miles distant. There is the familiar sense of great space and peace, of fragrant woodlands and falling waters, of man at one with calm and generous nature.

THE IRISH ARE COMING!

Thousands cheered the "Fighting Sixty-ninth" as they marched out of New York en route "for Berlin," but few besides the Universal cameraman (Animated Weekly 86) followed the "Irish-Men o' War out to their first way station on Long Island. Here we see them pouring into the ferry boats, tramping along country roads, and entering their first camp, as new to them as to us. It is a stirring bit of film and takes the spectator one step nearer to out there.

War comes even closer when the new gas masks are given a try-out, or at least a try-on, right here in Union Square.

But the war terror that has brought death to more than one innocent English coast town has not yet reached our shores. Down at Atlantic City millions (or so they seem) pack the beach or tumble joyously in the rolling surf. A refreshing reel for a Summer's day!

Mystery Story of Unusual Type Promised by Art Dramas

ACCORDING to announcement from Harry Raver, President of Apollo Pictures, Inc., releasing on Art Dramas Program, his company will shortly begin work on a mystery story of unusual nature and novel plot, which will deal with the adventures of a crook known as "T." The title of the production has not yet been decided.

Mr. Raver is of the opinion that this story is one of the most amazing and surprising dramas ever conceived, and he is confident it will cause a sensation. Practically no stories of this type have ever appeared on the Art Dramas Program. Almost every other sort of drama has been represented in the variety of subjects released, but except for "The Law That Failed," which was not in the strictest sense a crook play, no picture has even verged on this order. Mr. Raver was partly influenced by this fact in deciding to produce the coming picture.

It has always been the policy of Art Dramas to keep its pictures as different as possible, so that any exhibitor can be assured of giving his patrons a wide variety of subjects. The rut of similarity of releases into which so many programs lapse, has always been deemed by Art Dramas officials to be a dangerous pitfall.

Frederick Rath is at present completing the continuity of the script, the authorship of which is not announced. It is expected that Alma Hanlon will be starred. The rest of the cast is not known.

Metro Is to Produce Rare Old Stage Play, "Blue Jeans"

THE old stage play, "Blue Jeans," is to be screened by Metro with Violet Dana in the role of the heroine, June. It is a coincidence that another Metro star, Mabel Taliaferro, when two and a half years old, made a stage debut in "Blue Jeans."

John H. Collins will direct the production which B. A. Rolfe will present. The screen adaptation has been made by June Mathis. John Arnold is cameraman.

The saw mill scene is the one which lingers most persistently in the memory of those who saw the production, either in the first two years of its existence or later in stock companies throughout the country. The saw mill scene will be staged with all the realism that made the initial production memorable, a saw mill of the type then in use having been discovered.

Work already has been begun on the screen version of "Blue Jeans." Exterior scenes will be taken at various points in New York state, and the interiors will be made at the Metro Studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, New York. The time is the early 80s.

Augustus Phillips plays Jack Bascom and Robert Walker his brother Perry. Sue Eudaly, the adventuress, will be the role given to Sally Crute. Clifford Bruce has the part of Ben Boone.

Five L-Ko Companies at Work—Hughie Mack to Be Featured

IN order to push production, and so outmanoeuvre the coming rainy season on the West coast, General Director J. G. Blystone has added Phil Dunham and Archie Mayo to his staff of L-Ko directors, making five directors in all turning out the comedies.

Mr. Dunham had gained favor as an L-Ko comedian before he decided to try his hand at directing, and his increased usefulness will be demonstrated in a comedy he is now working upon in which he will be featured in the cast as well as credited with the direction. In this new one he will be assisted by Frank Clark in screening the work.

Meanwhile two of Mr. Dunham's comedies are set for release next month—"Backward Sons and Forward Daughters," Sept. 5, and "High Class Nonsense," Sept. 26. In both of these L-Ko's Lucille Hutton will be featured with Billy Bevan. Vin Moore has prepared "A Prairie Chicken" as the release for Sept. 19, in which Myrtle Sterling and Al Forbes will be featured. "From Cactus to Kale," the comedy for Sept. 12, was furnished by Noel Smith, who directed Gladys Varden, Walter Stevens, Katheryn Young and Bert Roach.

Hughie Mack recently joined Director Blystone's forces to become a featured comedian, and he is now starting upon a series of comics that will be especially adapted to his rotund personality. It is likely that his director will be Archie Mayo, although one of the old directors may take him. There is sure to be plenty of L-Ko's for exhibitors who draw upon Universal sources for their service.

Cast for Harold Lockwood's Next, "Paradise Garden"

The supporting players who are to appear with Harold Lockwood in the picturization of the George Gibbs novel, "Paradise Garden," have been chosen by Fred J. Balshofer as follows:

Virginia Rappae as Marcia Van Wyck, a "juvenile vampire"; Catherine Henry as Miss Gore, Olive Bruce as Mrs. Weatherby, Harry de Roy as Christopher, B. A. Sprette as Harry Ballard, George Hupp as Jerry Benham at ten, Violet Eddy as Miss Redwood, Vera Sisson as Una Habberton, Lester Cuneo as Jack Ballard and William Clifford as Roger Canby.

Ince and Hart Take Lessons with Hammer

Thomas H. Ince has taken over the former Biograph Studios in Los Angeles for the production of photoplays which he is soon to release through Artcraft and Paramount.

In celebration of the event Mr. Ince and William S. Hart, the new Artcraft star, donned overalls and with a saw, hammer and nails, began the carpenter work on the first set. The agent of the Carpenters' Union showed them the best way of driving a nail without endangering their own nails or spoiling their vocabulary, all with very satisfactory results.

Emily Stevens Has Strong Support in Metro Play

Emily Stevens' new production for Metro is still untitled. It will be in seven acts. It is said the denouement is unusually dramatic, giving ample opportunity for a display of the star's talents. Recently Miss Stevens took an equally exacting role in "The Slacker." Work is progressing rapidly on the play.

In the cast in featured parts will be Earle Fox, who was in "The Dream Girl"; Frank Currier, who supported Miss Stevens in "The Wager"; Ricca Allen, who took character parts in "Aladdin's Other Lamp," and Paul Everton, who is cast for the part of a Wall Street broker.

The play is the first Miss Stevens is to produce under the new agreement for six months between the Metro Pictures Corporation and Oliver Morosco.

"The Patriot," with the Drews, at the Rialto

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, stars of the Metro-Drew comedies, have enlisted their talents and time in the service of Uncle Sam in an effort to preach the gospel of food conservation. They carry this direct appeal to the millions of Americans by their work on the screen in "The Patriot," a Metro-Drew comedy.

In the picture Mrs. Drew appears in the new Hooveralls and displays to her cook just what must be done in the American kitchen of today to carry out the ideas of the food administration.

"The Patriot" will be shown for the first time at the Rialto theatre and following its performance, Mr. Drew, by an arrangement of the Hoover committee, will address the audience on food conservation.

First O. Henry Four-Reel Picture a Study of Pride

"Defeat of the City" has been chosen as the first O. Henry story to be picturized by General Film in four reels. J. Frank Glendon, who has been screened in several of the shorter O. Henry's takes the role of Robert Walmsley. Others in the cast are Agnes Eyre, Frank Chapman, Frank Heath, Alice Rodier and Virginia Spraggins.

The tale is one of the best by America's greatest writer of short stories. While the theme is simple it is for this reason all the more gripping.

Bob Walmsley is a son of the soil but achieves success and marries Alicia van der Pool, a frigid and faultless society girl. The interest centers in his visit to his old home where he jests, romps and is bucolic and hearty. He expects to feel the sting of his wife's displeasure; instead she falls upon him in worship of his real worth as a man.

It is planned by General Film that each of the four-reel O. Henry's will be followed by a two-reel release.

Wharton's Feature Bought for Canada

John C. Green of Galt, Ontario, has purchased the Alaskan and Canadian rights to "The Great White Trail," produced by Wharton, Inc. Mr. Green, who has been in Ithaca, the home of the Wharton Studio, left last week for his home in Canada with three prints of this production. The production will be booked throughout Canada, through the Regal Films, Ltd. Arrangements have been completed for the picture's initial opening at one of the largest theatres in Toronto.

Peter Pan Productions to Be Made in New York

H. C. Allen Announces That Arrangements Have Been Made to Take Over Studio—Future Policies Outlined—Exchanges to Be Established in Foreign Countries

MO-TOY COMEDIES, as well as Black Magic, Mir-Roar Comedies and Shadowgraphs, all products of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, will be produced in New York instead of at the studio in Chicago in the future. H. C. Allen, president of this company, who has recently returned from Chicago, made this announcement after consulting with R. M. Vandivert, vice-president and general manager, who is in Chicago studying exchange conditions. Final arrangements have not been completed for the acquisition of a New York studio, but one will be taken over in the near future. The Chicago Studio, where Peter Pan subjects have been produced in the past, will be maintained as a branch.

The future policies of the Peter Pan organization are outlined by Mr. Allen in the following interview:

"Mr. Vandivert has just returned to Chicago after a trip through the West studying exchange conditions and reports such progress in that field as to insure the future of our productions. At present we are releasing through the Educational Film Corporation of America, which controls the territory of Greater New York, New York and northern New Jersey; the Standard Film Service Company for southern Ohio, Kentucky, Cleveland and northern Ohio and Michigan; the Lea Bel Company for Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin; M. R. Dick for Minnesota, North and South Dakota and northern Wisconsin; Metropolitan Film Company for New England; Metro Film Service Company for Virginia, Maryland, District of Columbia, North Carolina and Delaware; Mayer and Rosenthal for California, Arizona and Nevada; William T. Binford for Wyoming, Utah, Colorado and New Mexico. We have the country pretty well covered and are now completing arrangements for taking up South America, beginning probably at Buenos Ayres. A representative left this week for London to attend to the details of our new English office, and will remain over there some time studying the conditions of all the various foreign markets.

"Our present plans are to release 1,000 feet each week, composed of two 500-foot novelties, the novelties to be released on alternate weeks. After September 1 a one-reel subject will be released in addition to this program, and after December 1 this plan will be augmented by a further release of one reel a week."

"Lincoln Would Have Been Believer in Pictures"—Chapin

BENJAMIN Chapin, star and producer of the Lincoln cycle of pictures, in a written statement issued last week, said, in part:

"Abraham Lincoln was, first and last, a progressive. He stood for improvement and enlightenment. Had the motion picture existed in his day, he would have realized and made use of its advantage no less than Woodrow Wilson is doing to-day. He would have sought to educate the people of his time to the reasons for fighting the Civil War just as President Wilson is using the screen to impress upon us the need for the successful termination of this war.

Lincoln's bright mind would have seized on the "united we stand, divided we fall" slogan for a film scenario that would simply and clearly show the people why it was better that the union be preserved. He would have shown pictures of fanciful "independent" states waging war on each other. He would have shown, in this film, that continuous war would be the price of the loss of the great war.

Again, the Lincoln brain, always working at its best on the problem of "free" and "slave" labor, could have easily created a film-play showing the white workingman "where he got off"—to use a Lincoln expression—if the colored workingman was forever to be a slave laborer. He would have shown in this that as the colored race multiplied, the slave-holder would have, in time, such an excess of laborers that work of all sorts would, perforce, be performed at rates so low that the white worker, accustomed to receiving good wages, could not compete, and in other ways would he have advocated the use of the screen.

The strong point about the motion picture is that it tells its story so explicitly that even a child may understand."

Art Dramas Closes Deal for Southern States

Franchise Rights to Art Dramas Releases Sold for Practically Entire South—E. & H. Film Distributing Company Party of Second Part

A. F. BECK, general manager of Art Dramas, announces that he has closed a deal which involves the disposition of franchise rights to Art Dramas releases for practically the entire South. The states covered by the contract are North and South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama and Tennessee. The E. & H. Film Distributing Company, with central offices in Atlanta, is the party of the second part. This company has branch offices in all parts of the territory covered.

E. H. Harden is the president of the E. & H., and P. A. Engler, general manager. Both men are known throughout the Southern territory as veteran film men. The contracts were signed last week, and immediately a large consignment of film was shipped from New York to the Atlanta office. The first picture is released on August 27. Following close upon the announcement made last week that Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky had been sold to A. Warner, the news of the Southern deal is significant.

Negotiations with the Atlanta company, it is stated, have been pending for several weeks, but no announcement was made until all the details had been agreed upon.

Mr. Beck said in commenting upon this transaction:

"This is just a beginning of the big things Art Dramas plans to do in the near future. The company intends to expand in the next six months just as rapidly as it has done in the past half year of its existence. The disposing of the Southern territory means a great deal to the program, in that it was almost the only territory still unsold.

"All that the officers have to do is to make pictures as good as those they have made in the past. And they intend not only to do this, but to surpass them, raising the quality of the pictures with every production. Now that the executive management of the company has been turned over to me, all the producers for the program intend to concentrate on nothing but the making of artistic and first-class pictures.

"If the pictures had not been good in the past, and if the methods of distribution had not been businesslike and scientifically workable, the Art Dramas Program would not be here today. It is here, and going stronger every minute."

Welsh Succeeds Brock as Manager for Fisher

J. Edward Welsh has been engaged to succeed H. A. Brock as general office manager of the Bud Fisher Film Corporation. Mr. Brock has been called into the service of the Quartermaster's Department of the Army.

Mr. Welsh was formerly an exhibitor in Baltimore. Beyond a short career in this capacity he has had no experience in the motion picture industry. Since coming to New York about a year ago he has been engaged as artist engraver for the American Tobacco Company, with the exception of the short time he has been in the service of the Bud Fisher company.

Late Billy West Comedy Said to Be Best Yet

The late Billy West comedy, "The Fly-Cop," is said to be one of the best farce comedies yet produced by the King Bee Company. The comedian is assigned as a "plainclothes" man to obtain evidence against a ladies' gambling den. He obtains the evidence and attempts to make the raid single-handed. In doing so he arouses the anger of the rest of the force, but in the end is appointed chief of police by the mayor.

Eckert, Cleveland Manager for Wolfberg

Harris P. Wolfberg, of the Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh, has engaged T. M. Eckert, formerly with the Pittsburgh branch of the Pathe service, to manage the Cleveland office for the distributing of Wolfberg attractions. Mr. Eckert assumes charge of the Cleveland office August 27.

Mr. Wolfberg says in this connection:

"It is essential that each of my men must be a specialist not only in selling big productions to the exhibitor, but in helping the exhibitor sell to the public. We are classed as state rights' buyers, but I am proud to say that we call ourselves state rights' distributors and are striving to live up to what that name implies."

Mr. Wolfberg says that he will make an important announcement in the near future explaining an important innovation in the matter of co-operation with the exhibitor. It is planned to have advertising agencies in every section of his territory to handle the publicity for his attractions. The service will be given free on three-day bookings and longer runs.

Good Reports on Mutt and Jeff Comedies

Mutt and Jeff Comedies, which the Electric Film Supply Company of Philadelphia are handling for the Bud Fisher Film Corporation in eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, District of Columbia and southern Jersey, are being booked heavily in these territories. Henry M. Schwalbe of the above company reports that these comedies are booked solid at approximately one hundred of the Stanley theatres in eastern Pennsylvania. As proof of this, it is said that Mr. Schwalbe has asked the home office to furnish him with an additional print each week to supply the demand.

Word comes from Washington, D. C., that thirteen theatres in this city are showing these comedies weekly. From the South, the Rialto Film Company of Dallas, Texas, reports that more than sixty theatres in its territory are showing Mutt and Jeff Comedies under yearly contract.

Cleveland Office for New "Jewel" Pictures

"It's a Jewel" has struck Cleveland. Leon J. Bamberger, general publicity man of the Jewel Productions, Inc., was in town this week establishing a Cleveland office for the new exchange. Office space was secured at 812 Columbia Building, with A. J. Mentz as manager.

The Jewel Productions, Inc., is not a producing company, and has no ambitions along that line. They buy features and sell them to the exhibitor. They are more than willing to relinquish the trouble attendant upon high-salaried stars to their competitors.

Southwest Likes Billy West Comedies

Solid bookings are reported for the Billy West Comedies, released by King Bee Corporation, through California, Nevada and Arizona, by the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco.

Chicago Buyers Get Territory for "Mormon Maid"

Jones, Linick, Schaeffer & Ascher Bros., prominent buyers of Chicago, have purchased the Illinois and Indiana territorial rights to "A Mormon Maid," in which production Mae Murray is featured. The purchase price is said to approximate $25,000 for this territory. The production is to have its premiere in one of the large theatres in the Chicago loop district. Top prices will be asked.

Five prints of this production are now in Australia, where, the Friedman Enterprises announce, the feature is playing to capacity houses. The Chicago buyers are planning a thorough publicity campaign and expect to cover every place of importance in the two states with advertising matter. Robert Leonard directed the production.

Bernstein in New York with Two Features

Isadore Bernstein of the Bernstein Film Productions arrived in New York last week from Los Angeles to arrange with his agents, Shepard and Van Loan, for the exploitation of his two latest productions, "Humility" and "Loyalty," recently completed at the Los Angeles Studio. It is said that both are up to the Bernstein standard of production.

The cast for "Loyalty" includes Betty Brice, Murdock McQuarrie, Jean Hathaway and Jay Morley. Miss Brice is featured in both productions. The story tells of a girl's loyalty to a wealthy young society man who is addicted to the drug habit. She is starred in musical comedy and becomes a famous prima donna, but gives up her career on the stage for the man she loves. Both productions are said to present clean, wholesome drama. "Loyalty" is adapted from Ray Lewis's story by Rosalie Ashton and Beatrice Morse.

Ogden's Policy of Distribution Not Settled

First Production Featuring Lillian Walker Offered on State Rights' Market —Distributing Company Considering Proposition of Taking Entire Output

At a meeting of the executives of the Ogden Pictures Corporation at the New York office, the question of the future policy of distribution was discussed. The first production of the Ogden Company, "The Lust of the Ages," featuring Lillian Walker is now offered on the independent market but it is said that an organization is negotiating to take over this first production, as well as the entire series of pictures featuring Lillian Walker, for the next twelve months. The acceptance of the proposition is being delayed, it is said, to give the State-rights buyers an opportunity to secure the entire series.

Lester Park, general manager of the Ogden Corporation, made the following announcement:

"The company finds itself in somewhat of a peculiar position with respect to its future releases. We are thorough believers in the State rights methods of exploiting an individual star as Miss Walker, and particularly, when the production, in which she is to appear, is in every instance to be written especially for her. Naturally we desire the widest medium of distribution and one that is consistent with Miss Walker's drawing power; hence, the proposition we have received from a certain distributing company, the name of which we are withholding for obvious reasons, appeals to us, but the answer to that is that we have all of the well-known reasons for sticking to the State right field. However, we will definitely determine our policy for the next twelve months before the first of September. While we are not delaying in our producing end, we are proceeding slowly in the matter of definitely committing ourselves to our method of release."

Chapin Shows How Opinions Vary as to Drawing Qualities

BENJAMIN CHAPIN, known for his characterization on stage and screen, and particularly for his characterization of Abraham Lincoln in the "Lincoln Cycle," a series in four parts revealing important events in the life of Lincoln, has the following to say on the different opinions which exhibitors have concerning the booking possibilities different productions have:

"I believe that every exhibitor in America who is conducting a successful business, owes his success to his judgment of pictures and his knowledge of the fine points of showmanship. In presenting a feature for the first time, a producer is naturally keen for the opinion of successful exhibitors.

"When my Lincoln Cycle was ready for release, I consulted the manager of one of the biggest motion picture theatres in New York City and easily secured his interest to the end that we had an advance showing of the Lincoln Cycle in his private projection room.

"At the end of the showing I could see that his enthusiasm was all that I wanted except that there was an apparent lack of interest in one part of the Cycle of which I was particularly proud. The very part, indeed, that had seemed to me to give the picture a universal appeal.

"Frankly, he didn't care for the reels giving this part, at all, but thought the other reels were splendid and wanted to book them alone.

"Surely, thought I, this man must know what he is talking about and it was bitter disappointment. But I wouldn't give up. I asked for an opinion of the Cycle from still another representative exhibitor, a man as big in threaterdom as the first critic; and a showing in his private screening room was accordingly arranged.

"Anxiously but also curiously I awaited his verdict. 'It is all fine stuff but I think'—here he named a certain reel of it—'is your most artistic effort in the entire production.'

"And the part he named was the very part of the Cycle that Exhibitor Number One wouldn't enthuse over. If opinions of audiences are as evenly divided as the opinions of these men, the Lincoln Cycle will surely please all of the people part of the time, part of the people all of the time, and judging from theatres since consulted, most folks most of the time."

Scenarioist Explains Work on "Garden of Allah"

GILSON WILLETS, who made the screen adaptation of Robert Hichens' novel, "The Garden of Allah," for Selig, points out in the following interview how he prepared for the work and gives advice to those assigned to adapt the action of a novel to the screen. He says:

Let me assure my brother writers that the adaptation of "The Garden of Allah" was no mere accident, but hard labor. As those who have read Robert Hichens' novel know, the story is a long one with word painting galore.

The first thing I did when commissioned by William N. Selig to write the scenario was to again read the book—not once, but five times. I think the trouble with many film adaptations of noted novels is that either the adaptor or the director strays away from the story, introducing action or situations of their own devising. There isn't an inch of film in "The Garden of Allah" that is not of the book. Even the sub-titles are copied verbatim from the novel. This all adds to atmosphere.

In the meantime Director Colin Campbell had also buried himself in the story of "The Garden of Allah," and his entire staff, including scenic artists, cameramen and assistants, all were asked to familiarize themselves with the story. Everyone, including the principals in the cast, were acquainted with the story, and this fact was most important to the faithful reproduction of the play on the screen.

There was no luck, no mystery, regarding the scenario. First there was thorough familiarization with the plot; secondly, putting down on paper the details of that plot step by step, scene by scene; thirdly, forgetting the word paintings for the story in hand. The result was a boiled down plot of a great story without circumlocution. Wherever sub-titles were essential they were taken from the book.

As to atmosphere and Oriental coloring, that was the work of Director Colin Campbell and his staff. Too many authors assume the duties of directors in writing and endeavor to supply all atmosphere and locations to the detriment of the story.

To those assigned to the adaptation of a difficult novel, I would say to stick to the story faithfully after a careful study of the book. If the director is capable he will also have studied the novel, not only for the story but for atmosphere, and the principal players will have studied the novel for characterization.

Petrova in Demand by Portrait Painters

Mme. Olga Petrova, who recently formed her own company for the production of pictures in which she will be featured, is spending most of her time between now and the first week in September when she will begin work on her first production, in sitting for oil, water color and pastel portraits by some of the leading portrait painters of New York. Neysa McMein, whose work is seen on many of the magazine covers has executed a pastel of Mme. Petrova which, it is said, will be reproduced on the cover of one of the leading magazines for the November issue. Emil Fuchs and Clarence Underwood will execute full length portraits of Mme. Petrova.

Their arrival in Honolulu is announced. They expect to remain there several weeks before sailing for Japan, the next stop. They will make travelogue pictures to be entitled "The Honeymooners."

Los Angeles Sees Marine's First Production

LOS ANGELES.—Prior to the departure of M. Phillip Hansen, general manager of the Marine Film Company, and Gus Inglis for New York with the Marine Company's first production, "Loreli of the Sea," a private showing was given Tuesday evening at J. A. Quinn's Rialto theatre in Los Angeles.

An audience composed of players, friends, exchangemen and theatre owners were present at the showing, and it is the consensus of opinion that Director Henry Otto, aided by his cameraman, James Crosby, has put into this subject in five reels a beautiful collection of scenes.

The Marine Company's producing unit spent a number of weeks at Santa Cruz island and there secured exterior scenes of rugged coast, caverns, seabirds and sunset effects which were photographed to the best advantage. Tyrone Power is the featured player. The supporting cast includes Frances Burnham, Jay Balesco and others. The photoplay is by Richard Willis and is based on the German fairy tale of Loreli, a sea nymph, who attracted boatmen by her singing.

Billy West Comedies Liked in Middle West

Billy West, aided by a big newspaper advertising campaign, planned and executed by Manager C. W. Taylor, of the Omaha, Neb., exchange of the Standard Film Company, is going big in that territory. Last week saw this comedian booked at the Palace in Lincoln for four days, at the Strand in Council Bluffs for two days, and at the Strand in Ottumwa, two days. Dave Gilensky of the Strand in Council Bluffs, Ia., pronounces the Billy West campaign book one of the best he ever saw.

The production is in six reels, adapted from the musical comedy success of a few years ago. Ruth MacTammany is in the featured role of Alma. Supporting her are George Larkin, Jack Newton, John Webb Dillon, Frank McNish, Mattie Keene, Marian Kenmaire, Walter Mack, George Gaston and Joseph Phillips. It is officially stated that Marcus Loew is considering booking this feature for the Loew houses during Labor Day week. Hiller and Wilk will announce later their plans for the disposal of the rights for the country.

Hoffman Adds Three Features to List for Fall

"Silent Witness," "Madame Sherry," Together with One Under Production Written by Pierre Key, "The Fringe of Society," Among Recent Additions

H. M. HOFFMAN, who left last week for Chicago to establish another Hoffman Foursquare Exchange, announces his list of releases for the Fall season.

While "The Bar Sinister" and "The Sin Woman" have already been heavily booked in a number of territories, the greater part of this country will not have seen either of these features by the time the Fall season is underway. Therefore, each of these features is in every sense a Fall release and, according to Mr. Hoffman, should be so construed by progressive exhibitors as such.

Prominent in the list of Hoffman Foursquare Fall releases are "The Fringe of Society," "The Silent Witness," "Madame Sherry," "Her Fighting Chance," "Should She Obey?" and "A Trip Thru China," with "The Bar Sinister" and "The Sin Woman," as mentioned above.

"The Fringe of Society" is an original photoplay by Pierre V. R. Key, for the first Foursquare picture of the George Backer Film Corporation, and is said by the few who are acquainted with its theme to offer good possibilities. It is a story of New York people and the scenes are laid in New York. The two leading roles, which are of equal importance, are played by Ruth Roland and Milton Sills. In the supporting cast are Leah Baird, J. Herbert Frank, Ollie Kirkby, George Larkin, Tammany Young, and Jules Cowles, who presented the role of Buck Moe in "The Bar Sinister." Robert Ellis is directing.

In "The Silent Witness" M. H. Hoffman, Inc., believes it has a record-breaker. The world rights to this photoplay was acquired from the Authors Film Company and the star is Gertrude McCoy. Among other members of the cast, some of whom appear in the play during its Broadway run, are Frank L. O'Connor, Julius Mathews, Edward Fosberg, Rouloff Cutton and Jack Sherril. The story is one pertaining to the obstacles imposed upon an ambitious but poor boy working his way through college, and his efforts forced to compete with the sons of wealthy men who are jealous of his superior abilities.

"The Bar Sinister," Edgar Lewis's production, deals with the barrier of races and puts forward the undeniable claim that the color of man makes no difference spiritually. It is from the pen of Anthony P. Kelly.

"The Sin Woman" is a seven-part superfeature, with Irene Fenwick, Reine Davies and Clifford Bruce forming the tri-star cast, and its theme is the effect of heredity and the heroine who erred and was punished.

"Her Fighting Chance" has been acquired by M. H. Hoffman, Inc., for almost the entire country. The story is by James Oliver Curwood and Jane Grey is the star.

Brodsky's "A Trip Thru China" is a colorful photoplay in eight reels, which can be shown in its entirety or as a serial of one or two reels at a time.

"Should She Obey?" for which M. H. Hoffman, Inc., has the New York state rights, is a picture which shows the divorce evil in its true light and the harm which so often ensues through a hasty and ill-advised marriage. The story itself is one of unusual interest and the cast is splendid in its ensemble.

"Madame Sherry" is a picturized version of the famous play of the same name. Gertrude McCoy is featured. An additional advantage is the music score which helped to make the play so famous.

Sherman Says the "Sixth Sense" Necessary to Success

HARRY SHERMAN of the Sherman Pictures Corporation says that, in his opinion, state rights' men must acquire the "sixth sense" if they would meet with success in producing and buying pictures. The following statement by Mr. Sherman is the reason:

"I have been asked what reasoning I follow in determining what picture meets the current demand in the independent market. I know it is not a matter of luck and I can safely say that, in some instances it is not a matter of judgment.

"I can point to the fact that some of the wisest and most experienced men in the film business have exercised their best judgment in the past in making pictures for the state rights' market and have failed. The best answer that I can give to the inquiry under the circumstances is that it is the acquirement of a sixth sense.

"When I made my big plunge on 'The Birth of a Nation' the general attitude of the trade was that the picture would not stand up because of the tremendous price that was asked for it. When I put out 'The Crisis' I was told that the picture would not be a great attraction because there was no great star in the picture. In both of these cases, however, the sixth sense triumphed. I am proud of the success I made with both of them. When I took over the marketing of 'I Believe' I felt that the country being at war would sober the population so that a drama with a purpose might not appeal to the public taste, but as usual the sixth sense prevailed again. The acting, the story, the direction, and the vast public appeal of 'I Believe' has caused me to receive more offers from more territories than I could expect. I have no hesitancy in saying that when the Fall season opens this picture by George Loane Tucker will receive more public patronage than any picture now in the market. I consider George Loane Tucker one of the best directors in the motion picture business and I can say with him that 'I Believe' is his best picture."

Nat Spitzer Speaks Frankly on Independent Conditions

NAT M. SPITZER, sales manager for the King Bee Corporation, who has recently returned from a business trip through the West and South, which carried him through all the large cities of these parts of the country and gave him opportunity to judge pretty accurately the present condition of the state rights market, was asked on his return the question, "What's wrong with the state rights market?" Mr. Spitzer makes answer in the following interview:

"The state rights market lacks a proper foundation," Mr. Spitzer said. "Up to the present time the average state rights distributor has done business on a very loose basis. The general procedure seems to be to make a picture and spend a little or a great deal of money upon it. This depends on whether it is the desire of the company to play unfair with stockholders, or, if it is their own money that they are spending to cut expenses to the last detail.

"The next step is to splurge out in a lot of inconsistent advertising, and to spend more or less money unnecessarily, as the case may be. And the final move is to place an exorbitant price upon the rights for the various territories, and if the picture isn't "there," it gets cold waiting for buyers. It's a bloomer. The company goes 'bust.' However, another springs up in its place, for they're just like mushrooms; they come up over night.

"These are the methods that are doing the harm to the industry. We must seek a firmer business basis. We must reach a higher standard. There are too many wildcat schemes, and too few built upon really sound business principles. It is just a phase of the tremendous criminal waste of our industry.

"That's what is the matter with the present State Rights field—unsound principles and a waste of materials.

"My policy is to try to overcome this tendency, and we certainly have done so as far as the King Bee is concerned. In the first place we don't produce pictures that are not up to a certain standard, for Mr. Bernstein and Mr. Gildstrom personally pass on every script before it is finally accepted. We run our whole organization on a principle of efficiency, and every dollar paid out in expense brings in a certain amount of profit on the other side of the ledger. Therein lies the secret of our success."

IVAN ABRAMSON, director general of the Ivan Film Productions, is now engaged in filming a new production entitled "Sins of Ambition." This is the first of a series of problem plays which Mr. Abramson will produce for the screen. "Married in Name Only," the last of the series of sex plays which have been produced by the Ivan Company, is practically completed. The cutting and titling has been done and the production will be given a pre-release showing in the near future. Gretchen Hartman and Milton Sills are in the leading roles.

"Sins of Ambition" marks the beginning of the series of problem plays to be produced by the Ivan Company. It is now in the making. Mr. Abramson says that he is not ready to make an announcement concerning the theme or the cast of characters. He says that it is one of the most elaborate productions he has yet undertaken since being in the business.

I. E. Chadwick, general manager of Ivan Films, left August 18 for a country-wide tour in the interest of his company. He will visit the different distributors and set in operation the company's plans for the Fall campaign. He will return to New York the early part of September.

Aubrey Comedies to Be Offered on Independent Market

Arthur N. Smallwood of the Smallwood Film Company announces that he will place the two-reel comedies, featuring James Aubrey, on the independent market. These comedies will be offered to the state rights' buyers as a series. Beginning in October, a two-reel subject will be released one a month for a period of ten months. The buyer will have to contract for the series as a whole, with a provision that the series shall be disposed of to the exhibitor in the same manner and during a specified time.

Plans for an extensive advertising campaign have been formulated and the Aubrey comedies will be given publicity in the leading newspapers and trade papers of the country. Mr. Smallwood said that he believes that he has the services of a top-notch comedian and that all that is required to make him a strong box-office attraction is a combination of good stories and adequate productions.

Noble's First Independent Production Entitled "Shame"

JOHN W. NOBLE'S first production for the independent market is entitled "Shame." Zene Keefe is in the featured role, with Miles Welch in chief support. The feature has been cut and edited and will be shown to the trade at an early date. Jules Burnstein will represent Mr. Noble in marketing the production.

The story opens with a prologue, the action of which takes place during this time when the country is drafting its army. Miss Keefe has the part of a young girl who is the innocent victim of circumstances brought about by the war. It is said to be a powerful plea for tolerance on the part of the world at large for those who although far from the battle front deserve the same consideration as the men in the trenches. It is said to abound in the recital of incidents consequent upon modern methods of warfare, and should prove a welcome feature at the present time.

The date for the trade showing will be announced, it is said, soon.

Italian Pictures Showing to Packed Houses

"The Italian Battlefront" Pictures Under the Direction of William Moore Patch, Showing to Crowded Houses in Four Cities

"THE ITALIAN BATTLEFRONT," pictures showing the activities of the troops of the Italian army in the Alps, in the trenches and before the first lines of the Austrian-Italian front, now showing to crowded houses in their fourth week at the Forty-fourth Street theatre, New York, are said by those who have seen them and by prominent army officers to present some of the most vivid scenes of war activities ever shown. The interest the Army and Navy men have shown in these pictures has been keen and the general public has packed the house at each performance since the opening night.

"The Italian Battlefront" pictures are having their American tour under the direction of William Moore Patch of the Fort Pitt Theatre Company. He says that the pictures have been received with equal interest in Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Chicago. They are showing at the Tremont theatre in Boston and the Auditorium in Chicago. Mr. Patch received last week a cablegram from the Italian General War Staff in Rome instructing him to admit all American soldiers and sailors in uniform to any seat in the Forty-fourth Street theatre at half price. A sign announcing this fact has been placed in front of the theatre, with the result that uniformed men have come in numbers to every performance since the posting of the notice.

It is understood that the Italian Government feels that the part which it has played in the great struggle is little understood by American army and navy men, and, anxious to have the approval and recognition of the United States military forces, they have decided to present these pictures as convincing records of their achievements. Military officials who have seen the pictures declare that they had no conception of the seemingly impossible feats which the Italian army has accomplished, and make the prediction that when the history of the war is written, the Italian army will be given credit for some of the most marvelous exploits of the world war.

Mr. Patch says that the showings in all of the cities mentioned above have been given practically free from "paper," excepting the usual courtesies to the press. "With prices ranging to $2 top, standing room has been at a premium," says Mr. Patch, "at every performance, for the past three weeks, at the New York showing. The reason for this is, no doubt, that 'The Italian Battlefront,' pictures differ so essentially from other pictures, having to do with war activities, which have been shown in this country.

"The demand has been so pronounced on the part of the New York public that I am negotiating for another Broadway theatre to extend the New York run."

"Fall of the Romanoffs" Practically Completed

Last Scenes of Brenon's Production Showing Events Leading to Revolution, Taken—Trade Showing, September 6, at Ritz-Carlton

THE last scenes of Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs," depicting the events which led up to and immediately following the Russian Revolution, have been taken at the Brenon Studio, Hudson Heights. The production, it is said, will be ready for its trade showing September 6 at the Ritz Carlton, New York.

Mr. Brenon says that he is not a believer in leaving things to the last minute and so for a month or more the cutting and assembling has been going on, and for the past week he has held long sessions each evening engrossed in the work of making titles. Already five of the eight reels have been corrected and titled and are ready for release.

"Usually in the making of a picture," said Mr. Brenon, "the assembling is by necessity left until the very last scene has been taken, and then there is a scramble to get all the details polished off in time for production. But realizing the many difficulties attendant upon making a picture in which accuracy is so vital I have laid my plans far in advance so as to be able to pay sufficient attention to everything.

"The assembling of all the pieces of film was begun before the picture was actually finished, and upon the taking of the last scene last week the 'Fall of the Romanoffs' was practically ready to be titled in its entirety. I have found that all that is necessary to prevent the loss of time and energy that so often occurs during the finishing of the scenes of a production and its first showing are organization and system."

Berg on Way to Coast with Prints of "Man's Law"

Harry Berg, of Overland Film Company, Will Stop in All Large Cities for Trade Showing—Stars to Be Signed in Los Angeles

HARRY BERG, of the Overland Film Company, a comparatively newcomer in the independent field but who has proved himself to be one of the "live wires" of the industry, left Saturday on a trip that will carry him to the coast. Mr. Berg will make stops at all the important cities en route, including Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where he will spend a week or more to complete negotiations now under way for the signing of long-term contracts with several screen stars who will appear in future productions to be made by this company for the independent market.

Mr. Berg will carry with him two prints of "Man's Law," a multiple reel feature, starring Irving Cummings. He will show "Man's Law" to the trade in all the principal cities between New York and the coast. It is said that this production ranks with the best on the state rights market.

"Les Miserables" to Be Released as Special Feature

Prints of Pathe's new edition in eight reels of Victor Hugo's immortal classic, "Les Miserables," have been sent to all the company's exchanges, and it is announced that the picture will be released as a special feature on September 9. In the meantime applications are said to be pouring in and advance bookings being made rapidly in all territories.

S. Barrett McCormick of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, and the Sievers interests of St. Louis are among the important exhibitors who have hastened to book "Les Miserables" in its new form, it is stated. Big advertising will mark both presentations.

The engagement of "Les Miserables" at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, was extended to three weeks and drew big crowds despite the heat.

In this production, directed by Albert Capellani, it is claimed by Pathe, the high ideals of the master have been sustained throughout. The characters of this gripping story are played by a company of French players headed by Henry Krause, the most celebrated actor in France.

Selznick Building Village for Rita Jolivet Picture

The making of Rita Jolivet's first picture production which as yet has been given no name, is progressing at the Selznick Studio in the Bronx and on a great stretch of open country known as the Watson Farm in Westchester County.

On this tract of land for more than six weeks there has been in course of construction a village noteworthy even in this day of enormous picture spectacles.

A recent addition to the cast of this play is Roger Lytton, who will portray the role of a German master-spy. Mr. Lytton will be remembered in a similar character in "The Battle Cry of Peace."

Constance Talmadge's First Play Is "Scandal"

Constance Talmadge, latest addition to the Selznick company, will make her first appearance as a film star in a screen version of Cosmo Hamilton's serial, "Scandal," appearing in the Green Book.

The role of Beatrix Vanderdyke, "worst spoiled woman in America," gives Miss Talmadge an opportunity to show her talents.

Change Release Order of "Sub-Deb" Pictures

In order that the Paramount screen adaptations of the "Sub-Deb" stories in the Saturday Evening Post, starring Marguerite Clark, may follow in chronological sequence the order in which they were originally published the first of the series will be "Bab's Diary" instead of "Bab's Burglar," as previously announced.

As a matter of fact the title of the first story printed was "The Sub-Deb," but the incidents therein will be found in "Bab's Diary," which introduces the charming Barbara Archibald on her return from school for the Christmas holidays. This will be a September release.

After a thorough Summer cleaning and renovating the Jackson Park theatre has opened again, the first attraction for the new season being Dustin Farnum in "Durand of the Bad Lands."

Unity Photoplays Company has gotten out some snappy advertising folders for the productions they are exploiting at present. One of them is in the shape of a fac-simile insurance policy and the other is devoted to one of their latest film acquisitions in this territory—the Rex Beach Travelogues.

T. E. Hancock, a former business associate of Manager Rozelle of the local World-Brady offices, is now being schooled in film exchange managership. He spent three weeks at the local World office with Mr. Rozelle, observing how the latter "does it." He will shortly be assigned a post in one of the Brady branch offices.

Manager Bill Jenner of the K-E-S-E offices here gave a special showing of Taylor Holmes' first Essanay picture, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," at Orchestra Hall on last Friday morning to local exhibitors. A ten-piece orchestra added to the showing with their music. "Efficiency Bill's Salesmanship" we would call the stunt.

Since the La Salle and the Colonial theatres have gone in for road shows and vaudeville respectively for the Winter season there is now a discussion started as to who is going to take the proverbial bull by the horns and build the first big Loop movie house. Several film companies have already "threatened" such an action.

Purveyors of war films are taking advantage of the martial spirit in Chicago at present. "The Retreat of the Germans at Arras" is running at Orchestra Hall and the "Italian War Pictures" are drawing them in at the Auditorium.

Miss E. Corbett, known to hundreds of exhibitors in Chicago as "Jim," has left her old stand in the Fox offices, where she was the feature booker, and gone over to the Bluebird local office in the same capacity.

Well, Charlie Pyle of Bartola is enriching the poor railroad companies again. He has left our midst and gone to New York. That generally means more work for the Bartola builders.

Walter Sanford, publicity manager of the Fox Film Company, visited the Chicago offices last week.

"Arem" Vandivert, former advertising manager of the NEWS, and now the vice-president and general manager of the Peter Pan Film Company, stopped off here for a few days last week while on a territorial trip. Merl LaVoy, well known here as the cameraman who took the pictures "Heroic France," is a member of the Red Cross Mission that sailed for France from here last week.

Military Officials Witness German Retreat—in Films

One of the latest war films, "The Retreat of the Germans at Arras," was given much impetus in Chicago last Friday night when under the auspices of the Chicago British Committee on Allied Recruiting the picture was shown to hundreds of military officials now gathered in Chicago and representing practically every one of the allied countries.

The occasion was designed as British Day. Besides the military officials, foreign consuls in the city were also present. There were short talks after the showing of the film by officers of the British and Canadian armies in charge of the recruiting here.

Operators' Demand Reveals Lack of Exhibitors' Co-operation

The motion picture operators of Chicago, those who are members of the recognized local, No. 110, I. A. T. S. E., have framed a new wage scale and have placed it before the exhibitors of the city for consideration. The presentation of the scale has had the peculiar effect of bringing forcibly to light here the fact that the Chicago exhibitors have not yet struck the necessary stride of organization and co-operation. Outside the new exhibitor organization formed several months ago, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, now aligned with the American Exhibitors, many of the other theatre men of the city are dealing with the operators' demands individually.

An attempt to rally the members of the old Exhibitors' League local at a meeting last week for a mutual consideration of the new wage scale is said to have failed deplorably. Members of that body, some of them among the largest and most important exhibitors in the city, it is stated on good authority, have met the operators' demand individually and in a manner that best suits their respective plans and operations.

Three years ago the operators presented a wage scale that was put into effect agreeably. It called for $21 a week for operators in houses having under three hundred seats and included Sunday work and matinees. For houses of over three hundred seats a scale of $23 was agreed upon and has since been in force.

The new scale calls for a weekly wage of $21 for all houses under three hundred seats capacity, but does not include matinees. For matinees they ask $3.75 extra for each one worked. For houses with over three hundred seats and up to nine hundred $23 is to be the wage, with the same matinee stipulations in force. With every increase of six hundred seats thereafter they ask $2 more per week.

This part of the new scale, when taken up for consideration at a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association last week, was generally agreed upon as to be granted. Other new stipulations, such as extra overtime payment, have not yet been agreed upon by this body.

Band Against Music Tax

At a special meeting last week the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Chicago took up the present menace of the music tax. President Schoenstadt and Messrs. Choynski and Frank explained the situation of the music tax, and what it threatens, to about forty members gathered for the meeting, and it was voted to hereafter only use the music of the independent concerns. The recent list of these independent publishing houses as published in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS was furnished to the members for their guidance.

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

PATHE, according to Oregon reports, is having things much its own way in Portland. W. W. Kofeldt, manager, booked four first-run features in four houses there in one week, there being "The Candy Girl," with Gladys Hulette, at the People's; "The Iron Heart," with Edwin Arden, at the Star; "Les Miserables," with Henry Krause, at the Majestic, and "Captain Kiddo," with Baby Marie Osborne, at the Hippodrome.

At the same time Pathe News was at the Majestic, Combitone at the same house. Scenic at New Liberty, Cartoon at the Hippodrome, "Neglected Wife" at Pantages, Cartoon at Star and "Lonesome Luke-Messenger" at the People's.

Pathe's five-reel Official British War Picture, "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," was booked by Manager Kofeldt for the thirty days solid—he could get the print from Seattle. The bookings were so close that once Mr. Kofeldt personally had to carry the film from Camas to Newberg for a matinee because no express trains were running.

When "The Tanks" was on at People's theatre Mr. Kofeldt had a returned soldier who had fought at Vimy Ridge make speeches from the stage at each performance. With the closing words of the talk four soldiers from Battery B stood ready. The speaker, William Poteet, would say:

"I want to tell you ladies and gentlemen when the boys from our great U. S. A. get into the fighting the downfall of autocratic Germany is assured."

At the words the soldiers, two from each side, stepped forward on the stage, one with a company flag and the other with Old Glory. All five stood at attention while the audience was on its feet and the band played the "Star-Spangled Banner."

For "The Battle of the Somme" pictures Mr. Kofeldt invited to a special review all the newspaper men, the British consul, Mr. Sherwood; Sergeant-Major Kenning of the British recruiting office and the heads of the British Benevolent Society, St. Andrew's Society, Clan Macleay, Caledonian Society, the British National Red Cross and the Cambrian Society. Cards advertising the pictures were hung on the walls at Portland's banquet to Brigadier General W. A. White, head of the British recruiting service in the United States.

"See First, Then Book," Works Well for Keystones

The New York office of the Triangle Distributing Corporation recently sent out circular letters urging exhibitors to view all Triangle productions, including the Keystones, before showing them. It is believed that by this practice the exhibitor can best develop the power of the plays.

The Keystones, according to exchange reports, have been booked by more theatres than ever before. A number of houses that have not been showing the regular Triangle program have contracted for Keystones as supplementary attractions to their bills.

This Is How Pathe's "Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras" Lined Them Up in Front of the Strand Theatre. Every Night the Line Was Longer

"Ten of Diamonds" on at Strand, New York

"Ten of Diamonds," by Albert Cowles, with the Triangle players, featured in "The Flame of the Yukon," is being shown this week at the New York Strand theatre.

A woman of a tenderloin cafe is suddenly transferred from her sordid environment to a Fifth avenue home, where she is taught how to become a lady. She misunderstands the motive of the "handsome stranger," whose coming she has found predicted in her fortune-telling cards. When she discovers that he does not love her and that he is using her merely as an agent for revenge against a man of high social standing she revolts.

Sherry Tells of Wonderful Booking in New York

Wm. L. Sherry, vice-president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, has returned to New York after a booking tour of the State. He says: "Every town and city of any consequence whatever has not only signed for the new product of the two big companies but has arranged for a wonderful program of exhibition, advanced admission prices, long runs, big newspaper and billboard advertising and all other improvements known to the exhibition end of the game.

"Just a few of the towns in which the new service has been arranged for, in addition to Buffalo, Syracuse and Rochester, previously announced, are Elmira, Binghamton, Cortland, Ithaca, Auburn, Saranac Lake, Malone, Plattsburg, Lake Placid, Salamanca, Hornell, Geneva, Glens Falls, Gloversville, Amsterdam, Utica."

Two Weeks Run in Newark for "The Slacker"

"The Slacker" and Emily Stevens broke all attendance records at the Goodwin theatre, Newark, N. J., last week. The film was so well received that Mrs. Webbe, of the Goodwin, made arrangements for its continuance for another week.

This marks the first time during the present summer season that a photoplay had been shown at a local theatre for two successive weeks. "The Slacker" played the entire week to capacity houses at every performance and began its second week under the most promising conditions.

Twenty-four Cleveland Theatres Take "Fighting Trail"

The Vitagraph sales force exerted its strength in Cleveland, O., getting contracts for "The Fighting Trail," to be released simultaneously all over the country September 10. They succeeded in signing up twenty-four theatres—this even before the picture is released.

This week the salesmen are combing Toledo for bookings with a like satisfactory result.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

EIGHTEEN over-worked and famished editorial and advertising men of the trade and fan publications were given a royal time over a recent week-end by E. K. Lincoln, whose ability to act the role of host is matchless. The reviewers present thought, at least, that they were wandering through one of Harold McGrath's mythical kingdoms instead of Mr. Lincoln's estate in the Berkshires near Blandford, Mass. There was swimming, tennis, canoeing, eating and whatnot—everything to amuse and nothing to bother.

T. E. LETENDRE arranged the party and while no one was looking picked out a person, whom we will call William James Beecroft, as official clown of the outing. This particular member of the Beecroft family was in fine trim throughout the stay at Blandford, the various wines in the Lincoln cellar ably assisting him in performing his duties in a thorough fashion. When last heard from by the writer he was snoring loudly at 7 a. m. Monday, the twentieth of August. It is thought that someone, in all probability Monsieur La Roche, succeeded in rousing him from his peaceful slumbers.

IF you really want to know what kind of a time was had by all, ask any one of the eighteen (you can tell who they are, because they're much fatter now than they were before) and then get ready for an all-day monologue on his part. The name Lincoln will enter into it more frequently than at a recital by Ben Chapin.

JEROME N. WILSON has retired from the ranks of the Universal Animated Weekly and Current Events staff and is now indulging in a vacation at his home in Fort Lee, N. J., trying to pick the best of several offers that have swooped upon him. Jerome N. gained the personal thanks of the heads of the Universal Company because of the catchy and appropriate titles he composed for the Animated Weekly. He also had practically entire charge of the editing of Current Events since its inception.

HERBERT B. CROOKER, formerly a member of the publicity department of Triangle, is now taking his meals off German china, the answer being that he is a member of the Naval Reserve aboard the steamship "Hamburg," one of the German vessels taken over by the United States Government.

ADAM HULL SHIRK sailed gracefully into our sanctum last week, and, recalling only his former days on the Dramatic Mirror, we immediately began to conceal all valuable pieces of news matter lying about. But Adam, seeing our apparent confusion, immediately put us to rest with the important information that he had become a member of Paramount Pictures Corporation publicity department, which is a very good thing for both parties, and thereupon began spilling the week's news instead of searching around with his eagle eye for stuff to appropriate as of yore.

LARRY REID is back on the job again, this time reviewing pictures for the Shuberts on the New York Review. Nothing like progressing; Larry was formerly with the Motion Picture Mail.

EXHIBITOR'S NOTE: "The Seven Pearls," Pathe's latest serial, despite its title, has not got Pearl White as star, but Mollie O. King, the O. standing for osculating.

"VIVIAN REED has been learning to dive," says Selig, "and recently took a plunge of thirty-five feet amid the plaudits of the multitude." But after all, a common person has the easier time of it. He can dive amid the water and thus feel perfectly safe.

"IF anyone wants to find Enid Markey at the studio in which she is performing all he has to do is to peep into the doors of the different dressing rooms——" the press agent says more, but we cannot. It is time for some one to write another article on the immorality existing in the studio.

WILL some kind person tell us what conspiracy Frances Agnew, Laura Hochstetter and George Pardy were hatching last week when they were seen with heads close together on one of Broadway's busy corners?

THINGS are becoming settled again. The NEWS last week carried, among others, three advertisements of products bearing the personal endorsement of S. L. Rothapfel.

COLUMNISTS of the dailies seem to be fond of "riding" certain well-known motion picture stars of the male sex for not joining the Army. Wonder why they don't turn their attention to certain well-known millionaires who give a considerable portion of their time spending money and not even earning it.

REALLY, no actor or actress can go William Fox and his private barber shop any better. And he has pictures to prove it.

DORIS KENYON has a new roadster, of cerise and gray. This fact would warrant no other attention provided Doris hadn't chosen to wear cerise and gray the first day she ran the car. At that, though, she is bringing any number of converts into the temperance fold.

The Longacre Lampoon

All the News That Fits, We Print Longacre Square, N. Y., September 8, 1917

EDITORIAL

The big names of fiction still seem to exert something of a hypnotic influence over the scenario editors of the day. At times it is to good cause, but judging from the number of pictures seen lately bearing the names of celebrated magazine writers that fail to display any great amount of intelligence in originality or development, the magic of the big names is more of a myth than a reality.

When it comes to the day in and day out five-reel features, the stuff that is just now the backbone of the productions, it seems that the screen has cultivated its own authors until they have reached a plane far higher than that as yet attained by the story writer who turns to pictures merely for the purpose of unloading an astonishing amount of mediocre stories.

Of course, there are exceptions, but in a vain attempt to create an argument, we would like to challenge anyone to name as many "big names" that carry such a list of successes in the picture world as those of C. Gardner Sullivan, Jeanie MacPherson, J. G. Hawks and Hector Turnbull, writers who have made a study of the photodrama and whose recent efforts have been confined solely to its creation.

All of which proves that "It looks easier than it actually is."

Duncan, "Vita's" Director, a Fast Producer

Rushes "Dead Shot Baker" to Completion in Three Weeks—Does Daredevil Stunts in Automobiles and Aeroplanes

WILLIAM DUNCAN, who played with Carol Holloway in Vitagraph's outdoor serial, "The Fighting Trail," and also directed the picture, is proving himself a regular speed demon in the matter of production.

Duncan finished "The Fighting Trail" early in July, took a ten days' vacation and then was handed the script on "Dead Shot Baker," which is a Wolfville story by the late Alfred Henry Lewis. He got his company together and started work at once. Within three weeks the Vitagraph offices in the east received word that Duncan had finished his picture, a five-reel Blue Ribbon feature, and was waiting for another script.

Carol Holloway and Joe Ryan, who took leading roles in "The Fighting Trail," are two of the Vitagraph stock players who are cast with Duncan, the latter taking the title role in addition to directing the picture.

In "The Fighting Trail" a typical western mining camp was constructed near the Hollywood studios, a score of wooden stores, saloons and other shacks. Then it was burned, just to add one more truly realistic scene to the great all-outdoor serial. It was a fire that called out the entire Hollywood fire department and a thousand excited motorists. Duncan was mightily pleased until he discovered that the manuscript of the thirteenth episode of the serial had gone up in the flames. Such a catastrophe would have stumped many directors, but not Duncan, who jogged his memory by lighting another cigar and then directed the episode, one of the longest and most exacting of the serial, entirely from memory.

At another point in the making of the serial Duncan was trying to think up some variety of thrill he had not already put into "The Fighting Trail." He had blown up trestles, mines and valleys, and had thrown automobiles over cliffs, flooded mountain caves and sunk vessels. Then he remembered he had not wreaked vengeance on aeroplanes, so immediately betook himself to Venice and arranged for the flight from the studio of two flying machines.

Carol Holloways bears scars as mementoes of bouts she had with death in the making of the picture in the wild reaches of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. For instance, she was swung over the edge of a cliff at the end of a seventy-foot chain, waiting for Duncan to rescue her, when a mountain lion rushed from the mouth of an unused mine tunnel at Duncan. He wasted no time in slipping over the ledge and down the chain a safe distance, but his weight threw Miss Holloway with great violence against the sides of the cliff, bruising her body and badly lacerating her hands.

Pathe's Baby Star in New Play, "Stars and Smiles"

SINCE "Little Mary Sunshine," a year ago, Baby Helen Marie Osborne has appeared in "Joy and the Dragon," "Told at Twilight," "When Baby Forgot," and "Sunshine and Shadows," all five reels. The Pathe Company is enthusiastic about the bookings on these pictures. Exhibitors, Pathe says, sincerely hope that Helen Marie, like Peter Pan, will "never grow up."

Under the direction of William Bertram, out in the sunshine of the Lasalida Studio, Little Mary has just finished another feature—"Tears and Smiles." This picture is scheduled for release September 2.

It's all about a kiddie whose father and mother don't like each other any more. Baby runs out when father strikes mother and makes the acquaintance of another runaway—a puppy, which in the most ingenuous way leads her to the home of two people who want a baby more than anything else in the world.

How Little Mary takes charge of the hearts of the two; how Marie yearns for her mummy; how she cleverly manages to have her maid dismissed and her mother hired in the maid's place; and how, after her daddy and her adopted father's wife both take leave of this world, she joins the hands of mummy and "new daddy" forms the theme of a simple, charming tale in which our leading lady does not ever—well, hardly ever—look into the lens of the camera.

Little Marie is supported by Philo McCullough, Marie Warner, Katherine MacLaren and other Lasalida players.

Bluebird Schedule Is Ready for Three Months to Come

BLUEBIRD directors are making the most of their opportunities and the result of their work is shown in a schedule that is practically complete until December first. The fact that a few of the releases lack definite titles prevents a complete announcement, but it is declared that enough subjects are either finished or under way to round out the program well along toward the new year.

Mae Murray, directed by Robert Leonard, and Carmel Myers, under the screen management of Harry Solter will be two stars new to the program who will enter the lists within the next few weeks. Miss Murray is well along with her first release, "The Princess Virtue," and Miss Myers has almost completed "The Dynast" which brings her to the program in November.

The immediate issues include Dorothy Phillips, in "Triumph," Sept. 3; Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, appearing as joint stars for the last time, Sept. 10, in "A Stormy Knight"; Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford in "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller," Sept. 17, and Herbert Hawlinson and Brownie Vernon, making their first appearance as co-stars, in "Flirting with Death," Sept. 24. Then, too, "Mother o' Mine," a Bluebird Extraordinary, will begin independent circulation along State-right lines during the week of Sept. 3.

"Bitter Sweet," the release with which Ella Hall will start the October issues arrived from the West Coast last Friday and was shown to Bluebird executives with an award of commendation. Franklyn Farnum will appear as a lone star, directed by Joseph De Grasse, in "The Maverick," Oct. 8, having Claire Du Brey as his leading lady. Dorothy Phillips, in "Bondage" produced by Ida May Park, will be the Bluebird for Oct. 15; Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford will co-star in "The Desire of the Moth," Oct. 22, and Violet Mersereau returns to the program, Oct. 29, in "The Girl by the Roadside."

Charlie Chaplin in Stripes in His Last Mutual

Charlie Chaplin in the role of an escaped convict, flees over a rocky coast pursued by armed guards in "The Adventurer," the last of his productions for Mutual.

The $670,000 a year comedian is at work, with sleeves rolled up, cutting 20,000 or more feet of film which were taken in the course of the production down to the regulation 2,000 feet, which will be seen on the screen.

The forthcoming Mutual-Chaplin special is declared to be quite the funniest thing that the international comedian has yet done. The idea around which it is built provides so many humorous situations and so many opportunities for Chaplin to work in those subtle bits of humor which make his pictures so uproariously comical, that it cannot help being a masterpiece of comedy.

Edwin Carewe to Be Joined by Brother in Producing

Edwin Carewe, director for Metro, off the screen is Edwin Fox. His brother, Finis Fox, a business man, manager of the White Crown Fruit Jar Company of Louisville, is to join him in producing multiple reel pictures at the Metro Studio.

Finis Fox has branched into the movies before this, for he is the author of "The Jury of Fate," a Metro play in which Mabel Taliaferro stars. He has written other photodramas not yet released.

The business man will begin at the beginning, learning technical details about camera work, lighting and the cutting of film as he progresses. Working under the guidance and instruction of Edwin Carewe, he will be able to master the details of the industry in a much shorter time than would otherwise be required.

The brothers, Edwin and Finis, are quarter-blood Chickasaw Indians, and occasionally add to their revenues by the sale of lands inherited from their grandmother, the Chickasaw Princess Tabuscabano.

Ince Star Ready for Work

Dorothy Dalton is ready to begin her first Paramount production under the direction of Thomas H. Ince. This newest Paramount star has been spending a vacation of three weeks at Arrowhead Springs, California, where she has enjoyed a complete rest. Her past activity has been extensive and a recent affection of the throat was an added necessity for a vacation.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

THERE was general rejoicing at the Lone Star Studio this week when official notice from the British Embassy at Washington was received which exonerated Charles Chaplin from the charge of being a slacker, as made by Lord Northcliffe in his London paper. The statement from the representative of the British Government, in part, reads as follows: "We would not classify Chaplin unless we received instructions to put the compulsory service law into effect in the United States and unless after that he refused to join the colors.

"There are various ways for one to do one's share. Certainly the man who subscribes liberally to war loans and the Red Cross could not be said to be a slacker, especially when he follows his subscriptions with an announcement that he will serve in the trenches when called."

There has been considerable discussion as to whether Chaplin should give up his work in films and return to England and answer the call of his country. By many it is claimed Chaplin can, by staying, do more good toward the American cause. His income tax for the present year under the new schedule of taxation will amount to approximately $400,000. Chaplin recently invested $150,000 in Liberty Bonds, and prior to that time had purchased Canadian bonds to even a greater amount.

Chaplin Finishes Last Mutual

Charley Chaplin will have the twelfth and last release for the Mutual completed and ready for shipment within a week or ten days. All outside of the studio scenes have been filmed, and once the interiors are completed, it will take but a day or two to complete the editing, for in the making of this subject Mr. Chaplin has introduced a new policy for his plant. All negatives made during the day is developed immediately, and prints made so that Mr. Chaplin can see them the first thing in the morning. Five days of each week he makes scenes, and the sixth day he devotes to editing. This will result in making it possible to ship the film a day or two after the last scenes are made. No name has been selected for this subject.

A series of human interest comedy dramas depicting boy life in one-reel subjects is to be made at Universal City, according to plans being perfected now. Stories for this series, which may possibly consist of twenty separate weekly releases, are being written by Judge Willis Brown, late of the Juvenile Court of Salt Lake City, and will be based on incidents in boy life which came to the attention of Judge Brown. King W. Vidor is preparing continuity, and Director Raymond B. Wells, formerly affiliated with the Universal as feature director, is in charge of the producing company, which includes five permanent players—Chandler House, George Kirkland, Will Berry, Buster Emmonds and Guy Hayman. Mr. Wells and General Manager McRae organized the company Monday of this week, and since the first of the series, "The Fifth Boy," has been made. The next one to be made is titled "Matchmaking for Dad."

Special Attention to Mae Murray Film

Lula Warrenton, affectionately known as "Mother" to a majority of attaches of Universal City, has been engaged to play an important character role in the first Mae Murray production made by Director Robert Leonard, "The Princess Virtue." Mrs. Warrenton has been away from Universal almost a year, and during that time has produced a number of photoplays featuring children for the Freider Film Corporation, for which she served as manager of production, directoress, and author, and in which she owns considerable stock. "The Princess Virtue" is an adaptation from the story by Louise Winter, prepared for the screen by Fred Myton. The story has a French atmosphere, and prominent leaders of social and diplomatic life constitute the cast of characters. Universal City management has assigned special artists and decorators to the Leonard Company to give unusual attention to the building, decorating and dressing of sets. The producing unit has also been furnished with individual lighting equipment to make possible the desired lighting effects.

A change has been announced with respect to the next subject made by Director Allen Holubar, titled "The Twisted Soul." Brownie Vernon is to be leading woman, and Frank Borzage, formerly leading man and director for Triangle, has been engaged as leading man. Others appearing in the subject are Murdock MacQuarrie, Joseph Girard, Miles McCarthy and others. Filming of the picture was commenced this week upon completion of scenario by J. Grubb Alexander. This will be Mr. Borzage's initial appearance in Universal-made subjects. He has been seen in NYMP, American, Lasky and Ince-Triangle.

Universal Studio Jots

Hart Hoxie is a Western player who this week returned to U City, where he will be featured in a five-reel mountain story, "The Wolf and His Mate," to be filmed by Director Edward LeSaint, with a cast which includes Louise Lovely, Betty Schade, Hector Dion and others. Hoxie is one of the best cowboy actors of the West Coast colony and has appeared in many Kalem, Universal and other Western pictures made on the Coast.

A new department has been completed in connection with the scenario comedy section, and C. M. Hernandez, for almost three years affiliated with Mack Sennett, will have charge of this. The duty of this department will be to originate "tricks, gags and stunts" for comedies. Players look upon the new department as one to create ways and means for them to lose limb or life.

Two three-reel dramatic subjects were begun this week at U City. One is being made by George Cochrane and has Neal Hart and Mignon Anderson as leads. This is titled "The Get-A-Way," and is of a decidedly Western character. The second three-reel put in production is a railroad drama, "The Run of the Yellow Mail," adapted from a story written by Frank H. Spearman. George Marshall is the director and Helen Gibson appears in the featured role, with Val Paul, Buck Connors, Raymond Nye, Wadsworth Harris and others.

Lee Moran is this week playing the part of a new character for the screen—a Japanese comedy valet—in the two-reel Nestor comedy, "Too Much Women," written by Sam Comly, of the Los Angeles Moving Picture World staff. Featured with Moran are Eddie Lyons and Rosemary Theby, the latter a new member of this tri-star comedy producing unit. Roy Clements is directing this picture.

Craig Hutchinson is filming a Joker, which has a "slacker" as the principal character. This is titled "Dodging the Draft," and has David Morris and Gladys Tennison as leads.

"U" Serials Progressing

Henry Murdock, former comedian of the Kalem Ham and Bud Company, is a new member of the W. W. Beaudine Joker Company, and he will make his initial Universal appearance in "The High Cost of Dying," with Mildred Davis and Eddie Baker.

Jack Wells took up the filming of a five-reel photoplay which will have Dona Drew in the name part in a photoplay titled "The Ghost Girl," written by Patricia Foulds. Cassen Ferguson, Claire DuBray, Fred Montague, Victor Rotman and Willard Wayne are the principals.

Louis Chaudet has completed the direction of the first Grace Cunard five-reel Universal photoplay, and is now at work on a new story titled "The Blood of Gladness." Harvey Gates is the author of Miss Cunard's new vehicle, and William Musgrave, Charles West and Joseph Girard are the other principal players.

"The Gray Ghost" Serial Company, directed by Stuart Paton, is making the final scenes for the thirteenth release. In this episode the home of the Gray Ghost is stormed by a squad of police, and a greater portion of one of the large stages at U City took on the appearance of a cyclone having struck it by the time the scenes were completed. Priscilla Dean, who was injured while working in the fifth episode, appears in the thirteenth episode for the first time since the accident, without the accustomed bandages. Jacques Jaccard and "The Red Ace" Company are now on the ninth episode.

Japanese Star Injured

A new Sessue Hayakawa picture was begun at the Lasky plant this week, but, owing to an accident which befell the star, continuation of the work will be delayed for several days. William C. deMille is in charge of making this production. Mr. Hayakawa, who occupies one of the rooms on the upper tier, known as the aerial dressing rooms, slipped on the steps while on his way to a set, and is reported to have wrenched his back so badly that work for a week or more will be impossible. Hayakawa had just completed work in a picture made by George Melford, in which Florence Vidor played the feminine lead.

Cecil B. deMille will, upon the completion of editing the Geraldine Farrar-Artcraft picture, "The Woman God Forgot," begin the making of this star's second subject. Script for this, it is understood, has been prepared by Jeanie McPherson and Mr. deMille.

It will probably take Wm. S. Hart and company, which includes Sylvia Bremer as leading woman, and a number of actors, actresses and coyboys who have played with Hart in other subjects, fully a week more to finish his present subject, on which he has now been engaged four or five weeks. Mr. Hart and two players and cameraman went to San Francisco Saturday evening to make scenes of the star being shanghaied at the Bay City wharf. The thousand-mile trip was made by the four to secure less than 100 feet of negative.

The Mary Pickford-Artcraft Company is at work at the studio, where exteriors for "The Little Princess" are being filmed.

Fairbanks Company Home Again

Douglas Fairbanks and Company will be home from Laramie, Wyoming, early during the coming week, after spending ten days in the mountain country there for the Western subject now being made.

Another company headed by Julian Eltinge, and including Daisy Robinson, Frank Deshone, Noah Beery, Rosita Marstini, under the direction of Donald Crisp and managed by Fred Kley, will return within the next few days from filming scenes at Portland, Oregon. Mr. Kley will spend several days at the Lasky lumber mill at Hoquiam, Washington, before returning.

William D. Taylor, who is directing the Tom Sawyer picture which features Jack Pickford, has spent some time at Ria Vista, California. While there the hotel the company occupied caught fire and burned at two o'clock in the morning. Pickford is reported to have been the hero of the conflagration, rescuing a crippled woman and her brother. Jomer Scott, cameraman, gave his first thought to getting the instrument and film out of the building, and then from an adjoining building photographed the fire.

Preparations have been completed for a new picture to be made under the direction of Robert Thornby, with Vivian Martin as the star. This will be filmed at the Morosco-Pallas plant.

First Ince-Paramount Ready

The first Ince contribution to the Paramount program, "The Son of His Father," starring Charles Ray, has been completed at the Ince studios by Victor Schertzinger. The principals in the cast besides Ray are Vola Vale, Charles K. French, Robert McKim and George Nichols. The last scenes were made this week at Calabassas, California. The story is an adaptation from a popular book, and gives Ray the role of an idle son of the rich, who is given a small allowance from his father with the instructions that he use it to make good as a business man. The father becomes the victim of his son's deal in railroads when he forces a merger.

The second Ince Company continues at work on the first Dorothy Dalton starring vehicle for the Paramount, in which William Conklin plays the opposite lead. Conklin's most recent release is the leading role opposite Louise Glaum in "Golden Rule Kate," which was made by the Triangle. Thurston Hall, well-known leading man of screen and stage, formerly associated with Lillian Russell, has been engaged by Mr. Ince to play a leading role in the first Dalton picture.

Keystone Mermaids Again

Special attention is being given to the Eddie Cline Company at the Mack Sennett studio, in order that a picture featuring Charles Murray, Mary Thurman and Weyland Trask can be finished and ready for release as the first Sennett contribution to the Paramount program on September 30. This is partially a beach subject, and has the Sennett beauty squad, with a great array of new bathing costumes.

Two weeks later, "Roping Her Romeo," a Western comedy, filming under the direction of Fred Fishback, with a cast that includes Polly Moran, Slim Summerville and Ben Turpin, will in all probability be the release. This company has about finished the Western comedy, and rapid progress has been made in the cutting under the supervision of Mr. Sennett.

"The Pullman Bride," which director Clarence Badger is filming with Mack Swain, Gloria Swanson and Chester Conklin, will have a thrilling hold-up, kidnapping of a bride from the speeding Pullman, and other sensational thrillers. One of the big Sennett stages has been transformed into veritable railroad yards, with interiors and exteriors of Pullmans and other rolling stock in abundance.

Mack Sennett has cast Louise Fazenda in a slavery role in a picture to be filmed by Victor Heerman. All of the cast has not been selected for this subject, which is now in rehearsal, but it has been definitely decided that Glen Cavender will have a part of importance.

To Augment Vita Companies

Scenes of a South American atmosphere are being filmed this week by the William Wolbert Vitagraph Company on the peaks of several small mountains in the vicinity of Chatsworth Park, fifty miles northwest of Hollywood. These are for "The Red Prince," which has Alfred Whitman and Mary Anderson as leads. This photoplay also offers Otto Lederer, who has been in films for more than six years, in the role of an English lord. The mountains have been leased by Studio Manager W. S. Smith for a period of several weeks, and Director Wolbert and his entire organization are camping in the mountains that they may be there to work.

Another of the Wolfville stories, titled "The Tenderfoot," has been completed by the Vitagraph Company, directed by William Duncan. Duncan and Carol Halloway play the leads in this subject.

The third Vitagraph Company, which is directed by David Smith, is giving his entire attention to the making of O. Henry stories. The second, titled "The Troubadour," was finished this week, and now the organization is working on "The Lonesome Road."

At the Vitagraph studio it is stated the producing staff of this studio will be materially enlarged in October or November. According to report, there will be at least four more companies working at the Western studio, and it is understood the Eastern staff will be reduced to this number.

Lockwood with New "Vamp" Lead

From the Yorke-Metro studio comes the announcement that a new vampire has been discovered for the screen, and will make her debut in the Harold Lockwood release, "Paradise Garden," adapted from the George Gibbs novel. She is Virginia Rappae, who appears as Marcia Van Wyck. Others in the cast besides Lockwood, Vera Sisson, William Clifford and Leo Cuneo, the important roles are Kathrine Henry, Olive Bruce, Harry DeRoy, B. A. Sparette, George Hupp and Violet Eddy. More than a score of girls were tried out for the role of Marcia Van Wyck before Miss Rappae was secured. The part is that of a juvenile vampire.

John Schroenberg, leader of orchestras at popular Los Angeles cafés, and considered an exceptional "atmosphere violinist," has been engaged to play for scenes made at the Yorke-Metro studio.

Anita King with Balboa

Anita King, who appeared in a number of Lasky Paramount subjects, and was featured with Victor Moore, has been engaged by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, and is at work on her first subject at the Long Beach studio. The Anita King subjects will be released on the Mutual program.

The Standard Film Corporation of Kansas City, one of the largest exchanges of that important point, has contracted for Christie Comedies for the states of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa, according to advice received at the studio from Charles Christie, now en route to the Coast from a trip to exchanges in all parts of the country. R. C. Cropper is manager of the Standard Exchange, and is one of the most successful film men of the Middle West. The sale of this territory is a very important one to the Christie Company, as it gets their product into some of the best theatres in this country.

The R. D. Lewis Film Service of Oklahoma City has made contracts with Mr. Christie for the territory of Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

Pleasing Report from Christie

Charles Christie will arrive in Los Angeles early next week after making a tour of practically all of the exchanges handling comedies made by the Christie Film Company. Telegrams received at the studio tell of unusual success of the Al. E. Christie comedy productions in every territory that his brother, who is business manager of the firm, has visited. On his trip Mr. Christie has been very successful in adding a number of firms to the long list of exchanges who handle Christie comedies, and the company anticipate an era of continued successes as the result of his trip.

At the studio Al. E. Christie is filming "A Blessed Blunder," with Betty Compson, who has just returned from a long vacation in the featured part. Jay Balesco appears as a near detective, and by accident apprehends a genuine burglar and thus becomes the hero of the force. The producing organization has just finished "When Clubs Were Trumps," which has Margaret Gibson in the featured role.

Adding to Triangle Staff

The Triangle Kay-Bee producing staff is being enlarged as fast as facilities for production can be added to the studio. This week William V. Mong was engaged as director, and has already taken up the filming of a Canadian Northwest Mounted Police story, in which Marjory Wilson will be starred. Mr. Mong recently directed a seven-reel spectacle shortly to be placed on the market. This was titled "The Chosen Prince," and is based on the Biblical story of the friendship of David and Jonathan. Prior to this engagement Mr. Mong served for more than two years at Universal City, where he played leading man and character parts, as well as directed some of the most successful subjects made there. While mob scenes depicting the storming a jail by 100 men were made Friday night at Hartville for this Canadian Northwest picture, being directed by Mong, Mildred Delsino, a member of the Triangle stock organization, was knocked down and trampled by the rushing men. It is impossible at this time for the physicians at the Santa Monica hospital to ascertain how serious are the internal injuries. Charles Gunn is playing the male lead opposite Marjory Wilson.

As there is very little information in literature concerning conditions in the Northwest, the technical department of the Kay-Bee plant this week sought information from other sources and have employed a former member of the Mounted Police, who will work with Director Mong in the filming of the subject in order that proper uniforms and equipment and other properties are used, and that the genuine rules and regulations of the Mounted Police are complied with.

Army Officers in New Play

In the mountains of Hartville, the technical staff of the Triangle has erected a tenement street, a duplicate of a scene to be found in the New York East Side, and at the Culver City Studio are erected interiors of tenement houses, supplied by the Municipal Reform organization in New York. These will be used in a slum story centered about the heroism of a girl, which is to be titled "Doing Her Bit." The direction has been placed in charge of Jack Conway. At this time the cast for the subject has not been selected, but it is definitely known that a number of army officers will take part. The scenario required a number of military and naval scenes, and a score of shorts are being made at the local recruiting offices of the army and navy.

Bessie Love Quits Triangle

Bessie Love, it became known this week, has resigned from the Triangle and asked the company to cancel her two-year contract which was recently executed.

THE WORLD MARKET

Piedmont Distributes All Ivans—Lamy Big Factor in Co.

MUCH of the recent activity displayed by the Piedmont Pictures Corporation in the foreign trade is laid to the door of Joseph Lamy, manager of the export department.

Mr. Lamy has long been known in the export business and is regarded thoroughly conversant with the demands of the market, and has the confidence of the buyers.

For five years he was manager of a moving picture and exporting concern in Spain, having the exclusive agency of the Essanay, Edison and Universal Film Companies. Later he became commercial director of a French concern who were producers as well as exporters.

At the outbreak of this war Mr. Lamy came to the United States and formed the Hawk Film Company, which was financed by a large downtown banking concern. Merely on account of the larger opportunity offered, this concern amalgamated with the Piedmont Pictures Corporation.

The Piedmont Pictures Corporation is the sole distributor of the Ivan Film Productions, and the success that Mr. Lamy had while yet general manager of the Hawk Film Company, with a few of Ivan Film Productions' releases, has warranted the Piedmont Pictures Corporation to enter into an agreement to become purchaser of every picture produced by the Ivan Corporation.

American Productions Gaining Favor in Foreign Markets

J. FRANK BROCKLISS, INC., representing A. Charles Schuepbach, of the Mundusfilm Company, of Paris, speaking through its president, Sidney Garrett, with offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, has the following to say on Mme. Schuepbach's impressions as to existing conditions in the American market and the future of American pictures in foreign markets:

"Mme. Schuepbach feels that American pictures are steadily gaining popularity in all corners of the globe. There is a breadth of view and a lavishness of detail in their production that is lacking in the majority of those made abroad, and hence foreign audiences are coming to demand more and more of this type of work.

"Unfortunately, the American manufacturers do not really understand foreign market conditions. They look at a map, and gauge the financial possibilities of a territory by its size, and not by population, and thus fancy that France, Italy and the Balkans is a $20,000 proposition on a $3,000 picture. It is this mistaken attitude that is holding up the progress of American pictures abroad.

"Mme. Schuepbach is on the point of closing several large deals, and has already purchased a number of subjects. She has visited the various film centres of the world in the interest of her company, and finds that at the present moment there is better material in the American market. She is of the opinion, however, that after the war, the European manufacturers will again come into their own."

Mme. Schuepbach is making a study of conditions in America in the interest of her firm in Paris.

Canadian Rights to "The 13th Labor of Hercules" Sold

The Cinema Distributing Corporation, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, of which Henry J. Brock is president, announces through its general manager, Leon Schlesinger, that the series of the Panama-Pacific Exposition known as "The Thirteenth Labor of Hercules" has been sold for the Dominion of Canada to Chas. Stevens, general manager for Superfeatures, Ltd., of 59 Victoria street, Toronto, Ont.

Superfeatures, Ltd., will release same in series form, commencing the forepart of September, with one series each week.

The Rialto theatre, New York City, completes the run of the series this week. Favorable comment from all sides has been attributed to these series since the opening series three months ago.

Standard Contract Asked to Protect Foreign Buyers

A plea for the establishment of a standard, equitable contract for export buyers was made last week by Carle E. Carlton of Crest Pictures.

"As things go now on we buyers must wait, wait, wait," said Mr. Carlton. "Negotiations extend over weeks before we can get a reply either favorable or unfavorable to our offer for rights to a picture.

"Even then we buy the rights, and going into the territory, find that duplicate prints in use and being exploited. Complaint to the producer brings merely the reply that we have the rights, and should take measures to stop the pirating. This involves long trips, legal action, etc., all of which we must stand the expense on.

"In other words, we get no protection. It would seem to me there should be a different arrangement."

Head of Export Firm Gives Tobacco to Soldiers

In line with the campaign started by MOTION PICTURE NEWS to supply cigarettes and tobacco to the soldiers in France, it was learned Henry J. Brock, president of Inter Ocean, has for some time been active in contributing to funds raised for this purpose.

Last week in response to one gift the following letter was received by Mr. Brock from J. Rosen of Paris:

"Permit me to thank you once more, in the name of our soldiers of France, for your kind contribution of $27, to be applied to the purchase of cigarettes, which will be forwarded to the soldiers in the French trenches.

"I am sure, Mr. Brock, that you will realize with me that this will be highly appreciated by them, not alone from the material point of view, but still more so from the point of view that this will stand as a symbol that they have with them in this trying hour, the prayers and good wishes of their friends, of whom you can justly be considered one.

"Therefore, I thank you again, not only in the name of our gallant soldiers, but also in the name of our dear country, and with my heartiest personal greetings, remain."

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Lust of the Ages"

(Ogden-Independent Production—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

SOME one has said that a string of episodes, no matter how brilliant, can never have the attraction that belongs to unity and grandeur of movement. As a general statement, this is true, but Harry Revier has proved by his expert handling of Aaron Hoffman's script of "The Lust of the Ages" that there is at least one exception to this rule. Mr. Revier has created for screen presentation a production that will stand the scrutiny of the classes and motion picture audiences will commend this work.

There is not the unity that is commonly spoken of when commenting upon that rather vague, technical essence of a story—continuity in action. The very episodic nature of this production implies that strict adherence to continuity in the presentment is waived in favor of its more vital quality—propaganda. Its objective point is propaganda and it registers with all the convincing force of an experienced and qualified teacher. The story moves in individual scenes rather than in unbroken, dramatic narrative. It is a story of the ages, told in five reels of pictures and must necessarily waive one or more of the ingredients that go to make for perfection in story telling.

There is a certain grandeur about this exhibition that holds. Some of the best "double exposure" work ever shown on the screen comes to light in the presentment of this product of the Ogden Studios. To Harry Revier, the director, is due much of the credit for its entertaining value. He has been painstaking in detail, careful in generalizations, and has attributed to the minor but necessary scenes just the right proportion of reelage. The sub-titles are well chosen and to the point. There is no superfluous dictum. The lighter and serious veins of this production are intermixed so as not to detract from either one or the other but to hold the attention on the one main thought—the lesson that greed for gold brings unhappiness. There are one or two mob scenes that have been staged with a marked degree of finesse. They have been made spectacular without exaggeration and the action that results is enough and no more.

Lillian Walker's first appearance in independent productions after an absence of several months from under the glare of the calcium lights is evidenced in a most convincing manner in this episodic narrative. She fully realized that she was not portraying the comedy element for which she is best known to the picture world, and her endeavors to convincingly interpret a difficult role have brought results that will elicit praise from her many admirers. She tries hard and wins out. Jack Mowers, who has the only other important role, does fairly well, what some others could have done much better. One point noticeably in his favor is that he screens like a winner. But his action is at times not of the "sure-fire" brand. The photography is exceptionally good. If there is any reason why the exhibitor in any locality cannot book this feature and "cash in," the reviewer has failed to recognize it in its last trade showing.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

For the first two reels the scenes are in the nature of a prologue setting forth the reasons why Lois Craig (Lillian Walker), just out of school, conceived the idea for a story which she writes and entitles "The Lust of the Ages." Her mother, because of her father's greed for power and money, had neglected his wife and her life had been one of unhappiness. Lois becomes engaged to Byron Masters (Jack Mowers), who is the head of a powerful organization. The financial help from this organization supports the college from which Lois graduated and of which a Professor Mason is Dean. At graduation, Dean Mason delivers an address on the iniquities of wealth wrongfully applied and arouses the enemy of Masters who asks for his resignation. The Dean tells Lois, and she, after a vain attempt to persuade her fiance that he has done wrong in forcing the resignation of the Dean, breaks the engagement.

Here the main story begins. Masters is shown reading Lois's book and as he reads the story is related in pictures. Lois and Masters are seen in the garb of shepherds in the ancient times. Their lives are full of happiness with only the necessities of life. But the invaders come and drive the inhabitants of the "valley of contentment" from their homes. Again Lois and Masters are shown this time as Princess and army official, respectively. Masters as an officer in the army of one of the world powers, by chemical process, has discovered a liquid fire that destroys any metal, even gold. The Princess surprises him one day as he is working in his laboratory and convinces him that war is not to be tolerated. The rulers of his country have for a half century prepared for a war that would bring all the world under their command. The young officer consents to destroy the gold that is held in a mammoth war chest and is starting to do so when the monarch detects him and both he and the Princess are put to death. Masters is impressed by the story he has read and he communicates with Lois, says that he has reinstated the Dean of the college and that her book has convinced him that money does not bring happiness.

"The Mysterious Miss Terry"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE MYSTERIOUS MISS TERRY," Billie Burke's first Paramount picture, written specially for her by Gelett Burgess, turns out to be more of a joke on the audience than a mystery. The Miss Terry of the opening reels, introduced robbing a house and later living in a cheap rooming place, turns out to be none other than a society lady of great wealth just taking a fling at adventure. It must be confessed that the S. R. O. audience at the Strand one afternoon last week seemed to expect something more substantial in the way of a story, particularly after the preliminary suspense took a big drop when the identity of the heroine was revealed. It is mainly comedy, but even that element fails to get moving at anything approaching an interesting gait until the last reel.

Miss Burke's following, consisting largely of matinee girls, will doubtless enjoy watching her pose and subsequently smile as if at herself in a "now-I've-done-it applaud-me" way. Any latent histrionic ability which she may have concealed about her person the light character of the situations fails to bring out. Her support is efficient all down the list, comedy honors going to Walter Heirs, the heavyweight actor who has made such a fine mark for himself during the past year.

The production, which was in charge of J. Searle Dawley, Famous Players' veteran director, is adequate in every respect.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Miss Terry (Billie Burke) is introduced robbing the home of Helen Wentworth, a society girl. She takes gowns and money. Back in a cheap boarding house she engages in flirting with True (Thomas Meighan), a striving author; Freddie (Walter Hiers), a hardware clerk, and Quig (Gerald O. Smith), ribbon clerk. True is her favorite. She tests his honesty and finds it synonymous with his name. Then it is revealed that Miss Terry is Helen Wentworth. Still playing the game, she makes all her suitors happy with money, and later even though True is terribly cut up when he learns her identity she accepts his proposal.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—First and Second Episodes—Three and Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

CHARLES W. GODDARD, equally well known as a writer of plays and pictures is the author of "The Seven Pearls," Pathe's latest serial of "romance, adventure and thrills." Mr. Charles W. Goddard has evolved a wonderfully melodramatic plot which gives brilliant promise of catering straight to the taste of the serial public much in the manner as did those of his two former successes "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine." All the above-mentioned qualities, without which no serial would be actually complete are present in abundance in the opening episodes of "The Seven Pearls." The action is keyed at what is conventionally known as lightning speed and counterplots are introduced as rapidly as one can grasp them.

Mollie King and Creighton Hale, together a new combination, by their respective selves highly popular, will doubtless double past successes by their appearance in this serial. Miss King was never prettier than she appears in her various attitude and many gowns of the two opening numbers and Creighton Hale though he is more of the poser than the actor embodies those qualities which make for the "matinee idol" type. Leon Bary is the usually present mysterious member of the cast, constantly hounding the footsteps of heroine and hero.

This time there are seven separate pearls which Ilma, the heroine, must gain possession of, else become a member of a Turkish harem, with the alternative of seeing her father meet a terrible death. She is aided in her quest by Harry Drake responsible for the initial loss of the jewels and abetted by a persistent guardian and the Mysterious Masked Character. The conflict lies in the fact that the jewels are in the possession of various members of a gang of international crooks who naturally are loathe to part with the valuable stones.

The first two episodes are briskly developed and contain a wealth of fast action and exciting mystery. Outside of the fact that at first glance there seems to be a superfluous character in the person of the part carried by Mr. Bary, all is well with the serial. It launches itself with a splash and will probably continue at top speed throughout all its numbers much in the same manner as have Pathe serials of the past.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Harry Drake (Creighton Hale) traveling in Turkey is taken in by a crook, Grady (John Dunn) with the result that he steals a necklace of seven pearls, which the Sultan has left in charge of Bey. Discovering the loss the Sultan demands either the death of Bey, the addition of his adopted daughter Ilma (Mollie King) to his harem, or the return of the pearls within six months. Ilma, guarded by one of the Sultan's men, follows Harry to America and there communicates her mission to him. Resolving to help her he joins Grady's gang, each member of which possesses one of the pearls. Harry gains possession of one of the pearls but it is stolen from him by a mysterious character.

Handsome Jack (Henry Gsell), one of Grady's gang has possession of two of the pearls at the opening of the second episode. Learning his trade, Ilma surprises him while he is in the act of robbing a house. She holds him up demanding the pearls and he hands them over but when he goes the pearls are taken from Molly by her body-guard.

"Grafters"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"GRAFTERS" is a comedy-drama with a number of attractive points, although the melodramatic note played strongly for a while seems too heavy, with its introduction of the Mann Act, to be awarded such prominence. However, one can overlook this angle of the story and turn instead to its serio-comic high lights and the fine suspense that has been built up for the ending, which is of the all-to-seldom surprise variety.

Jack Devereaux appears as the young millionaire who is of the opinion that everyone is honest and no one wants his money. His personality is an engaging one. He is bright and breezy, although he interpolates some bits of business that detract from both the picture and the character he is playing. Mr. Devereaux is not, however, able to withstand the closeup, particularly in full face or at any angle that shows his somewhat pugilistic lower lip.

Anna Lehr as the emoting heroine does some very good acting. In fact, the cast is an exceptional one in every respect. Frank Currier, George Siegmann, Robert Crimmins and Irene Leonard perform well in roles of more or less importance.

James W. Adams wrote the story and Arthur Rosson directed under the supervision of Allan Dwan.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jack Towne (Jack Devereaux), millionaire, is warned by his Uncle Mark (Frank Currier) to beware of strangers. In a cafe Jack sees Doris Ames (Anna Lehr) and a little later he is seeing her every day. He proposes and she, torn with emotion, refuses. The people with whom she lives, "Mrs. Ames" (Irene Leonard), "The Menace" (George Siegmann) and "Laughing Louie" (Robert Crimmins) force her to take Jack to a disreputable roadhouse and spring the old "betrayed" trick. Jack is all cut up about it. Later it develops that the whole thing was a frameup on the part of Mark Towne. Doris had spoiled it all by really falling in love. Mark goes to pay off the trio and they, double-crossing him, demand more money, but luckily Jack is on hand with the police.

"Little Miss Optimist"

(Pallas-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"LITTLE Miss Optimist" is the story of Maizie-Rosie, a waif of the streets who paves the way for the regeneration of a young man by her hopeful preachments and who later solves a murder mystery absolving her brother of the guilt. Vivian Martin has seldom had a better vehicle for the exploitation of her charming talents than that provided her in this story by Gardner Hunting. It is originally treated in practically every respect; for instance the mystery is solved in church on a Sunday morning with a large congregation in attendance. Save for the fact that some of Mazie-Rosie's sub-titular philosophy is somewhat too sugary and metaphorical to slip from the tongue of a news girl and work convincing results, the picture can be listed among the very best of Miss Martin's productions.

Robert Thornby has given the picture a careful production. The settings of the church are praiseworthy and the manner in which the light effects have been handled merits nothing but commendation. The comedy relief is adequate and while some portions of the dramatic action, particularly the scene in which Winter slips the "thin" dime into the church offering, fail to register without a touch of comedy, these points do not appear in a ridiculous light.

Tom Moore is cast as Hendrie, the young man whom Mazie-Rosie sets on the road to good fortune. Charles Gerard gives an excellent characterization of Winter, the heavy of the picture. His acting is nicely restrained yet at the same time he gets the utmost from his part.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mazie-Rosie Carden (Vivian Martin), news-girl, proves a friend in need for Deal Hendrie (Tom Moore), a starving young musician. In parting she gives him a worn out dime for a keepsake. Hendrie obtains a position as organist in a church through West (Ernest Joy), who operates a coal company. Winter (Charles Gerard) his manager, who has been meddling with the accounts, blames Ben, (Charles West), Mazie-Rosie's brother, for the crime and discharges him. Later West discovers the truth and summoning Winter discharges him. Winter in a rage kills his employer and rifles his pockets, taking the dime which Hendrie lost. Ben coming to the house to plead with West encounters Winter. They fight and Ben is stunned by a blow on the head. He is accused of the murder but through the efforts of Mazie-Rosie who sees Winter attempting to dispose of the dime, the real culprit is identified. Hendrie proposes and is accepted.

"Golden Rule Kate"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

LOUISE GLAUM in this late production of the Triangle Studios, gives to Monte M. Katterjohn's drama of western life a certain impetus that carries it through five reels with an "hurray" written in capitals at the final "fade out." As the owner and proprietor of "The Red Light," a western dance hall, she registers in every scene and action, and her facial expressions are done with feeling. Miss Glaum typifies the part—lives in the western atmosphere and from the screen tells what the woman of the dance hall would have told in the days when the Golden West was in its infancy. She gets away from the cold proposition of just acting and puts herself in the place of "The Sage Brush Hen." "Golden Rule Kate" will "go over" by virtue of a good story and Miss Glaum's excellent characterization. The dramatic element is par excellence.

Reginald Barker's mob scenes are a finished product and the action which takes place both in the dance hall and in the church are examples of careful, painstaking direction. From first to last the scenes in this Triangle production will touch the responsive chord in the hearts of the most discriminating audience. Perhaps Mr. Katterjohn has attempted too much of the original in making his character of the minister of the gospel serve the same purpose as that of the rough-neck bartender, but this violation of the clergy's code of ethics is forgiven when we see the excellent moral effect the turn has upon the prosjective parishioners. William Conklin as Rev. Gavin McGregor is presumably of the Billy Sunday type, without the gestures. He needed to be to fill the position in Paridise, Nevada. Jack Gilbert, who impresses as the William Hart type, is fine in the role of "The Heller." Other members of an excellent supporting cast are: Mildred Harris, who is pretty and capable of handling a more important role than that of Olive Sumner; Gertrude Claire, H. Milton Ross and Josephine Headley. We have to remark upon the photography—it is a little bit better than the average. The lighting effects were in charge of an expert.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mercedes Murphy (Louise Glaum), known as the "Hen," conducts a saloon and dance hall in the heart of the West. The resort is known as the "Red Light." She handles a "Colt's" with "sure-hit" fame and could and did command the respect of men and women alike. At heart, the "Hen" is a woman of true goodness. She watches over her younger sister, Olive (Mildred Harris) with the care of a mother. "Slick" Blaney (Jack Richardson), the "Hen's" right-hand man, is interested in Olive. The "Heller" (Jack Gilbert) is interested, also, in Olive. A reform wave hits the town and a church is built across the way from the "Red Light." Rev. Gavin McGregor (William Conklin) starts in to clean out the dance hall and the "Hen" makes equal efforts to oust the church. The minister is taken from the pulpit, taken to the bar of the "Red Light" and commanded to drink. His open defiance gains the respect of the "Hen" and she allows him to go. Later the minister calls at the "Hen's" house and consents to "tend bar" for one hour if she will attend church services. It is agreed and both carry out their agreement.

Olive has been betrayed by "Slick" Blaney, and the "Hen" thinks the guilty party is the minister. She goes to the church with revolver in hand. Outside the "Heller," having learned of Blaney's betrayal of Olive's confidence, shoots him. The "Hen" and the minister become friends and the "Red Light" is no more.

"Think It Over"

(Art Dramas—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

WITH an original twist given a rather conventional story, Herbert Blaché, author and director, has fashioned for the Art Dramas' program a production that will prove satisfactory to exhibitor and patron. The author-director had a simple, straightforward story to work from and he has not attempted to go beyond its apparent limitations in presentment. The comedy element which is nicely interspersed with the more serious vein, is of the clean, humorous kind that strikes an audience at the right time and in the right place. The commonplace idea upon which rests the main theme of the story is lost in the original turn taken in arriving at the climax. The suspense is well sustained. At no time does the action drag.

In shaping his plot material, the author resorted to legal technicalities to bring about a happy ending. This is not to be discouraged in any script but Mr. Blache, however, has interpreted the statutes in a way that best serves his purpose.

Catherine Calvert, in the leading feminine role, presents a pretty picture. Her role offered opportunities for "over-acting," but Miss Calvert seemed to appreciate that such temptation was offered and carefully avoided being drawn into the net. Her work is to be commended. Richard Tucker, playing opposite, executes a good fall from a window, carries the comedy element without exaggeration and, in general, affords good support. A. Lloyd Lack and Eugene Borden are real villains. Auguste Burmester has a minor role.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Alice Rowland (Catherine Calvert), an orphan of means, is the ward of George Baring (A. Lloyd Lack), whose only purpose in life seems to be to gain control of his ward's fortune. To further his ends he attempts to force a marriage between Alice and his son, James Baring (Eugene Borden). Henry Whitworth (Richard Tucker), an old friend of Alice's mother, thinks it his duty to protect Alice from the unscrupulous guardian and prevents him from carrying out his plans to force a marriage between Alice and his son. Baring, fearing that Whitworth's influence with Alice is defeating his plans, keeps her prisoner in her room. She escapes and goes to the home of Whitworth. Whitworth realizes that Baring's position as guardian gives him the right to claim Alice. Whitworth and Alice in order to defeat the plans of Baring decide to hold themselves out to the world as married. Baring resorts to the law courts, to compel her return, and the two decide that they will be married for all time. The ceremony is performed and Baring's relation of guardianship ceases.

"The Divorcee"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE chief trouble with "The Divorcee" is that it starts out on the grounds that it is a comedy but fails, both in treatment and effect, to carry its original purpose through to the finish. The vitals of it are played in a strictly serious vein and even the humorous possibilities in the fact that the girl believes the minister a highway robber, and the minister the girl a notorious divorcee fail to create any considerable amount of amusement in the ranks of the spectators. The extremely obvious character of the story also has much to do with its rather unattractive progress, inasmuch as its diluted mixture of comedy and drama fails to register.

The first reel when Wanda decides to become a divorcee because it is the fashionable thing in Reno and when she is forced to concoct a husband's name, inform her attorney the grounds for her required separation and tell the whole story of her supposedly married life to a group of sympathizing women starts the picture off to the tune of a number of smiles and chuckles. Likewise when the minister proves himself a "regular fellow" by riding a bucking broncho after seeing a cowboy thrown from its back is the humor of a generally good sort, but subsequent events prove more tiresome than entertaining.

Mary Anderson and Alfred Vosburgh are featured. They make an attractive pair and do their best to put the picture over. Rufus Steele is author and William Wolbert director.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Wanda (Mary Anderson) on a visit to Reno decides to pose as a divorcee and consequently is welcomed into divorce society by Mrs. Pelham-Wilson (Jean Hathaway), its leader. Rev. Jerry Ferguson (Alfred Vosburgh) is presented with a regular western outfit by admiring cowboys. When Wanda's horse decides to run away, he is on the spot to rescue her and subsequently they enter the lists of romance, each believing the other a fearfully romantic personage. The sheriff hunting for a real outlaw and Wanda's brother discovering her at one and the same time roll the clouds of illusion away and a general happy ending results.

"A Bushranger's Strategy"

Episode "Further Adventures of Stingaree"

(Kalem-General-Film—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY W. K. STEWART

AS the title implies, strategy is the very essence of this plot, and while Stingaree, the gentleman bushranger, carries off the lion's share, the rascal who attempts to undo him is by no means lacking in resource.

Stingaree and his partner, Howie, are disturbed when they hear music in the vicinity of their retreat. They investigate and discover an Italian violinist, seated under a tree playing a sonata. The virtuoso introduces himself as "Rampora" and explains that he came to "zis wild plas" for "ze gran' inspirash." Howie suggests holding signor for ransom, and the Italian, believing in advertising, apparently falls in with the scheme. It develops, however, that the Italian is a police spy, and when he plays for Stingaree, whose love of music is well known, the strains of the violin lead the police to the camp. When it seems certain that Stingaree will be captured the wily bushranger slips away in a manner worthy of Raffles, and takes Howie with him.

Further mystery is introduced in the character of a young woman who is trailing the Italian. Developments show that she was a chorus girl in the same show in which the Italian led the orchestra. When the show stranded he robbed her of the savings which were to take her back to England. Stingaree and Howie, learning the girl's story, not only recover the money but wreak vengeance on the spy by taking off his socks and making him walk across the desert.

The action of the plot is entirely outdoors and many new and beautiful locations are introduced. The characterizations are interesting, particularly that of Barney Furey as the Italian, and it is apparent that Furey knows how to handle a violin. There are two feats of horsemanship which are genuine thrills and the episode may safely be classed with the best in this interesting series.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

A police spy (Barney Furey) who has robbed a chorus girl (Edythe Sterling) attempts to capture Stingaree (True Boardman) by playing upon the bushranger's love of music. Stingaree penetrates the subterfuge and with his partner, Howie (Paul Hurst), escapes when capture seems certain. They overtake the fleeing spy and recover the girls' money.

"The Barker"

(Selig—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM J. McGRATH

WITH the exception of the fact that Lew Fields is playing the leading part and playing it well, the latest Selig release, "The Barker" is a very ordinary picture. It is chock full of villiany, conspiracy and double dealing. Right near the finish a lot of "love stuff" comes to light and after almost four and three-quarter reels of heavy melo-dramatic action there is an expected bright finish that is really the only cheery chapter in the whole.

But all of the "heavy stuff," heart burns, deviltry, etc., that makes up the picture works as a good garnishment for the particular pathetic and all-sacrificing role that Mr. Fields is called upon to play, and fits into so well when one remembers that most of his life has been spent in creating laughter rather than tears. The circus angle in the majority of the picture is interesting enough and well handled, with scenes aloft on trapeze in the "big top" and plenty of flavoring added with the side show banners and freaks. Taking an average audience into consideration in the judgment of the picture, and especially the type known as the "neighborhood audience," "The Barker" will have a good mete of appeal and sustaining interest.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Professor Leo Fielding (Lew Fields) is happy and contented as a professor of languages in the King's University and idolizes his motherless little daughter Floria. His brother Henri (A. Franz Lenz) is a member of a secret anarchist society whom the Government is hot after. While Professor Leo is attending one of the meetings as the guest of his brother one night the King's minions raid the place and both brothers are arrested. Rather than have his brother sacrifice his youth, position and married life, Professor Leo decides to confess as the guilty one and swear that his brother is innocent. This results in the professor's banishment from the country. He goes to America and leaves his young daughter behind with his brother. They wilfully neglect the child and when it is old enough to be sent to its father in the States, Count DeGrasse, a returned exile, and very much of a villian, agrees to take the professor's daughter with him to America. The ungrateful brother of the professor hates the child and infers to the banished count that if she falls overboard en route a reward will be his.

The Count takes the little girl (Amy Dennis) through safe however and when in the States makes a circus performer out of her. He lives off her earnings and treats her cruelly. By this time Professor Fielding reduced to poverty gets a job as a barker for the same circus where his daughter, whom he believes dead, is the star performer. Through a series of circumstances he comes to know that it is his daughter and a happy reunion results. It is further added to when the young owner of the circus confesses love to Floria and they are married.

"Straight Shooting"

(Butterfly—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS the title very truthfully implies this picture is a western melodrama. Further than that it is filled with fine, effective western action, containing thrilling climaxes that never allow the interest to falter. Superior locations were selected for its enactment. The long shots of the cattle herds and the numerous bands of horsemen were picked with an eye to their appropriateness and in addition have been superbly photographed. The horsemen, incidentally, perform with an unusual disregard for their respective lives. In fact the stunt stuff in the last fight between the cattlemen and the bandits is loaded with sensational feats of daring that even go as far as to surpass most of the kindred action we have seen before.

George Hively, the author, has drawn upon reliably familiar situations for his story, yet the new setting he has laid them in sheds something of a new light over the whole. The reform of the bad man by the yearning look in the heroine's eyes paves the way for the final rout of the villainous cattlemen who would drive the settlers out of cabin and home. The ride taken by Joan to warn the settlers of the uprising of the cattlemen has all the thrill of Paul Revere's famous gallop, while the succeeding fight in which the marauders ride round and round the lone cabin, until the kind-hearted highwaymen arrive and save the day, is engineered on the style of the Indian attack in the comparatively ancient pictures.

Harry Carey, with his very own mannerisms makes a likable figure of "Cheyenne" Harry and Molly Malone is the typically sweet heroine. Jack Ford produced and has laid great stress on terrifically fast action, particularly when he is dealing with horses and riders. If he had left out a few of these riding scenes more connected results would have been attained but on the whole "Straight Shooting" leaves little to be desired from the viewpoint of the fan who devours the Westerns.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"Cheyenne" Harry (Harry Carey) and "Placer" Fremont (Vester Pegg) are employed by "Thunder" Flint (Duke Lee), to rid the land of settlers. Fremont kills the son of Sims (George Berrell), and when Harry sees the old man and his daughter, Joan (Molly Malone), mourning their loss he decides that the job is too dirty for him. Flint, learning this, sends Fremont to put him out of the way but in the gun fight that follows Harry triumphs. The cattlemen, led by Sims, plan to raid the settlers but Harry comes to their rescue at the last with a band of outlaws. After the fight Harry sees the love that one, Danny (Hoot Gibson) bears for Joan and he decides to leave, but Joan thinks quite differently on the subject and there is the happy ending.

"The Charmer"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ELLA HALL, reappearing in a small girl's part, is featured in "The Charmer." It is a light comedy offering with little to become excited about, but much to amuse in the way of kid stuff. Many of the gags are well worn, but no one will deny the humor in the old maid catching the boys in swimming and the judge sneaking off to try his luck at the hook and line before going to court. None of the comedy is the least bit boisterous but practically all attempted laughs register as such.

"The Charmer" will find its greatest appeal among children. Miss Hall has a clever little opposite in the person of James McCandlas, while a tattle-tale fat boy is present to burlesque the villain. Ambrosia, the part played by Miss Hall, is forever dreaming of fairies and imagining her little playmate, Don, as a Prince Charming come to life. Such elements will probably make "The Charmer" a success before the sort of people it mirrors. Of suspense, there is none. It is just plain, quiet, wholesome comedy, its effect to be measured largely by the popularity of the lead.

J. Grubb Alexander wrote the story, Fred Myton did the continuity and Jack Conway produced. The photography is clear enough, but the lighting in its constant brilliancy is far from realistic. A young pickinniny and his pet monkey are two of the important comical factors in the picture.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ambrosia (Ella Hall), sets out for America to join her relatives, the Whitneys (Belle Bennett and George Webb). The ship is torpedoed and Ambrosio finds herself in a life boat with Ceasar, a little negro boy and his pet monkey as her only companions. They are washed ashore in Penntucket, a staid New England town, and then follows Ambrosia's experiences with Cynthia Perkins (Martha Mattox), an old maid, her youthful romance with Don Whitney (James McCandlas), and the reunion of the parted Whitneys, chiefly through her influence.

"Scenes from Great Screen Plays"

(National Association of the Motion Picture Industry—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"LOVE Scenes," "Great Fights" and "Dare Devil Deeds" are the separate titles under which the National Association has assembled scenes taken from well known screen plays by courtesy of World, Metro, Bluebird, Universal, Vitagraph, Mutual, Fox and Triangle Film companies. Three reels were shown for review. It was announced that two reels would be shown in the near future making five in all which number will complete the set or series.

In these scenes appear Rupert Julian and Ella Hall, Carlyle Blackwell and Ethel Clayton, Donald Cameron and Lillian Walker, Mary Miles Minter, Franklyn Farnum, Anita Stewart and Evart Overton, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Clara Kimball Young, Madame Petrova, Alice Brady, Mary Pickford and Henry Walthall, Earle William and Edith Storey, Harold Lockwood and May Allison, E. H. Southern, Neal Hart, Jack Sherrill, Robert Warwick, William S. Hard, House Peters, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin, Helen Holmes, Joseph Kilgour, Virginia Pearson, Charles Richman, Mary Anderson and Antonio Moreno.

The three reels shown for review bring together many of the acknowledged screen stars. Each reel shows a few selected scenes coming under a general head such as "Love Scenes from the Great Screen Plays." It would be difficult to select one scene as better than another because they all are clearly entitled to the designation, "Love Scenes" and for those who are impressed by such, these depicted in the National Association's assemblage will serve the purpose, excellently. The same may be said of the scenes coming under the other two general heads, "Great Fights" and "Dare Devil Deeds." The "Great Fights" are well staged and the participants show that they "mean business." The "Dare Devil Deeds" have been selected for their thrilling qualities and some real "thrillers" are given.

Considered as a whole and as an attraction of unusual appeal, it is safe to assume that this collection of scenes will be received with enthusiasm by a picture audience. Because of the wide selection of screen favorites interpreting roles that are pretty generally accepted with favor, this offering of the National Association should prove a winner to the exhibitor and of exceeding interest to the patrons. Some of the scenes are shown with little more than a flash on the screen, others run to some length, but the main purpose of all is brought out.

"War Films of the Russian Revolution"

(Skobeleff Committee—Ten Reels—State Rights)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

THE awful devastation wrought by the Germans on Russian soil and the desecration of the sacred monasteries, together with the events which transpired immediately following the revolution in Russia, are revealed in ten reels of authentic war films which were shown for the first time at the Rialto theatre, Sunday. The gruesome acts of desecration perpetrated by the Germans when they destroyed the Cathedral of Pochayev, dug up the graves of the monks and fairly littered the ground surrounding the cathedral with their corpses, are evidenced by these pictures taken shortly after the German troops had left the scene of their conquest.

So gruesome were these scenes that the management of the Rialto theatre had thrown on the screen an explanatory message, telling the audience that it was not customary for such pictures to be shown but in this particular case it was thought advisable because of the news value of these events. Sub-titles announced that after the Germans had taken possession of the Cathedral, a moving picture machine was installed on the altar and pictures shown for the amusement of the German officers. The walls of the Cathedral were covered with obscene drawings.

"The Caucasus Front," "The Fall of the Trebizond," "The Russian Southwest Front," the procession which followed the dethroning of the Czar and the royal family, are the four principal episodes of these vivid pictures of Russia's part in the great world war.

"Mother Love and the Law"

(Crystal Photoplays Company—Seven Parts)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM J. M'GRATH

IF the state rights market was the incentive for an independent producing company to make such a good picture as this is, then we say long live the state rights market. "Mother Love and the Law" is the first effort of the new Crystal Photoplays Company of Peoria, Illinois, and by the employment of skill and craftsmanship, labor and effort they have made their first picture a worthy one, a production that makes it seem as if it was their tenth and founded on experience, rather than their first.

The pictured story is suggested by the well remembered Dolly Ledgerwood Matters case and that young woman's famous fight for her child and a fortune that created a sensation in the courts last year. George A. Siegmann, a former associate of David W. Griffiths, directed it, and as the result there is no reason hereafter for him to depend on the influence of his association with that peer of directors. He has proved his own worth in this picture and it stands as a tribute to his craftmanship in the field. Unlike the general run of independent productions, there is photography here that will vie with the best that we know.

The story has been ingeniously handled, it has not been padded and the interest grows with every reel. The selection of Dolly Ledgerwood Matters to be the principal in this screen story, whose chapters are so much akin to the actual circumstances in her own life, was more than a wise one. Her name and her actual appearance in a reel life role that was a real life parallel is not the only ace in the case that the Crystal holds. Miss Matters, even though it was her first appearance before the camera, has acquitted herself splendidly and seemingly done the impossible with her work throughout. And hers was no little job in this tale.

The rest of the cast make-up is small in numbers, but large in ability and good work. O. A. C. Lund, who aided in the direction and also played the part of Jimmy Harwood, the whole-souled, well-meaning but misunderstood suitor for Miss Matters' heart in the picture has laid himself open to undiluted commendation for his work. A hard and enthusiastic worker and called upon to shoulder several of the biggest thrills in the picture, he stands out as one of its mainstays.

Patrick Calhoun, remembered recently in "On Trial," is the chief of "heavies" and he leaves nothing to be desired in his work. Thomas Flynn, F. D. Wood and Mabel Bardine all did their excellent bit in their supporting roles.

One bit of work in the picture, that one might say smacks of Director Siegmann's connection with Griffiths, is a bit of dream allegory well placed that vividly brings out better than any famous work of art that Biblical incident, in all its splendor and wisdom, of Solomon making his decision as to which of two claimant mothers deserve the disputed possession of the child. It is an artistic and refreshing bit and adds greatly to the picture.

"Pride and the Man"

(Mutual—Five Parts)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM J. McGRATH

THE true-to-life details of a prize fight, with genuine looking seconds, ring, audience and even the gore and knockout stand out in this picture featuring William Russell. The rest of the picture follows the usual trend of many of the movie plots; young man of low station marrying society debutante. Both loving and faithful to the other but both feeling the continual sting of the mesalliance.

The prize fight upon which hinges most of the action and excuse for the story will be the big point in this picture from an attraction standpoint. There is nothing lacking in making it vivid and realistic—in fact a better one than is staged these days in metropolitan athletic clubs. The photography on it has been particularly good, and Mr. Russell himself does some superb acting in it—for good acting is necessary in an effort to make a prize fight realistic. The fact that Al. Kauffman, well known heavyweight pugilist, appears as the other combatant in the scene has been a good move and a big advantage from a drawing standpoint.

The rest of the picture, as said before, is good but contains nothing unusual. It will fit in on any program however and should make a good proposition for a theatre situated within the bright-light section of a city. The production has been well cast, besides Mr. Russell, as the following names will show: Francelia Billington, Clarence Burton, George Fisher and Paul Weigil.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jack Hastings (William Russell), a well-bred young man, has entered pugilism because of his love of boxing. He is a champion and a social lion. In this manner he meets Thelma Everett (Francelia Billington), a wealthy young woman with whom he falls in love. He abandons his ring career and marries Thelma.

His efforts to make money and a business name for himself as a contractor are futile due to the conspiracy of Thelma's father, and Warren Leonard, a young society blade and business man, who was a disappointed suitor for Thelma's hand. Hastings' firm goes to smash and he secretly learns that he owes his pretty and faithful wife $50,000 that she slyly stuck into the business in an effort to save it. In order to meet thise debt he decides to break his vow and fight one more fight. He does this, gets the $50,000 and, although Thelma had left him for breaking his promise to her not to fight again, she sees the motive and they are reconciled.

Perfect Light Control

At the will of the Operator

THE amperage can readily be regulated to light or dark pictures as easily as turning gas up or down.

At the same time, the voltage lowers and raises automatically in proportion to the changing length of the arc.

The Transverter insures a perfect arc, a steady, bright, white light and more artistic projection of pictures without waste of current.

THE MOTIOGRAPH FOR DEPENDABILITY

EVERY MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNER AND MANAGER SHOULD READ THE FOLLOWING LETTER FROM KANSAS CITY, MO.

Dear Sirs: Many times I have been considered as a radical man in my views regarding the equipment that I use in the Sapphire Theatre, but the fact that I am compelled to run at such a righ rate of speed and run so continuously from early morning until midnight, I feel that I must use only the equipment that gives the best results and costs me the least money to maintain.

In my experience in the show business (which started seven years ago), I have used every make of machine with the exception of one and until such time as you persuaded me to install the Motiograph equipment I had been buying new machine heads every six months and in many instances I had to have my machine heads overhauled thoroughly at an expense of from ten to thirty dollars. I have had the two Motiographs in service running at the rate of from five to eight minutes per reel for more than seven months; the expense so far has been eighteen cents, and from what my operators advise me they are good for another six months steady running without any more expense.

If any of your customers desire any further confirmation of this letter (that is if you show this letter to any one), have them write or see me, for I know good equipment when I see it and will be only too glad to assist any manager towards locating the most practical moving picture machine that to my knowledge has been manufactured.

Yours very truly,

A. E. Elliott, Prop.,

Steadier Light

The alternations of the current in an alternating-current arc cause the light to flicker. This flickering is made more noticeable on the screen if the shutter is not operating properly, causing fatigue to the patrons' eyes and making them dissatisfied. The current in a direct-current arc flows continuously in the same direction, so that its light is steady and restful.

If your electric service is only alternating current, a will convert it into the direct current you need. These outfits are automatic, they regulate the current to produce the steady pictures your patrons like so well. Write for folder 4205-C for more particulars.

The Exchange Man

IF any exchange man could see the sample clippreciated by the various branches of the industry which it is aimed to help. The "Anti-Misframe League" was not, as some thought, an attempt to hold up the operator but on the contrary an attempt to help him by making the exchange assume the responsibilities which rightfully fall upon it.

Here is a letter from an exchange man who writes as he sees conditions and who is willing to jump in and help at this time when help is needed in order to keep pictures in that enviable position which they hold at the present time. If other exchange men will show the same co-operative feeling as Mr. Shapiro we will soon be beyond the danger mark when patrons are being driven away from the picture houses because of the absolutely inexcusable condition of films.

DETROIT, MICH., August 16, 1917.

Motion Picture News,
Projection Department,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

Just a few lines to assure you of the deep appreciation I personally feel for your reference to what you have deemed wise to call "NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE."

In my opinion, better words or suggestions have, at no time, ever been printed in any trade magazine, in the interest of the producer, exchange or the exhibitor.

I want to compliment you most highly for your reference, and also want to assure you of my sincere desire to co-operate with, and be of any assistance to you, at any time and all times that you may deem necessary.

Wishing you all the success that you are justly deserving of, I beg to remain,

Very respectfully yours,
GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION,
A. I. SHAPIRO, Manager.

IF any exchangeman could see the sample clippings of film which come in to us, some from junk, some from second run, and a great deal from stock only used two and three times, they would swear that it had never left their exchange in that condition. However, it had left in just that state of neglect.

The exhibitor claims he can not pay the price, and only for one reason—because the people will not come into his house. No theatre man begrudges the exchange any price, no matter how high, providing the picture will play to enough money to leave him a decent profit. However, if the money is not there the rentals must be on a descending scale or the house may be closed.

It is another case of biting off your nose to spite your face. How can you as an exchange man hope to show the home office a passable report unless the theatres you serve are making money? This is one reason why the advance deposit system seems necessary to many, yet as usual the bird comes home to roost and we find the exchange man near the root of the trouble.

He allows those under him to send out patched, torn, greasy, worn out film ready to be junked and expects the American public to pay to see it. If that same man had his own intelligence insulted in the same manner a few times he would soon learn why his exchange was showing a gradual falling off in profits.

We are apt to forget that pictures are in the main produced with the aim of entertaining and that the public is not forced in against their will and separated from their money without having something to say themselves. If they are not given something which pleases them, they stay at home in the evening, so why fool ourselves by thinking that we are handling something which cannot be gotten along without.

Every exchange man must supply film in the very best possible condition at all times or he is helping to ruin a well established and profitable business. It is up to him.

E. K. GILLETT.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

'Twas Kaplan of 306

San Diego, California, writes: "Brother Sherman. Will you please give me the name and address of the delegate to the last I. A. convention from New York, who works, I believe, for the Precision Machine Co. He is not only some booster for their machine, but he gave me more information, and showed me how little I really knew about the Simplex mechanism while at Cleveland, and I want to correspond with him if he is agreeable, regularly. Hoping to see you at the next convention, I am fraternally yours."

In Reply: There can be no other inference than that the brother you have in mind is Sam Kaplan, of Local 306. He, in company with Brother Harry Mackler, were the delegates from New York, and Kaplan is employed by the Precision Machine Company. Here is his biography: Sam Kaplan, born in the year 1887. He began working as operator when nineteen years of age, being employed at what was then known as Webers Music Hall, on Broadway, between Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth streets, New York City. After holding down several "jobs" as they were then called, he entered the employ of the Precision Machine Company, with whom he has been employed ever since, first as testing inspector, and now chief inspector of projection; it is he who gives the final O. K. to every Simplex projector leaving the factory. In addition to this he has been the mechanic for some of the leading Broadway photo-play productions. He is married and has one child. On June 7, this year he was elected as president of the local which he represented at the convention—306. After perusing the above you can readily see where the "boosting" part comes in. He is undoubtedly well qualified to give information on this subject, having grown up with the business as it were, and it is to his energetic boosting that much of the success of his company is directly attributable. The accompanying photograph is a good likeness of Brother Kaplan, and I will turn your communication over to him for his consideration, and if he can find spare time I am sure he will be glad to correspond with you.

American Projection Society to Hold First Banquet Sept. 18

THE first annual banquet of the American Projection Society will be held at the McAlpin Hotel, New York, on Tuesday, September 18, 1917, at twelve o'clock midnight.

A number of guests eminent in the profession will be present, and hearty co-operation is asked, to make this affair a big success, and place it permanently on the map of the projection world.

Tickets including lady and gentleman are $6.00. Remittances may be made to J. Basson, Rialto theatre; George Bothwell, Criterion theatre, or to George C. Edwards, secretary banquet committee, Forty-fourth street theatre.

Fame of Simplex Machines Spreads Widely

The Orpheum Circuit of Theatres recently ordered Simplex projectors for the new house at New Orleans, and also for the Orpheum theatre at St. Paul, Minn.

Walter Rosenberg has selected Type S Simplex projectors for his new $250,000 St. James theatre at Asbury Park, N. J.

From far away Australia, L. H. Cornell, operator of the Grand theatre, Perth, West Australia, writes that his Simplex projectors are giving satisfaction in every respect. The Precision Machine Company will be pleased to learn they have added another member to the Simplex Boosters Club.

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Indoor Sport

MEMBER No. 20 writes: "At our last regular meeting held on August 5, I took up the subject of the A. M. F. L., and when I was through the local voted to enroll the entire membership. The boys were very enthusiastic over the proposition; especially the ones employed in out-of-town theatres. They get the rub. To give you an idea what they are up against I will mention one incident. I covered one of those out-of-town jobs on the 18th of July and ran a Fox feature entitled 'The Prison Without Walls.' I only made nineteen patches in the first reel. Talk about indoor sport, I had some time that night; I was there one evening and worked a week! To be serious, there is no doubt in my mind that the A. M. F. L. will go a long way toward remedying this imposition on the operator by the exchanges. It should prove a great help also to the theatres using the so-called 'old film.' The city operators do not complain for they rarely run anything over sixty days old. I will now close with best wishes to you and the League. P. S.—You may publish this letter along with the list of names if you think it worth while. I wanted to meet you when you were in Cleveland, but for some reason or other I let the opportunity slip by and before I realized it I was on my way home. Better luck next time."

Comment: I am publishing your letter for the reason that a number of local unions are under the impression that I am trying to shift work from the proper persons onto the shoulders of the operator. Nothing could be further from my thoughts than this, as you and all fair-minded operators who have read my writings will concede, but I will take this subject up later. "The Prison Without Walls" was not a Fox feature but a Paramount, released March 15, and the five months' run this film has had, with the lack of proper inspection probably accounts for the enjoyable time you had. The Paramount company is, however, doing exceptionally well in their film inspection at present and we hape they will continue along these lines—if as General Grant said—it takes all Winter. If the rest of the brothers have any desire to meet yours truly, perhaps I can arrange to visit you at one of your regular meetings. Don't think that I am looking for any brass band to greet me at the depot, or any elaborate banquet in my honor. I am an operator, and not ashamed of it. And when that's said, all's said.

U. T. E. Reports Big Demand for Powers Machines and Minusa Screens

P. CALLEGES, who operates the Grand Opera House and Royal theatre, both in Salem, O., has just installed two Power's 6B machines, which he purchased from the Cleveland branch of the U. T. E. Corporation. Mr. Calleges reports good business in both houses.

The following theatres have recently purchased new Power's projectors from the United Theatre Equipment Corporation branch at Omaha, Neb.: Laemmle Film Service, Omaha, Neb.; George A. Lee, Colome, S. D.; Paulson Bros., Schleswig, Ia.; A. M. Beardsley, Shenandoah, Ia.; M. W. Sells, Randolph, Ia.

Recent installations of the Minusa Screen, as reported by F. A. Van Husan, manager of the United Branch at Omaha, are as follows: Fred Smith, Wahoo, Neb.; Empress theatre, Fremont, Neb.; A. M. Beardsley, Shenandoah, Ia.; Hipp theatre, Omaha, Neb.

Griffin Returns to Nicholas Power Co.

HERBERT GRIFFIN, who left the Nicholas Power Company last June to accept a position in Detroit, has again joined the staff of the Power Company's selling batteries. Prior to leaving the Power Company, Mr. Griffin traveled throughout the country boosting the Cameragraph for five years, and his return as traveling representative will be welcome news to exhibitors and supply men throughout the industry.

Film Trimmer

CLEVELAND, OHIO, and particularly Local 160, I.A.T.S.E., should be proud indeed of those among its membership who are of an inventive turn of mind. Last week we mentioned the device of brother Weiss, known as the "Weiss Film Waxer." This week we are pleased to illustrate another device of benefit to the operator, and the invention of an operator.

Amos J. Smith, a member of Cleveland Local 160, is the father of the little tool or instrument shown herewith. He calls it a "Filmtrim." I call it something more. It is a necessity! Brother Smith called at my office several times, finding me out each time, which I consider most unfortunate. However, upon his return to Cleveland he sent me the sample illustrated on this page, and which we shall try to describe and pay tribute to.

If you are planning to buy a new projector, make sure that it is equipped with a lens, which will bring out sharply every detail in every part of every picture.

Marlux lenses combine the highest perfection of optical corrections with a mechanically perfect focusing construction.

Your operator will be delighted with the sureness with which the Marlux focuses, for as there is no rotation in focusing, there is no possibility of a displacement of the image on the screen.

OPERATORS KNOW that thorough inspection of film cannot be made when there is a constant fear of their fingers being cut by broken sprocket holes, badly made patches and the time-worn V cut which has been the cut made from time immemorial. Even though they tape their fingers or wear gloves to protect them, there will be more damage done to the film than would otherwise occur from being run through the machine in poor condition. With the "Filmtrim" such a fear cannot exist in the mind of the operator, for the perfect, round and smooth notch cut by this little tool makes film inspecting a pleasure. As shown, no matter how badly a film has been misused, this little device can "fix it." There are no parts to become worn, and if properly used it will last a lifetime; the cutting tool being made of case-hardened tool steel and for use on celluloid film only, it will hardly ever become necessary to sharpen it even.

It is not only a tool to be recommended to the operator, but is one that exchange managers would do well to equip their film inspectors with. A number of exchanges have already done so, and it is hoped that others will follow their example. Several of the best operators have for a long time been using the "Filmtrim," and one noticeable instance is the Stillman theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, where one of these devices is in use by Messrs. Canady and Gleichman, operators. Brother Gleichman says: "There is more use for such a device in a house of this kind than you may imagine. [The Stillman uses first run pictures.—ED.] Film sent us direct from the producer very often contain many broken perforations." The "ticket punch fiends" may keep their hand in and yet do some good by using this device. The members of the N.A.M.F.L. would also be benefited by its use, and last, but not least, the film exchange would positively be the gainer if all their inspectors had one AND USED IT. The price is not exorbitant—five dollars, I believe. Further particulars can be had concerning this device, by those interested, by writing to the Filmtrim Manufacturing Company, Cleveland, Ohio.

"Coming now to speak of the further development of the manufacture of optical glass, the scientific treatment of the process disappeared with the death of J. Fraunhofer, as has previously been mentioned. The Optical Institution carried on the technical work as before, but produced only enough glass for its own requirements and for those of the Merz firm. The quality of this glass appears to have remained on a par with the product of other European glass-makers. What great importance must be attached to J. Utzschneider's personal influence may be inferred from the fact, mentioned by E. Voit, that a competitive manufactory was established in the very year of J. Utzschneider's death. The latter died on January 31, 1840, from the results of an accident, and in the same year the Munich banker, Ruedorfer, founded an Optical Institute with glass-works in Kohlgrub, near Murnau, in which the meltings were carried on under the supervision of a workman, formerly employed by J. Fraunhofer. This Institute did not remain long in existence, owing to the lack of scientific assistance required for the computation of the lenses which were to be ground from the finished glass. The glass produced at this works was utilized, up to the "fifties," by the optician, Baader, of Munich.

"Here we may also mention the attempts of the mechanic, Friedrich Korner, who, under the patronage of the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, tried to melt Flint glass at Jena between the years 1826-46. His endeavors, which were directed solely toward the melting of ordinary Flint glass, remained, however, without result.

"C. A. Steinheil, as A. Safarik reports on M. Perty's[1] authority, had also set himself the task of melting glasses with proportionate run of dispersion. To this end he had spectrometrically examined the different varieties of optical glasses, and succeeded in inducing the celebrated J. Liebig to undertake the chemical analysis of the glass samples. He hoped to discover, by simple calculation, the proportions of the various components required, in order to arrive within certain limits, at the prescribed variation in dispersive power. Concerning Steinheil's attempt nothing has been published.

"George Merz, succeeded, after his death in 1867, by his son, Sigmund, continued, to a certain extent, the attempts of J. Fraunhofer to obtain glass which would exhibit proportionality of dispersion. S. Merz's meltings in the year 1868 showed the influence of the percentage of lead upon the Optical properties of glass, and in his account, published in 1882, he came to the conclusion that the requirements, as regards parallel run of dispersion, could be satisfied by suitable regulation of the amount of lead entering into the composition of the glass.

"This is all that is known with regard to the art of glass-melting in Germany in the earlier days. Nearly everything relates to J. Fraunhofer, or to his successors and zealous imitators. Manufactories for the exclusive production of optical glass, and having nothing to do with the grinding of lenses, do not appear to have existed anywhere.

"Vastly different was the outcome of J. Fraunhofer's art in other countries, and primarily in the French speaking domain. After the death of P. L. Guinand the secret remained in the possession of his two sons, one of whom, probably the oldest, was the previously mentioned Aime Guinand. The two brothers separated, the elder becoming proprietor of a glass-works in the vicinity of Neufchatel, which was later operated in Solothurn by his successor, Theodore Daguet.

"The younger son formed a connection with G. Bontemps (one of the directors of the Choisy-le-Roy glass-works), and the Paris optician, N. J. Lerebours, and produced glass in conjunction with them according to his father's methods; the information which he imparted was considered insufficient, however, so the partnership was dissolved. According to Sh. Muspratt's statement[2], Thibeaudeau, the technical director of the glass-works, was thereupon drawn into consultation, and as a result of their joint efforts, they were successful, in 1829, in producing glass discs, free from defects, of 13 to 15 inches diameter. Relying on G. Bontemps' account, we are able to speak of the regular production of optical glass in France from this time on. This was first taken up by G. Bontemps, and later by P. L. Guinand's youngest son, who was succeeded, after his death in 1851, first by his son-in-law, and afterwards by his grandson, Ed Feil. The Guinand method of glass production was published, almost contemporaneously, in 1840, by G. Bontemps and the younger Guinand. Most probably the statement made by Ch. Fabre[3] that: "Guinand had introduced boracic acid into the glass in 1842," refers to the younger Guinand. The kind of glass produced in this fashion does not, however, appear to have been very durable."

It may prove of interest to set forth here the formulae employed by Guinand and Bontemps, respectively, in the production of Flint and Crown glass. The following formulae are reproduced from George Dawson's English translation of Monckhoven's "Photographic Optics"—London, 1867, pages 39-40:

"Somewhat later on, in 1848, Bontemps, finding himself politically compromised, resigned his position at Choisey-le-Roy and accepted an invitation from the firm of Chance Brothers to come to Birmingham. His removal thence carried the art of glass-making into England, and the Chance firm acquired a considerable reputation as makers of optical glass; as a matter of fact the growth of the Guinand-Fraunhofer art in England was very creditable with respect to its technical excellence, and we may safely say that up to more recent times photographic objectives were made exclusively from French or English glass.

"The great success which had attended the technical manufacture of glass in Benediktbeuren in J. Fraunhofer's time, and Fraunhofer's brilliant achievements in telescopic optics, had become widely known, and had aroused great interest. This was all the more natural inasmuch as the production of glass, and particularly Flint glass, had always been looked upon as a trade secret. In 1824 the London Astronomical Society appointed a commission to conduct an inquiry into the methods of manufacturing Flint glass. The commission, whose membership included J. F. W. Herschel, Michael Faraday, G. Dollond and P. M. Roget, came to the conclusion that the improvements necessary in the manufacture of optical glass were of a mechanical, rather than a chemical nature, and they concluded that glass free from striae could only be obtained by constant agitation (stirring) of the molten mixture. The leading spirit of this commission, Michael Faraday, did not confine himself, however, to this purely theoretical discovery, but busied himself, both in his own laboratory and in the Pellat glass-works, with the practical solution of the question. By making some changes in the chemical composition he produced readily fusible glass, which therefore greatly facilitated the constant stirring operation. This substance, which possessed remarkable limpidity, was known as 'Faraday's Heavy Glass,' and proved very important for use in experiments on the polarization of light by magnetic action. According to Sh. Muspratt (loc. cit.) it is composed of the following ingredients:

Protoxide of Lead	104 parts
Silicate of Lead	24 "
Dry Boracic Acid	25 "

"The next advance, made independently of the Guinand-Fraunhofer school, was of French origin, being the production of Zinc-Crown glass, by Mäes, of Clichy. The exact date of this discovery is not known with certainty; its first appearance seems to have been at the London Exhibition in 1851, where the Zinc-Crown glass was distinguished by the award of a Council Medal. It contained oxide of zinc and a certain percentage of borax or boracic acid, and was colorless and homogeneous in the mass. We learn from Ch. Chevalier's communications that this glass was used in the construction of his photographic objectives. (Chevalier was one of the first to produce camera lenses.—Ed. Camera Dept.).

At the London Exhibition, however, greater stress had been placed upon the applicability of the new glass to the construction of telescopic objectives, and two plates, colorless and free from striae, were exhibited, one of 4½ inches and another of 7 inches diameter.

"Most interesting is the abstract given by Sh. Muspratt from the report of the Council jury on Optical Glasses. In this abstract considerable attention is drawn to the importance of Mäe's attempt at the removal of the secondary spectrum (when achromatising a telescope objective) by the use of Zinc-Crown glass in place of Flint glass, while the customary Crown glass was to be replaced by a hypothetic glass 'in which fluorine enters as a distinguishing ingredient, in combination with silica, aluminum, or other materials.' Such hypothetic glasses, colorless and homogeneous in appearance, have been made in small quantities. Since this report of the 1851 jury, however, nothing more has been heard of the matter, and it does not appear that this method of trying to construct objectives with diminished secondary spectrum has been followed up.

"Following the Mäes process, which seems to have been carried out on a large scale—the regular production of Zinc-Crown being mentioned even as recently as 1856—only one new variety of glass of French origin has come to my (Von Rohr's) notice. This glass, the particulars of which became known in the year 1867, was melted by the Parisian glass-manufacturer, Lamy. It was a heavy Thallium-Flint glass of specific gravity, 4.18, yellowish in color, and possessing the following refractive indices:

(nD—1.673) (nB—1.661) (nH—1.710)

Whether this glass ever came into use we are unable to say. From the foregoing it is apparent that the realization of the importance of new glasses had not lain dormant in France and England at this period when the business of optical glass manufacture was in a flourishing condition. In France some new glasses did appear, but it does not seem that the attempts at their production were conducted in any systematic manner.

"Not long after the death of J. Fraunhofer—in the year 1834 to be exact—William Venables Vernon Harcourt, an English clergyman, commenced some experiments in glass-making. At first he could make but few tests, on account of the hindrances which are always incident to experimental laboratory meltings. A fresh impulse was given to his endeavors, however, by George Gabriel Stokes, whose acquaintance he made on the occasion of the British Association's meeting at Cambridge in 1862. This savant had made extensive researches upon fluorescence, and as he had investigated this phenomenon in the case of various substances, he evinced great interest in W. V. V. Harcourt's work. Stokes' investigations on flourescence, which appear to have been taken into consideration, were soon abandoned, however, in consequence of the greater importance attached to the spectrometric examination of Harcourt's glasses. From this time experiments were systematically carried on, and in the course of 166 different meltings a series of widely different compounds were tested, in order to ascertain their influence upon the dispersion of the resultant glass, throughout the different regions of the spectrum. It was, doubtless, very difficult to determine this influence exactly, because W. V. V. Harcourt was not successful in producing small pieces of perfect homogeneity, and the striae present in the prisms ground from these samples made exact spectrometric measurements impossible. Placing reliance upon their measurements, however, Harcourt and Stokes were able to set forth certain rules concerning the influence of various components upon the dispersive properties of the glass. They stated, for instance, that Titanic acid increased the dispersion at the blue end of the spectrum, whereas Boracic acid extended the red end. The principal aim of their researches was J. Fraunhofer's old object of producing glass suitable for removing the secondary spectrum, in the case of achromatic objectives. They considered that they had practically attained this end, and produced, according to A. Safarik[4], two discs of Titanic glass and two of Terborate. These discs were 3 inches in diameter, and were to be used in the construction of a telescopic objective free from secondary spectrum. In constructing this objective it was found necessary to discard one of the Titanic discs, and to replace it with a lens ground from ordinary Crown glass. The objective thus produced was not faultless, but proved the possibility of abolishing the secondary spectrum. These efforts toward the production of new glasses appear to have terminated with the death of W. V. Vernon Harcourt, in April, 1871.

"The results of these experiments were published by G. G. Stokes, and underwent a critique by S. Czapski[5], who commented upon the Englishmen's conclusions as follows. The English savants had perceived correctly the specific influence of Boracic acid, but they were in error in their statement concerning the influence of Titanic acid upon the dispersive properties of their glass. By reason of the inconvenience in working with Silicates, caused by the difficulty of fusion and the pasty character of the fused glasses, Harcourt's experiments had been chiefly conducted with Phosphates, the influence of which upon the resultant glass had been looked upon, by Harcourt and Stokes, as due to the Titanic acid.

"The work of W. V. Vernon Harcourt was not followed up in England to any great extent; one attempt at the production of Titanic glass was made by J. Hopkinson, at the glass works of Messrs. Chance, in Birmingham, but was unsuccessful, because Titanic acid does not exert the influences attributed to it (by Harcourt and Stokes), as has been previously noted.

The reason that, notwithstanding the publications of G. G. Stokes, similar experiments were not continued by the English firm, or by the French and Swiss glass-makers, lay apparently, as E. Abbe has pointed out[6], in the fact that in the first place the chances of success were slight, while, in the second place, the production of optical glass had become almost a monopoly, so to say, and no great necessity, existed therefore, for the glass-manufacturers to experiment upon unprofitable side-lines."

article you write in reply to "Wausau, Ind.," under the heading "Damage to be Paid For."

In your comment, as you call it, you say "Inspection of film has been a joke," and, of course, you place all blame in the matter upon the girls who are employed as film inspectors by many of the foremost film exchanges. According to your written statement, you make no exceptions and place all girls in the same class, condemning them all. Do you forget that years ago when you were an operator you had YOUR FILM THOROUGHLY INSPECTED AND SENT TO YOU IN PERFECT CONDITION ready for use, and that this film was inspected BY A GIRL AT FIVE DOLLARS PER WEEK?

Of course, I approve of your idea in standing by your "Fellow Union Men" by saying they should be placed as "Inspectors" in the film exchanges thus replacing with men the positions now held by girls, but, "Friend editor" perhaps they (the MEN) could not send out the film in as good condition as your "Girl Inspector" did, and I might also say that "HE" could not send them out in BETTER CONDITION even if "SHE" did work for FIVE DOLLARS per. Remember this "Friend editor" in most cases girls can turn out better jobs than men even if they do not belong to the union and demand big salaries. The writer would gladly become a member of the "union" if there had been any such thing for girls in those days. Kindly bear in mind Mr. Editor, that by not condemning all "girl film inspectors," because a few are careless which I am sure can be found even among your "Union Men," you would greatly favor, an "Old Timer"—formerly with Chas. E. Dressler Film Co., 143 East 23rd St., New York City. COMMENT: Here is a girl who in taking up the cudgels for those of her sex who are so unfortunate as to be compelled to work from 8 to 10 hours per day inspecting (?) film for the munificent salary of five dollars per week, is at least entitled to the gratitude of those placed in such an unenviable position. However, realizing that it is "ungentlemanly" to contradict a lady, we must reiterate and maintain the stand we have taken in the matter. INSPECTION OF FILM NOT ONLY HAS BEEN but in a number of instances IS A JOKE. The editor of this department has no apology to make, although he will admit there WERE and ARE some exceptions. He does not by any manner of means CONDEMN ALL. Although it was unkind of the writer of the above letter to remind "FRIEND editor" of the passing of time, we forgive her, and in return say, as we allow our mind to travel back over the years we are confronted with the pleasant memory of a beautiful, dark haired, brown eyed girl who now signs herself "Old Timer" and to the best of our recollection can truthfully say we never had any occasion to complain of the condition of the film INSPECTED BY THIS "GIRL INSPECTOR."

Conditions, like people, change. So does the type of workers, and while "Old Timer" was, and is yet I hope, a conscientious worker there are few of her kind employed in the film exchanges of the present day. Does this little girl realize that where film exchanges formerly (12 years ago) had from 25 to 50 reels of film to inspect daily they now have anywhere from 100 to 1,000? Can proper inspection be had when this number of reels must be gotten out? NO!!! The majority of girls employed in the capacity of film inspectors will not risk cutting their dear little fingers, for what would "Charlie" say if their hands were cut and not nicely manicured? Not that we blame the girls, God bless them, for wanting to look their prettiest, but the men, God—bless them, too, have no such compunctions. And the OPERATOR IS THE ONE TO INSPECT FILM, if not that at least he should SUPERVISE the inspection, and we earnestly hope that the day is not far distant when at least one "union operator" will be employed in such capacity in every film exchange in the country. If that is standing by our "Fellow Union Men" then I am afraid, dear girl, we are guilty. At present it seems to be the only solution to the "film inspection" bugaboo. I will further agree with "Old Timer" by saying that some union men are careless, but that is easily remedied by the officers of the union when any complaint as to carelessness is brought to their attention. The union is responsible for the work of its members, but who is responsible for the work of the FIVE DOLLAR PER WEEK GIRL INSPECTOR? She can not be held responsible, and at best she can only lose her "job," while on the other hand the union binds itself to pay for any damage which is caused by one of its members. And as for your statement that "girls can turn out better jobs than men, even if they do belong to the union," I can only say this: IF THEY CAN why don't they? It would be interesting to learn what other girl film inspectors have to say concerning this, and we welcome their correspondence in the matter. I am glad to learn that "Old Timer" would have been a union man—I mean woman, if there had been such an organization in existence in those days so many years ago.

Leonard's Motor Grease

RUDOLPH WETTER, secretary of the Ruess & Wetter Company, who is making a specialty of supplying theatres with a specially prepared motor grease, described in these columns some time ago, reports that the sales during the past few weeks have more than exceeded his expectations. The latest large amusement company to adopt the use of Leonard's grease as a part of the operating room equipment is the Marcus Loew Enterprises. This in itself speaks well for the grease, and the further fact that the United Theatre Equipment Company, including all branches, is handling it, proves that it has much merit.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Improvising in Picture Music

Improvising and synchronizing in motion picture music cannot be thought of apart, for improvising is "temperamental synchronization." This phrase is quite a mouthful, yet its meaning is clear. In two words it expresses the instant response, on the part of musician and music, to the "temperamental"—that is to say, the emotional—situation the picture portrays. It creates that bond of sympathy and interest between audience and "show" which is the prime factor in the former's enjoyment of the latter.

Mere "timing" is not the true secret of successful improvising. It has its decided advantages, but its evident limitations as well. Adaptability, quickness in handling unforeseen contingencies developed in the projection of the pictures themselves, contingencies which call for instant decision on the part of the musical leader, a sense of fitness for "local color," are far more important. Imagination, constant attention to the principle of "flexible tempos," and absolute co-operation with the film operator at all times must underlie any motion picture improvising that deserves the name.

Every leader of a moving picture orchestra has his own detail methods of working out his musical synchronization. But "improvising," the ability to duplicate, at a moment's notice if necessary, the dramatic action, mood and atmosphere of the film picture in music, is its foundation. Thus color, contrast and continuity of idea are secured, and the orchestra swung smoothly and naturally through all changes of scene and action.

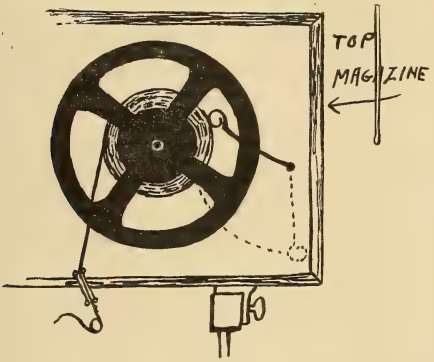
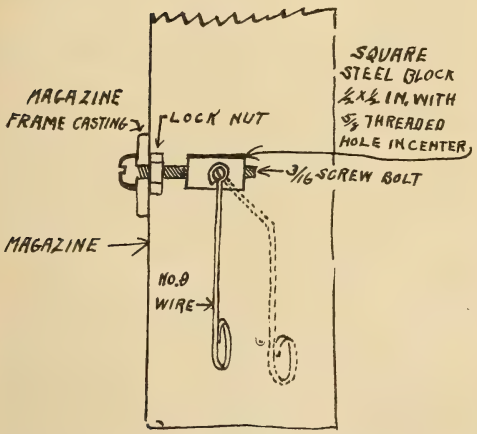
A "Warning" Stunt

DARRELL S. KEPPLER, Crawfordsville, Ind., sends in a drawing and writes: "As I promised you a few days ago I would send in some 'stunts' I feel that I must keep my word. This one is very simple and takes but little time to construct. I hope the enclosed drawing is plain enough for you, if not, just let me know and I will take a photograph of the 'reel' thing. As you will note, it is an apparatus to give the operator 'warning' and notify him when to strike the arc on the second machine. At first glance you might think it would scratch the film, but if a No. 9 wire is used, and the ring in the end bent properly, there is no danger whatever of this occurring. I have used two of these for about eighteen months, running 'first run' films every week, and have yet to scratch a film with them. The object of the device is this: The wire rides on the film until it reaches the desired place, then falls through, strikes the magazine, and that is all there is to it. Best wishes to you and the Anti-Misframe League."





COMMENT: In submitting your device to readers of the department, I am doing so for the reason that your method is an inexpensive one, and as the great majority of operators like to experiment and have very little money with which to construct a more costly device, this will answer the purpose for which it is intended very well. It was my belief, at first glance, that the film would be liable to become scratched, and I think an improvement can be made, which will do the work equally as well, and be on the safe side also. Would therefore suggest that the wire be bent in the shape of the letter "L," and before the lower angle is bent to shape would place a sprocket idler on it and then make the final bend.

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

Comforts Provided in New Alhambra

THE new Alhambra theatre, recently opened at Indianapolis, contains some innovations that will be highly appreciated by its patrons, not the least of which is a mezzanine floor whereon are provided writing desks and materials, and also free telephone service for patrons. There is a women's restroom and a men's smoking room in the basement, which also contains a large music room for orchestra rehearsals, a projection department for the inspection of films, a recreation room for employees and the manager's office.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 1,260, of which 700 are on the main floor, 500 in the balcony and 60 are loge seats.

A complete ventilating system insuring constant air circulation is in use. The operator's booth is fireproof and is provided with fine ventilating shafts. Automatic shutters are a further precaution.

A specially built screen reflects a picture 12 x 16 feet. The screen is the background for the stage with the pipe organ forming the proscenium arch.

Music will be a feature of the Alhambra programs and is supplied by a ten-piece concert orchestra under the direction of Charles Worthy, who has been in charge of the Alhambra's music for the last year. Jesse G. Crane continues as organist.

WHEN the Orpheum theatre, at Gary, Ind., opened its doors on Sunday, August 19 last, its old patrons scarcely recognized it as the same show house that had been dark since May, for during the intervening time workmen have been busy on both interior and exterior, and today the Orpheum stands as not only the oldest, but also the handsomest theatre in the city.

The workmen began by putting a new roof on the building and by making changes in the interior which completely changes its appearance. A new paneled and decorated ceiling catches the eye and from this are suspended seventeen hand-made silken electric light canopies, giving the effect of a Chinese temple fully setting off the paneled and decorated ceiling and walls.

The big feature of the new Orpheum will be the pipe organ which has been installed at the left of the stage and this will be in almost constant use. The stage itself has been greatly changed and will be equipped with a full supply of new scenery, drop curtains and advertising curtain. The back part of the stage has been made impervious to cold and the dressing room capacity has been doubled.

The heating plant has been doubled in capacity and there will be no more complaints on account of a cold stage or frigid auditorium. The aisles have been covered with real carpet and the lobby will be covered with marble effect linoleum throughout. The house now has a seating capacity of 1,000 and every seat commands a distinct view of the stage. Drop curtains of handsome design have been placed over the entrances and at the sides of the stage, adding greatly to the attractiveness and coziness of the house.

More than $15,000 have been expended already by Manager V. U. Young in the improvements that have been made in the theatre, the actual work being done under the supervision of Perry H. Stevens. This includes the installation of one of the biggest and most attractive electric signs in the city which cost about $1,500.

Strand, Newark, Renovated at Cost of $500,000, to Reopen Sept. 2

THE Newark theatre, one of the oldest and largest of local playhouses, will reopen on the evening of September 2 for the exhibition of photoplays.

As a result of the costly alterations made by the new owners, Max and J. Edmond Spiegel, Mitchell H. Marks and Henry Waterson, of New York, who operate the Strand theatre there, the house has been so changed in its outward and inner appearance that it is hardly recognizable by those familiar with it during the thirty years it was devoted to legitimate productions. The changes in the auditorium have been most marked. The seating capacity has been increased to 2,200 but cutting twenty feet off from the old stage and by setting back the proscenium arch, by replacing the eight old boxes by others of modern design and by substituting for the old gallery and balcony a broad and deep balcony that affords an unobstructed view of the stage from every seat.

Over the promenade at the rear has been constructed a large oval opening similar to that of the New York Strand theatre. A large $100,000 pipe organ, built by the Austin Company, of Hartford, Conn., has been installed behind the boxes on either side of the proscenium arch. In addition to the pipe organ an orchestra of twenty-five pieces, under the direction of Ward Johnson, of New York, will be employed.

The theatre has been reconstructed at a cost given at almost half a million dollars.

John B. McNally, a well-known local theatrical man, will be the manager of the playhouse. Mr. McNally has had twenty-six years' experience in the theatrical business. He has been manager of Keeney's and the Strand theatre, both of this city. He will be assisted by George Turner, also well known in theatrical circles in this city. Mr. McNally declares that the Newark theatre will furnish motion pictures on a scale never before attempted in New Jersey.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

ARIZONA

Floyd Gardner of Payson has opened up a show house in that promising little town up in the northern end of Gila County where it is cool all the summer. He is only running two and three days a week.

ARKANSAS

The Crescent Airdome on Main street, Russelville, is being torn away and the site will be utilized by Oscar H. Wilson in erecting a new $25,000 theatre which will be leased by E. H. Butler.

CALIFORNIA

Manteca will soon have another movie theatre. The latest one will be in the Palm building just east of the Pennebaker furniture store, and will be managed by Steve Pelton of San Jose.

CONNECTICUT

Work on the new $35,000 Community house at Waterbury is in progress. At the present rate of speed the building should be completed and ready for occupancy by winter. There will be plenty of recreation for both young and old. In addition to this a moving picture house is going to be installed, a luxury for which the whole town has been longing since the Dayton moving picture house was burned down a few years ago.

ILLINOIS

The new Lyric theatre at Blue Island has just been completed. It is a strictly modern house, with seating capacity of 1,200 and is under the management of Fitzpatrick and McEvoy.

From out of the world's troubles and black clouds there comes a ray of sunshine and hope; on Monday, Aug. 20, Gus Schade opened his popular Washington street playhouse, Bloomington. The first week was devoted to pictures. The first part of the week "The Barrier," one of Rex Beach's masterpieces, was shown, and Thursday, Friday and Saturday "The Crisis" was the attraction. One week from Monday, Aug. 27, the vaudeville season opens in earnest and the management promises one of the classiest bills ever offered to the Bloomington public. Mr. Schade's reputation for putting across live bills is well known and this year he has gone out and "captured" the best there is in vaudeville for Bloomington patrons.

The theatre has been given a complete overhauling; new draperies have been added, the building repainted, remodeled, the seats gone over and extra nice cushions added, a new line of scenery has been purchased for the stage, the walls have new pictures painted upon them and the vestibule looks like the front of the Palace theatre, Chicago. The Majestic management has expended $7,500 in the improvements, they feeling that the faithful support given them by the patrons in this city deserved the spending of this much money.

The new sign boards in front are the latest thing in theatrical production and Mr. Schade announced he was proud of the fact that they were the first of their kind to be put into this city.

Prices this year are as follows: For the week of pictures the first floor will be 25c.; all above the first floor 15cc. For vaudeville, matinee, main floor, 20c.; first balcony, 15c.; for night performances, main floor, 30c., they will be reserved this year, and the box seats will be 35c.; first balcony, 20c., and the second balcony, 10c.

The boxes have been put in metropolitan shape, new draperies, the seats upholstered and otherwise artistically decorated.

Mr. Schade announced that on Sept. 4 all the boys who have been drafted into the army will be admitted free; all they need is their certificate stating they have been chosen for the army. They will have the privilege of bringing mother, wife, sister or sweetheart. This applies only to the matinee and the management hopes to have their house filled with soldiers and their immediate families. From the light drama the boys will leave to become actors in the greatest drama ever given to the world.

Edwin Dicey has been secured to lead the orchestra.

INDIANA

J. F. Dysert is to erect a new moving picture theatre which will seat 500 people on a lot adjoining the Arlington hotel, Rochester, to have seating accommodation of at least 500, and a 30-foot stage.

The new Vaudelle theatre on South Walnut street, Muncie, which has lately been remodeled and made attractive in many ways, is now open to the public and patrons declare it to be one of the "niftiest" little motion picture houses in town. The new Vaudelle is as near fireproof as it is possible to make it and Manager Lacy paid particular attention to the question of ventilation. Patrons of the new Vaudelle are assured of comfortable seats, first-class pictures and plenty of fresh air.

KENTUCKY

The new Liberty theatre, Mount Sterling, under the management of N. A. Wilkerson, opened last week at the stand which was formerly the Paramount, and has been enjoying a very satisfactory patronage.

MISSOURI

Ground was broken last week for the $50,000 motion picture and vaudeville theatre being built by the Melba Amusement Company on the southeast corner of Grand avenue and Miami street, St. Louis. The building is to be of re-enforced concrete construction and will seat 1,400 people.

It is expected to have the theatre ready by the first of November, so that theatregoers can pass directly from the airdome now being operated on the premises into the closed structure at the opening of the fall season.

This is considered by some to be one of the best localities and the management is reputed to be one of the most successful in the city.

The officers of the Melba Amusement Company are Dr. O. T. Upshaw, president; Dr. H. A. Upshaw, vice-president; T. Lavin, secretary, and G. Bauer, manager. The plans have been drawn and the work will be supervised by A. J. Tuschschmidt, architect. The R. A. Matthews Contracting Company will attend to the construction.

This building is one of a group of three that are to be immediately erected on this lot. Plans are being drawn at this time for the $175,000 Woodmen of the World fraternal building to occupy 151 feet of the Grand avenue frontage, and on the Miami street side there will shortly be constructed 24 two-room apartment suites at a cost of $30,000.

MONTANA

With the issuance of a building permit last week to Kieburtz & Smith, contractors, the first step has been taken in the reconstruction of the old Broadway theatre and a new epoch for lovers of the legitimate stage has been inaugurated in Butte.

Butte is going to have a real theatre—one of the finest in the northwest—and the long-cherished dream of the citizens of the mining city is already emerging out of a land of fantasy into reality.

Workmen have already commenced the construction and repairing of the old Broadway theatre, the patriarch of all Butte's showhouses, and when it emerges some three months hence it will be a source of pride to the theatregoers in the city.

The proposed improvements will necessitate an expenditure of about $100,000 and have been under the consideration of the owners—the Theatre Realty Co.—for some time. The house will be remodeled in its entirety according to the plans and specifications.

NEBRASKA

Fred and Will Maryland are making plans to open a new motion picture house at Seward. While nothing definite has, as yet, been decided on, they purpose putting up a building that will be a credit to the town. Full particulars will be announced as soon as plans are perfected.

NEW BRUNSWICK

Mrs. R. H. Davidson, proprietress of the Dreamland theatre, Moncton, has purchased the building and site, with land adjoining same. She will follow this up by renovating and improving the theatre. Mrs. Davidson has been running the theatre about three years and has made a splendid success of it.

NEW MEXICO

Construction of a vaudeville and moving picture theatre at Deming, New Mexico, by C. K. Nenes and P. G. Souris, proprietors of the Lyric theatre in Miami, and another theatre in Clifton, will start within one week, Mr. Nenes announced, and will be completed in between 40 and 60 days. The new structure will cost about $12,000. It will be fitted with modern fixtures, including comfortable chairs, and a roomy stage and dressing rooms.

Deming is to be one of the sixteen cantonments at which will be trained the men from the national army drawn under the selective draft, and it is announced that there will be between 37,000 and 40,000 men there.

Mr. Nemes will go to Deming when the structure is completed and will manage the business.

TEXAS

E. N. Collins of Electra is having plans prepared to convert a store 24 ft. 9 in. by 150 ft. into a theatre building, and as soon as they are perfected a full description will be published in these columns.

"An Alabaster Box"

A Five Part Blue Ribbon Feature

From the Famous Novel

by Mary E. Wilkins Freeman and Florence Morse Kingsley

Directed by Chester Withey

For eighteen years Brookville had merely existed. It was a "dead town," and the passing years brought to its people only a deeper, more intense hatred for the memory of Andrew Bolton whose defalcation at the Brookville Bank had ruined the village.

But one day Lydia Orr, a stranger, slipped quietly into Brookville and bought up the old Bolton home—run down and deserted while its former owner was serving his long prison term.

The villagers could not believe it "natural" that a young woman who would not tell her whole history should squander money without some hidden—and perhaps improper—motive. Despite her sweetness, her charm, Brookville regarded her with distrust.

And then one night a spectre from the past walked abroad in the streets of Brookville. All the pent up hate of the villagers broke with the fury of doomsday. The trail of the spectre led to the old Bolton home. Lydia, thrown to the frenzied mob, gave up the secret she had guarded so closely—and Brookville forgave.

Bayard Veiller's Phenomenal Stage Success That Ran For Sixteen Months on Broadway

MARCUS LOEW SAYS:

"We had such remarkable success with 'Within the Law' around here, that I would like to play it at the Stillman in Cleveland and at the Valentine in Toledo if it has not already been played there."

And remember—the Loew Circuit played "Within the Law" at the same time that every other Greater New York City circuit played it—a simultaneous competitive run in the same districts.

BROADWAY THEATRE, Newburgh, N. Y.

"'Within the Law' proved the greatest attraction from a financial point that I have ever shown in my theatre. Notwithstanding the fact that we charged a price double that of any price ever charged for a special at this theatre, every seat was sold each day of the exhibition, with the sidewalk blocked with those waiting for a next performance. The advance sale was surprising."

MADE IN RUSSIA

N. S. Kaplan's repertory of Russian plays must not be confused with pictures advertised and marketed as Russian but which depict Russian scenes that exist only in the imagination.

NONE of the so-called Russian pictures heretofore presented in this country have been made in Russia. While possessing a moiety of Russian characters and Russian incidents, they are little better than travesties and the directors have exhibited the most ludicrous ignorance of elemental facts. To reproduce Russian life, to get Russian atmosphere, one must go to Russia.

N. S. Kaplan's repertory of Russian plays was actually produced in Russia by celebrated Russian stars from stories of world renowned Russian authors, but under American direction—a combination that has given to the world

"Polly Of The Circus" Captures Chicago

GOLDWYN'S first production has been seen by the public and critics of Chicago at a pre-release presentation in the Colonial Theatre. The result, as we expected, is a remarkable demonstration of approval. Exhibitors everywhere will be interested in these comments by the powerful and influential Chicago critics:

CHICAGO EXAMINER: "Polly of the Circus" is an event in Filmland's history. . . . Goldwyn has attained a high notch on the ladder of success with its first production.

CHICAGO HERALD: Goldwyn has played a trump card by leading off with Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus." She is elfish and pathetic and the circus is a wonder.

CHICAGO EVE. POST: "Polly of the Circus" is a work of art, not merely a vehicle for the exploitation of a star. Mae Marsh is back, as wistful and appealing as ever. . . . A wonderful picture.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE: Mae Marsh is a most lovable "Polly." She bubbles over with personality plus. The production has humor, pathos, and the great horse race is a "pippin."

Not a cancellation!

Pearl White has again proven that she brings more money into the box office than any star in the world. Hundreds of exhibitors have reported capacity business with and this in the hottest weather of the summer. Not a single cancellation has been reported on this serial while every week the bookings increase phenomenally. We have today more bookings on "The Fatal Ring" than we had on the wonderful "Iron Claw" the same number of weeks after release date.

¶ Many theatres have run the first six episodes and many of our branches have shown the first nine episodes. Exhibitors and exchange men say every episode has a punch and is better than the previous one.

¶ The home office film committee has just seen episodes 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14 and they are the best yet. Thrill after thrill, mystery, suspense, lavish production—"The Fatal Ring" is crammed full of them.

¶ "The Fatal Ring" will go down in film history as being a bigger business getter than "The Iron Claw" and that means that it is the biggest serial attraction that has ever been made. It is

An enormous success

¶ If you haven't booked this serial do so to-day. If it has already been shown in your community run two episodes a week until you catch up. Every one will want to see it, so there's capacity business for all. "The Iron Claw" meant the difference between profit and loss to hundreds of exhibitors last year. Here's your big opportunity this year.

is beyond all question Miss Reed's greatest triumph. Adapted from a play by Geo. Broadhurst and Abraham Schomer that took Broadway by storm and played for over a year to S. R. O. houses, it is one of the most powerful dramas that has ever been put on the screen. In the cast with Miss Reed are players all of whom are worthy to be starred in their own productions. The direction by Ralph Ince is perfect—the production lavish. "Today" is pronounced by the magazine and newspaper reviewers a marvellous picture. We believe "Today" will outdraw any feature made this year.

THE MAD LOVER

was written and directed by the celebrated Leonce Perret who has produced a wonderfully artistic picture, combining strength and beauty. Robert Warwick does in it the best work of his career. His talent is so well known as to need no elaboration. He is supported by the beautiful Elaine Hammerstein. "Today," tremendously vivid, sensationally dramatic, is in seven parts. "The Mad Lover," rarely beautiful, delighting eye and mind alike, is in six. Produced by Harry Rapf.

PARALTA PLAN

Costs More—Worth More

INFORMATION reaching the offices of this company indicates that some exhibitors have misunderstood the price of Paralta Plays sold under the Paralta Plan.

That there may be no doubt in any mind in reference to this important point, we will endeavor to present a concrete example—

Supposing you are renting a picture for $25 a day and are running it two days. That would cost you $50.

Now, under the Paralta Plan, the price would be, say, $75; but the additional $25 secures for you special advantages represented in —

AN UNLIMITED RUN, A TWELVE-MONTHS' CONTRACT, A RESTRICTED TERRITORY AND RE-BOOKING PRIVILEGES, WHICH FREE YOU FROM COMPETITION.

A picture sold you under the Paralta Plan is WORTH MORE AND IT COSTS MORE, for we give you an opportunity to create something for yourself and to keep all that you create.

If you do not want to buy Paralta Pictures under the Paralta Plan, you can secure them on the Star Series booking system—eight smashing big Bessie Barriscale and eight stupendous J. Warren Kerrigan productions a year.

'MANX-MAN' OPENS AT CRITERION

Is Strong Human Photo-Play Production of Story by Hall Caine.

ELISABETH RISDON THE STAR

Picture Is Presented by George Loane Tucker—Holds Interest Throughout Reels.

The film version of Hall Caine's well-known novel, "The Manx-Man," received its first public showing at the Criterion Theatre last night before an audience evidently impressed by George Loane Tucker's super-feature.

Few films can lay claim to such universal appeal, both in theme and production. It offers a strong human story of love, told by three principal characters and a host of extra players, a plot that holds tense interest throughout, the construction of the scenario making the development of scene making the story easily interesting for all, whether fully devoid of the book or not. It is utterly devoid of any suggestive or sensational scenes, the plot so delicately and forcefully carried along that it can be appreciated by all

"THE MANXMAN" A STRIKING PICTURE OF HALL CAINE'S NOVEL

"The Manxman," Hall Caine's famous novel, had its first screen presentation at the Criterion Theatre last night, and ran such successful opposition to hot weather that it kept a capacity audience literally bound to the chairs for two hours.

"The Manxman" is an unqualified success. It is a big, gripping picture, filled with the stern, grim characters with which Mr. Caine peopled his novel. From the point of photography and setting, it is as near perfect as the most enthusiastic picture fan could wish. When frequent applause greets scenes in which the only action is provided by drifting clouds, or angry waves breaking on the rugged Manx coast—scenes in which humans play no part—sufficient has been said of the picture's photographic merits.

As for the cast, which is large, much might be written. The characters are as real as if Mr. Caine himself had suddenly discovered somewhere on the Isle of Man the men, women and children he put in his story and turned them over en masse to George Loane Tucker expressly for the purpose of making a motion picture. It would be difficult to single out any individual in awarding the laurels, but if this were to be done, Fred Groves, the Pete of the picture, would win without question. He has brought to the part an interpretation and a skill at delineating what the author wrote into the character that has seldom been seen on Broadway. Elizabeth Risdon as Kate Cregeen and Henry Ainley as Philip Christian complete the list of principals with well nigh perfect acting. Practically the same might be said of the remainder of the huge cast, even including three children, ranging apparently from six months to five years in age.

With story, cast, photography and setting on such a high plane of merit, it only remained for Mr. Tucker to add to the whole the element of the spectacular. This was not lacking, for the big scenes showed 11,000 people in the camera's range, including a regiment of real British soldiers, survivors of the Battle of the Marne. In these scenes the same skilful direction was evident.

The story of "The Manxman" is the well known to be dwelt upon. The picture is new to New York, but it is safe to say that few real picture fans will fail to see it.

"The Manxman," Loan Tucker's picturization of Hall Caine's most human story, was shown for its first time in the Criterion Theatre last night and was well received. No man who sees the picture will ever again say that he does not care for photo-drama for the play is a long series of gorgeous scenes, each more beautiful than the other, each more beautiful chapter of scenes and introductory music showed the spectators just how close the tight little isle of Man is to and Scotland, England, Ireland, never show the white fleet in calm its outer islands are looking for trouble.

When the Isle of Man at his disposal, Mr. Tucker has chosen his cations well. One of the most interesting scenes shows the assembling of the throngs at the court on Tynwald Hill, where for more than 900 years it has been the custom of the inhabitants to gather to hear the annual proclamation of the laws and to give the right to dispute any law or act might spell injustice. An Unsolicited Letter to Mr. Fox

It is the La Tosca of the films, so terrible and thrilling in its climax that I felt as if I could scarcely endure it, and yet wild horses could not have torn me away from it.

In "The Spy" you have done more than make an interesting play. You have rendered the country a great patriotic service, for its propaganda is of the kind that will go straight to every heart and stir every latent drop of patriotism in it. If I were Uncle Sam, I should order every playhouse in the land to run it until I had all the volunteers I needed.

Yours sincerely,

What Other People Say
of
LILLIAN WALKER
The Darling of the Screen and

"THE LUST OF THE AGES"

From the book by Aaron Hoffman Directed by Harry Revier

"From first to last of that sort that will make sure appeal to feminine audiences. Particularly charming and strikingly well done. Should be billed as a special attraction."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

"Ingeniously directed and photographed along original lines. A timely story. It ranks as one of the most important photoplay productions of the present day."—Jolo, in Variety.

"Pretentiously produced and excellently staged, 'THE LUST OF THE AGES' is a picture decidedly above the average run and is imaginatively and picturesquely presented. Miss Walker's many admirers will be delighted by her return and be glad to see her in a picture that has many claims to the unusual."—Sunday Telegraph.

"An interesting and unusual offering with technical bits of artistry and decidedly different from the ordinary routing productions. It has an element of romance, but beneath it all there is a thought which will reach home. The interest is held throughout and any fan will consider this a production worth while. Miss Walker's work in this production will not soon be forgotten."—Wid.

"Exceptionally good State Rights feature. Entirely different from the average run. Miss Walker's work is above criticism."—New York Review.

"The film will sell itself because it is a criterion of photographic art, beautiful to the eye and holds the attention throughout. It is one of the pictures which can be warmly endorsed."—L. H., in Billboard.

"A production that will stand the scrutiny of the classes and registers with force. There is a certain grandeur about this production that holds. Some of the best work ever shown on the screen comes to light in this production. Miss Walker's work will elicit praise from her many admirers. If there is any reason why the exhibitor in any locality cannot book this feature and 'cash in,' the reviewer has failed to recognize it."—Kelly in Motion Picture News.

"A pretentious subject with many novelties, touches that add to the picturesqueness of the subject."—Moving Picture World.

"An excellent interpretation, both for beauty and direction, of an absorbingly interesting story and the interest is not permitted to lag for a moment. Miss Walker displays her customary ability and charm. Exhibitors managing any class of theatre may rest assured that 'THE LUST OF THE AGES' will meet with instantaneous success."—F. T., in Dramatic Mirror.

"Lillian Walker has done nothing so good as her portrayal of Lois Craig in 'THE LUST OF THE AGES,' nor has any screen actress been allotted a more delightful character to portray. Her work stamps her as one of the screen's foremost players. The episodes of 'THE LUST OF THE AGES' are tremendously gripping with much heart interest."—Exhibitors' Herald.

Above is the verdict of the keen-sighted, discriminating critics upon whom the trade relies. We can say no more.

Franchises for the remaining seven Lillian Walker productions to be produced during the year are being awarded to the State Rights purchasers of the initial production.

The Dramatic Mirror says: "Not very long ago Lew Fields wished to convince the world that he could play a serious role as well as he could play his justly famous humorous characterizations. Although the play in which he appeared was not a huge success, Mr. Fields met with unanimous approval. In 'The Barker' he brings the same conviction to the screen. All through the picture it becomes necessary for him to convey the sadness in the life of the man who he represents and he does so with so many deft, artistic little touches and such a sweet gentleness, never once overacting, that his performance is effective to an extreme. . . . Exhibitors will realize the advertising value of the name of Lew Fields. The announcement that he will appear as the star of a production is sure to draw crowded houses."

A Grievous Mistake

THE directors of the National Association, in our opinion, respectfully and firmly submitted, did an unthinking and unwise thing in refusing the proffered affiliation of the American Exhibitors' Association.

In a nutshell the situation is this:

An important group of exhibitors came to the national organization of their industry and asked for admittance.

The offer to affiliate was an out-and-out one with no strings attached, no demand for anything in return. It was simply a constructive effort toward that complete industrial organization, so vitally and pressingly necessary to the future of the motion picture.

The application, despite President Brady's earnest plea for harmony, was refused.

Why? That is the point-blank question that will come spontaneously to the lips of many in this industry—in particular to the many exhibitors who may or may not be members of either of the two exhibitor associations.

Purposes of the National Association

THE National Association was formed, a little more than a year ago, to organize and unify this industry. It was a most difficult, and at times, discouraging undertaking.

The fundamental idea was to make the association comprehensive in membership, and, therefore, powerful and influential in action.

We were facing then a year filled with legislative dangers, many of which in themselves could all but destroy this industry, and the livelihoods of many in it.

The branch most difficult to get in was that of the exhibitors. An appeal to this end was made to the Exhibitors' League.

The weakness of the League at that time—last year—was fully understood by the framers of the National Association. So they proposed the automatic membership of the then League members with no dues to the Association; and they furthermore proposed that all exhibitors in order to become members of the National Association should first have to be members of the Exhibitors' League, the principal idea of this being the building up, thereby, of the membership of the League.

On account of misunderstandings, cross purposes and political insincerity upon the part of a few, this appeal to join the National Association was all but lost.

Defeating an End

THE writer is frank to confess his complete discouragement at the time. And as emphatically we state that the situation would have been lost and the Exhibitors' League would not have become a part of the National Association had it not been for the earnest, tireless pleadings of two men, Messrs. W. W. Irwin and Paul Cromelin.

We are now greeted by a strange reversal of this situation.

Another exhibitor association asks for admission and is denied. The pleading against its admission is made by the representatives of the Exhibitors' League.

Why?

We are facing the same sort of legislative year.

Surely every thinking man knows this; if not his thoughtlessness, or his ignorance is inexcusable.

We will have censorship, tax and other destructive legislation in every state in which we faced it last year. In many states we will have the same extremely critical battles.

How Matters Now Stand

YET to the influential exhibitors in upper New York state and to the sturdy exhibitor organizations in Indiana, North Carolina, Michigan, Virginia, Oklahoma, Texas, Ohio, Maryland, Boston, the District of Columbia, and to rapidly growing new organizations in the Northwest, Pennsylvania and other states the National Association says: "Gentlemen, we don't want your affiliation!"

The war tax situation in Washington—of grave moment to every man in this industry—is but temporarily favorable. Yet the National Association says to the State Or-

Speaking Editorially:

Time to Be Careful

PUBLISHING enterprise upon the part of popular magazines and enthusiasm upon the part of free lance writers are commendable in themselves. At any rate we shall always have them with us—though happily that period of intense desire to create sensations out of any old situation, known as the muck-raking period, is pretty nearly passed out.

In lieu of the absence of corrupt corporations the tendency now seems to be to take an occasional whack at the so-called "movies."

If this has to be done we suggest to the magazines and writers that it is about time to get their facts straight.

The September Metropolitan publishes an article by Willis J. Abbott called "The Perils of Writing for the Movies," which among other misstatements contains an alleged libel against the Universal Film Company and the latter has been quick to take action.

A news article elsewhere in this issue gives the full facts in the case. A previous court decision had completely exonerated the above company, and the charges made were, apparently, a somewhat ridiculous misstatement of facts.

Mr. Abbott ought to inform himself upon the producing situation today, the danger of innocent copyright infringement due to hurried and large production and the scrupulous care with which the Universal and other responsible concerns examine all productions in order to detect infringements; the numerous cases in which pictures are thrown upon the junk heap because they seemed guilty in some degree; the many pictures immediately discontinued upon claims of infringement, etc., etc.

In fact, the expense involved here and the methods of care taken would yield material for a more interesting and even a more sensational article than the one Mr. Abbott wrote.

A Grievous Mistake

ganization, North Carolina, and to the man, H. B. Varner, who together, admitted by all, did most to avert the threatened tax: "Gentlemen, we don't want your affiliation!"

And over and above the industry's peril this year we are facing a national one. The President has asked the industry to mobilize, to assist the Government, to exhibit its patriotism.

Yet the industry's organization says to an integral part of the industry: "Gentlemen, we don't want your affiliation!"

Why?

Majority Versus Steam Roller Rule

A TECHNICAL objection was raised to the effect that article two, under which the American Exhibitors' Association sought affiliation, applied not to integral branches of the industry such as the exhibitors but to other trade organizations.

Very true. This was the intent and purpose of this article.

But, of course, the by-laws could readily be changed to admit the new Exhibitors' Association; and, moreover, the real argument advanced against the admission of the new association was that of majority rule.

In other words the Exhibitors' League insisted that this new body must first return to it because of the principle of majority rule.

Majority rule?

To anyone who was at Chicago and who had an unbiased and clear insight into the outrageous conduct of the convention the mere mention of majority rule is enough to make him fighting mad.

We believe in majority rule. So does every intelligent American.

But majority rule means the rule of votes honestly representative of voting bodies; it doesn't mean picked delegates.

We have no inclination to rehash the events of the exceedingly unfortunate mess at Chicago; we have, as we have emphatically stated, but one end in sight and that, with no axes to grind, no self-seeking motive whatever, is National Exhibitor organization, comprehensively effected and honestly and efficiently governed in the interest of the American exhibitor.

Since this point of majority rule has been raised, however, and so importantly, we are forced to take issue; we will combat the point whenever it is raised.

If the Chicago convention rule was majority rule we ask why such astoundingly large delegations were allowed to vote from the city of Chicago and from the district of New England.

Our columns are wide open to anyone who will indicate—and the way is very simple—that these delegates voted the Exhibitor membership prescribed by the Constitution and by-laws of the M. P. E. L. of America.

This offer is a standing one.

What We May Hope For

FROM the action of the directors of the National Association we can only hope for the best—the best, so far as the interests of the industry are concerned.

And this best, evidently, will have to be hoped for from the American Exhibitors' Association.

Knowing the leaders as we do, as broad-gauged men who want organization for organization's sake, we believe they will act accordingly.

They will probably not turn the other cheek, but we do believe that they will go right ahead as if nothing had happened.

Bearing in mind only the best interests of the industry as a whole we believe they will offer, unconditionally, their active assistance in war co-operation and in the industry's fight against its outside enemies.

And having the true spirit of organization and the tried experience and proven strength in battling taxation and censorship they will render the same good account of their efforts they have given in the past and save the industry in many a state and city, if not in the nation.

As for their attitude toward the internal problems of the industry they have a clear road before them.

Having been denied a voice in the councils of the industry's organization they can now take council of and for themselves. They can concentrate their efforts upon the business problems of the exhibitor, and for the first time bring about effective and constructive reforms.

They can—and we believe they will.

Nation Wide Praise for A. E. A. Marks Virginia Meeting

Telegrams Tell of Rapid-Fire Organization Work Under Way in All Sections of the Union—Five States Represented at Ocean View Gathering Remarkable for Enthusiasm and Business Earnestness

OCEAN VIEW, VA. (Special).—August 30th, 31st and September 1st were originally set down on the calendar for a convention of Virginia's state exhibitors' organization.

Then theatre owners in four other states, North Carolina, South Carolina, Maryland and Delaware, saw in the gathering a chance for the initial rally of the American Exhibitors' Association, and the Virginia meeting grew into a five-state affair.

But before the second business session on Friday had adjourned telegrams volunteering enthusiastic support for the A. E. A. from nineteen other states had sped along the wires, and Virginia's state convention had expanded into national importance.

Stronger evidence than the five state gathering at Ocean View could not be brought forth to prove that the A. E. A. is far beyond the swaddling clothes stages. It is "over the top," implanted firmly, boasting from the telegraphic evidence alone an actual membership running into the thousands, and, if the temper of the two hundred exhibitors present at Ocean View be taken as a criterion a power for united and effective action never possessed by any previous exhibitor organization.

Old-time film men, in attendance at over a score of conventions, declared on Saturday that never had they seen an exhibitor gathering of the type of this Ocean View meeting. It is hard to write about it with full justice—for so often in the past exhibitor joy-parties have been termed "business-like," "earnest," that the words lose their force when applied to the gathering of enthusiastic, earnest theater owners who braved hop, skip and jump means of transportation to reach Ocean View's sessions.

Perhaps it was in a measure due to fact that never before in film history, according to exhibitors, have affairs within the industry made so necessary a strong and active exhibitor organization. But in still greater share was Ocean View a tribute to the platform of the A. E. A. and the guarantee of performance pledged by the names alone of President Jake Wells and his fellow executives.

Business was the keynote of the three days' meetings, the first and last word. There are no set speeches to record for every session was a plain business discussion—with no room for oratory. Harry Bernstein, chairman of the Virginia body's committee on entertainment, saw with smiles his schedule disrupted as pleasure trips were swept away to give room for business sessions.

Speedily Withdraw from Ochs' League

Friday afternoon at two o'clock saw the first official meeting of what was then the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Virginia. But only for a few minutes. With the reading of a new Constitution and By-Laws, the very first snag struck was the section giving the title of the organization. Less than five minutes of discussion and a unanimous vote had changed the name to American Exhibitors' Association of Virginia. Still more speedily was a motion passed withdrawing the Virginia organization from the Ochs National League.

No opposition was voiced to either move by any of the representatives of fifty-five Virginia theatres present. Though not asked to do so President Jake Wells and E. P. Crall volunteered a report of the proceedings at the Ochs Chicago Convention. The only discussion came over the question as to whether the organization should nominally remain in the League since its dues for the current year had been paid.

Treasurer C. E. Geogheghan, of Chase City, Va., swept this hesitation away with a laugh when he declared: "As treasurer I probably think more of a dollar of our money than any man here. I say that we have seen enough of those League rulers. The money is gone, we have quit them, let the money go with them. It's cheap at the price to be quits with such an organization."

Over thirty-five Virginia exhibitors rep-

Ohio Did Not Bolt—It Was "Censored" Out

Four Delegates Who Were Among "Those Babies," Pointed to by the Ochs Forefinger, Make Their Full Report

OHIO'S delegates to the Chicago convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America have made a report to the Ohio state league which sent them to the big meeting. They say Ohio did not "bolt" individually or collectively, but was driven from the convention. They add, tersely, "We were 'censored' out of the program and afterwards censured by Lee A. Ochs."

The report is signed by Sam Bullock, J. H. Simpson, George Heinbuch and W. J. Slimm. It was submitted at the last meeting of the state league and laid over for the next meeting "to give all a chance," as Mr. Bullock expresses it. Following is the report in full:

Our report is necessarily brief, from a league standpoint, inasmuch as we were ignored as accredited delegates after paying the state per capita tax as such. We were ignored as to a choice of candidates for national president, but were graciously permitted, at the end of a "Donnybrook" session, to "sit in" and "hear" the nomination of Lee Ochs announced, after which we had no further interest in National League affairs.

We went to Chicago uninstructed from Ohio as to voting for any candidates for national offices, bound only by our instructions that majority rule on all matters must prevail in our delegation in the interest of harmony.

It was quite apparent at the opening session on Monday, July 16, that Lee A. Ochs intended to dominate the delegates by unfair methods and the undersigned later lent their aid to a plan to have all candidates for president withdraw in the interest of harmony.

To this Mr. Ochs' special committee of five agreed with our committee of five and the joint committee of ten so reported to the convention. This was on Wednesday, after two days of turmoil and bulldozing tactics on the part of Lee A. Ochs to renominate himself by minority representation.

However, the "joint committee agreement" seemed to have solved the problem and the convention clock was set back three hours at 11:30 on Wednesday night in order to conform with the constitution and nominate on the third day of the convention.

The delegates then settled down for a business-like session, with Messrs. Herrington, Varner, Rembusch, Rodgers and Ochs eliminated as candidates per aforesaid agreement. (See copy of said agreement, section (4) from page 643, second column, Exhibitors' Trade Review, issue of July 28, 1917, herewith appended):

4. We recommend that all of the present known candidates for election to any office in this organization retire as candidates for their respective offices, and that the convention proceed to the election of officers with a view to securing the greatest amount of harmony and efficiency possible.

At midnight Delegates Slimm and Simpson retired under the impression that some "harmony" candidate would be nominated. Delegates Bullock and Heinbuch stayed.

Two and one-half hours later, after a gradual leading up to the grand climax, Mr. Lee A. Ochs was nominated, accepted the same, and our interest in National League affairs thereupon ceased, as before stated, and we quietly walked out at 2:30 Thursday morning. As business men and Americans we could not do otherwise. The agreement was treated as a mere "scrap of paper," thus clearly showing why "deposits" are still necessary to bind some exhibitors.

The future of our organization rested upon that joint agreement. Men who have been tried and found true voluntarily withdrew their names as candidates. Varner of North Carolina, whose personal efforts on the "gross receipt war tax bill" has saved thousands from ruin, while Lee Ochs openly advocated it—the so-called "Ontario Plan"; Rembusch of Indiana, whose only fault is that he is worried about the "little fellow in the business"; Herrington of Pittsburg, who was not even permitted to make his report as national organizer. In these men your delegates had faith. Delegate Slimm was a member of that "joint committee." He personally withdrew Herrington's name when the agreement was signed, per Herrington's request. Delegates Slimm and Simpson appeared at the convention on Thursday and requested a correction of the record, as during their absence they were recorded in favor of Lee A. Ochs. The correction was made as "not voting."

Ohio did not bolt, individually or collectively. Ohio was driven from the convention exactly as above described. We were "censored" out of the program and afterwards censured by Lee A. Ochs, who in his speech of acceptance referred to us as "them babies." Further comment is unnecessary.

"Rejection of Affiliation Offer Leaves Us Free"

C. C. Pettijohn, General Manager of American Exhibitors' Association, Announces Opening of Fight on Advance Deposit—Answers Act of N. A. M. P. I.

"NOW we are ready for our first great fight in the exhibitor's behalf, against the advance deposit system." This was the reply of Charles C. Pettijohn, General Manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, when informed that the directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry had voted against the offer of affiliation made by the association.

Mr. Pettijohn was emphatic in declaring that the action of that body in no way affected the aims and purposes of the A. E. A. in working for the betterment of all branches of the industry, particularly where the exhibitors were concerned, and asserted that the vote of the delegates from the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League clearly indicated that it was too closely allied with the manufacturing interests of the trade to be called a representative exhibitors' organization.

As evidence of the stand to be taken in all questions pertaining to the best interests of the trade, Mr. Pettijohn has written William A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. I., pledging the support of the American Exhibitors' Association in all matters that will aid the Government in the successful prosecution of the war and assuring him that in every movement that tends to improve any part of the industry will have the backing of the association.

Mr. Pettijohn issued the following statement regarding the action of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in refusing the offer of affiliation with the American Exhibitors' Association:

"At a meeting of the directors of the N. A. M. P. I. held at their offices in the Times Building, New York City, Monday, August 27, the offer of affiliation on the part of the American Exhibitors' Association as set out in our communication of August 15 was rejected.

"We are informed that the fourteen delegates representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League voted solidly against it and that seventeen of the other gentlemen present voted twelve for and five against. We are also informed that others present did not vote. It may have been that our offer to work harmoniously with the other branches of the industry was not sufficient, and it may have been that our plain statement that we would not co-operate with any movement which we did not feel was for the best interest of the exhibitors was retaining too much latitude on our part. We shall maintain that attitude, however, irrespective of the action of any other organization or branch of the industry. We feel that it was the proper premise to stand upon and we still maintain that position.

"We regret the offer was not accepted in the spirit in which it was tendered, but the refusal will not conflict in any way with our plans to build up a real exhibitors organization which stands for exhibitors only and which will in no way be allied with the manufacturers either directly or through the medium of a trade paper which depends upon the manufacturer's advertising for its support.

"One thing is certain. This alliance upon the part of the gentlemen representing the other exhibitor's association and men interested in other branches of the trade has relieved this association of certain embarrassments. Our acts are now free. Our pathway is clear to make a fight for exhibitors only without fear or favor of the manufacturer. To the five directors who voted in favor of the co-operation of this organization that stands for exhibitors we extend our thanks and sincere appreciation.

"There are some manufacturers who really want a business men's organization of exhibitors. There are others who do not care for one, and some who positively 'will not stand for one.'

"The Advance Deposit Man is not our friend and did not vote for our admission. It was good business for him to join hands with the fourteen gentlemen representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

"We now announce the subject of our first fight. It is entitled the Advance Deposit System."

Virginia Convention Becomes National in Scope

resenting fifty-five theatres and over a hundred theatre men from other states were present when the meeting was called to order on Friday. President Jake Wells, holding the office in both the Virginia body and the national organization, the American Exhibitors' Association, presided at the gathering. In a business way it was a strictly Virginia meeting, but the visiting exhibitors were invited to sit in and availed themselves of the opportunity sacrificing the pleasures of this enjoyable Virginia seashore resort.

Oklahoma Starts the Ball Rolling

From far-off Oklahoma came the message that gave the three-day convention its keynote. The following telegram, signed by L. W. Brophy, and addressed to Frank Rembusch, national organizer of the American Exhibitors' Association, was received just as the meeting convened:

"Oklahoma yesterday voted unanimously to join the new American Exhibitors' Association. Old officers retain same positions in new association. Send charter for fifty members."

Hearty applause greeted the reading of the telegram, sharpened by the fact that Oklahoma has always been considered in the doubtful class and by many in the Ochs list.

Thursday's session, and the two sessions Friday, were given up to a discussion, paragraph by paragraph, of the new Constitution and By-Laws of the Virginia organization. Never was a Constitution adopted in such serious fashion. An intention to permanently avoid the possibility of steam-rolling, and the desire to have an organization in which every exhibitor, no matter how small, would join and play a part were evident as prompting each discussion. The new American Exhibitors' Association method of control, by a board of directors representing every section of the state, was adopted. On Friday a speedy and unanimous vote passed a resolution by which Virginia made application for membership in the American Exhibitors' Association.

Virginia exhibitors are thirsting for action—that is the evidence in every word spoken at the Ocean View gathering—and that is the warning which must be given to exhibitor enemies in and out of the industry. Already Virginia's organization represents the state pretty thoroughly. Before the new year is here the organization will be perfected, Virginia will be ready to act, and when Virginia does act count in united support with her in battles within the industry the four other states represented at Ocean View.

Coals of Fire for Ochs

General Manager Charles C. Pettijohn, of the American Exhibitors' Association, addressed the exhibitors Thursday afternoon with a few words on the popular subject, "Chicago." The rumor was current that Lee Ochs and W. Stephen Bush were expected early Friday. To the advanced suggestion that Ochs be given a taste of his own Chicago methods and denied the floor both President Wells and Manager Pettijohn made vigorous rejoinders. "No we won't," they declared. "We'll show them some real Virginia hospitality. We won't have a single policeman barring the door, we haven't a gavel in the place. We'll let them talk their heads off. All I want," added Pettijohn, "is the privilege of saying a few words when they have finished."

One action of importance taken Friday morning was the decision that there would be no honorary members of the Virginia body. Virginia follows the A. E. A. principle that there is no room in an exhibitor body for any one but exhibitors, and even the bare suggestion that an honorary member might at some time hamper exhibitor action was considered.

The election of officers of the Virginia Association, held Friday, resulted in returning the old body, and in addition five directors were chosen. Following is the list: President, Jake Wells, of Richmond; vice-president, E. D. Heins, of Roanoke; treasurer, C. E. Geoghegan, of Chase City; Secretary, Chesley Toney, of Richmond. The directors are: E. T. Crall, of Newport News; J. F. Pryor, of Danville; M. M. Collins, of Covington; E. D. Heins, of Roanoke; J. H. Henry, of Winchester.

On Friday, Jake and Otto Wells were hosts at a southern dinner given at the Ocean View Hotel. Mr. Pettijohn acted as toastmaster, introducing a list of stars including Marguerite Snow, Alice Brady, Kitty Gordon, June Eldridge, Rose Tapley, Madge Evans and King Baggot. King Baggot divided the honors for applause with the official hostess of the convention,

Rose Tapley. If any one saw Miss Tapley resting for a single moment during the three days—well, there's trouble with his eyes.

The reception given the stars at the dinner was but a foretaste of that on Friday evening when close to three thousand fans packed the Ocean View pavilion for a dance of the Virginia Association.

Leander Richardson and Felix Feist piloted the World Film stars. Charles C. Pyle, sales manager of Bartola, was in attendance throughout the three days, and as a result the strains of Bartola instruments will be heard in still more Virginia theatres.

Open Door at Executive Meetings

During the three days members of the executive board of the American Exhibitors' Association held evening sessions. Trade paper representatives haven't recovered yet from the shock of being invited to sit in at the table for these meetings—in the older league held behind closed doors and shrouded in secrecy. The Executive Committee met in a room with a wide open door on either side, and no exhibitor could pass to the convention headquarters in the adjoining room without being invited to sit in on the executive session.

Among the members present at these sessions in addition to President Wells and Manager Pettijohn were Guy Wonders, of Baltimore; Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C.; Percy Wells, of North Carolina; Sam Bullock, of Cleveland; Sam Trigger, of New York, and Fred Herrington, of Pittsburgh.

Plans for financing the new organization and preparations for legislative activity and the handling of exhibitor problems were discussed at the executive meetings.

W. Stephen Bush on the Horizon

Just as the Friday session had adjourned W. Stephen Bush appeared on the horizon. President Wells scheduled an additional session of the convention for Saturday morning in order to give Mr. Bush an opportunity to speak and attempted to induce the exhibitors from distant points who were making their preparations to depart for Saturday business, to remain over. A mixed gathering of a dozen did attend.

Mr. Bush skillfully avoided thin ice in his few words Saturday. "I come here," he declared, "not as the representative of any person or group of persons," he declared, going on to declare that in the past he had always worked for exhibitor organization and would continue to do so. Manager Pettijohn keyed his reply to the same honeyed note, congratulating Mr. Bush on his declaration of principles and on the opportunity afforded by Ocean View to allow such principles to expand.

"I only regret," he continued, "that you have not been present during the entire convention. I am only sorry that you have not seen this deliberate body of business men at work, witnessed their earnestness, and had the opportunity to absorb some of the love and devotion we feel towards our big, broad leader, Jake Wells. You have probably not been fortunate enough to know a

Thomas Furniss Enjoined by a Duluth Court

Vice-President of National Association Must Not Show "Man Who Was Afraid" and Mis-call Picture, "The Slacker"

W. M. ABRAHAMSON, of the Zelda theatre, Duluth, Minn., has obtained from Judge William A. Cant, of the Minnesota District Court, an injunction forbidding Thomas Furniss from billing as "The Slacker," a picture not "The Slacker."

Mr. Furniss is widely known and is a vice-president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

According to Mr. Abrahamson's complaint he advertised widely the picture titled "The Slacker," but not mentioning in the published notices that the picture was to be shown at his theatre—the Zelda.

He alleges that this was taken advantage of by Mr. Furniss, who, the complaint says, announced two days before the showing that "The Slacker" would be exhibited at the Lyric theatre. As a matter of fact the film was "The Man Who Was Afraid," another patriotic production filmed with the same worthy motive as "The Slacker."

Furniss' company is called the Brunswick Amusement Company, and his associates in the business are Adrian P. Raja, Henry W. Azine, Bert Holloway and Jack Heimbach. The injunction issued from Judge Cant's court is directed against them all. The judgment from Judge Cant's court reads in part:

"Now, Therefore, Upon motion of Messrs. McCoy & Hansen, attorneys for the Plaintiff, it is ordered that the Defendants and each of them refrain from falsely, fraudulently and unfairly using the name 'The Slacker' or any other name that is a colorable imitation thereof, as applied to said picture 'The Man Who Was Afraid' and from doing any act or thing tending to mislead and deceive the public in connection therewith, and to refrain from using the words 'The Slacker' in any of its advertising, or in any writings or printed matter in reference to said defendants' picture, 'The Man Who Was Afraid,' or in any way diverting, by the use of the words 'The Slacker' any patronage from the Zelda theatre, of which the Plaintiff is the proprietor and in which the said motion picture 'The Slacker' is being exhibited, until the further order of the Court."

Manufacturers to Give Films for Soldiers' Use

National Association Decides on Entertainment Plan—Officers Elected—A. E. A. Application Denied—Mutual Resignation Tabled for Further Action

ELECTION of officers, rejection of the application of the American Exhibitors' Association for affiliation, and admission of a number of companies and individuals were the principal affairs passed on at the first meeting of the recently elected board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held August 27.

The following directors were present: William A. Brady, William L. Sherrill, Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldfish, Walter J. Moore, Lee A. Ochs, Alfred Hamburger, N. C. Rice, C. E. Glamann, Alfred S. Black, Thomas Furniss, Eugene M. Clarke, Frank Eager, Louis L. Levine, Louis F. Blumenthal, J. H. O'Donnell, Dan Chamberlain, Hector Pazmasoglu, Robert Levy, J. A. Berst, Arthur S. Friend, P. A. Powers, Richard A. Rowland, J. E. Brulotour, J. H. Hallberg, Joseph F. Coufal, Arthur James, William A. Johnston, Joseph F. Lee, Thomas G. Wylie, Fred J. Beecroft and George Irving.

Following the reports of the officers and committee, the members proceeded to elect new officers for the ensuing year, and the following were unanimously elected: William A. Brady, president; vice-presidents: Adolph Zukor, J. A. Berst, William L. Sherrill, Thomas Furniss, R. A. Rowland, J. H. Hallberg and Arthur James. J. E. Brulatour was re-elected treasurer and Frederick H. Elliott was re-elected secretary for the ensuing year.

The application of the American Exhibitors' Association for affiliation, under article 2 of the by-laws was denied by a total vote cast of 29, 24 being against the application and 5 voting for it.

The secretary's report reviewed the activities of the Association since the last meeting of the board, and to the effect that practically all of the secretary's time, as well as that of the office staff had been devoted to the work of the War Co-operation Committee in carrying out instructions from Mr. Brady who was requested by President Wilson to mobilize the industry and in the perfection of the organization of the National Committee for War Propaganda.

A report was presented by R. H. Cochrane, chairman of the Advertising Trailer Committee, that at the Chicago Convention of the National Exhibitors the proposition contained in the set of resolutions in regard to showing advertising trailers was rejected. Members of this committee were present and suggested that the committee should be continued in power, with a view to carrying out the plan at some future time.

Resignation of the Mutual Film Corporation, as a member of the Distributor Class No. 4 was presented and tabled by unanimous request and referred to President Brady for action.

According to a statement, issued by Leander Richardson, representing William A. Brady, Uncle Sam's soldiers will be provided with film entertainment while they are encamped on French soil, through the good offices of the National Association. At the suggestion of President Brady many of the leading manufacturers and distributors guaranteed to contribute films to a distributing agency to be conducted under governmental control, for the entertainment of the soldiers.

Selznick's Tour to Preach the "Open Door"

First to the Tri-State Convention at the Invitation of H. M. Crandall and Jake Wells—Next Around the Circle

LEWIS J. SELZNICK left New York Friday for Ocean View, Va., where the Five States Exhibitors' Convention is being held. Mr. Selznick addressed the convention by special request of the exhibitors.

Invitation was extended by H. M. Crandall, owner of the important Crandall chain of theatres in Washington, and Jake Wells, of the Colonial theatre in Richmond and a great chain of theatres in the South. They came to New York to urge Mr. Selznick to attend the convention. Exhibitors are especially interested in the "Open Door" policy, of which Lewis J. Selznick has been the pioneer.

This is only the beginning of an extensive tour which Mr. Selznick intends making. In the interest of the Select Pictures—the new distributing corporation which has just been formed—Mr. Selznick will spend six months touring every part of the United States and meeting the exhibitors in every city and town of importance. This will occupy about half of Mr. Selznick's time during the coming twelve months, and it is the first instance of a producer of the highest quality pictures taking steps to put himself into personal touch with exhibitors throughout the land.

Mr. Selznick draws an apt comparison between conditions in the film industry and the banking business.

"There was a time," he says, "when the president of a bank always hid himself away behind a closed door at the rear of the banking offices. Neither depositors nor borrowers, nor any one except his intimate friends could reach Mr. Bank President. Now, however, all that has passed. The bank president to-day sits in an open office near the entrance to the bank, and it is part of his business—one of the most important parts of his business—to meet the patrons of his bank."

Just such an evolution has taken place in the motion picture industry, contends Mr. Selznick. "The producer used to be an unknown quantity to the exhibitor as far as personal acquaintance is concerned, but the time for that has passed. To-day the producer and the exhibitor must get together for their own good and the good of the industry; and I am going out to meet the exhibitor in his home town."

Mr. Selznick looks for great results from this pilgrimage of friendship, during which he will bring home to every exhibitor in America the tremendous importance of Selznick Pictures and of Select distribution.

Lee Association Prepared for Independent Market

Independent Association for Which Joseph F. Lee Is Sponsor Ready for Business—United States and the Foreign Markets Can Be Handled—Members All Theatre Owners

JOSEPH F. LEE announces that he has completed organization plans, and that the association for which he is sponsor and in which Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C., and others are interested, is now prepared to carry out the purpose for which it was organized—to give to the exhibitor the production he wants and to make it possible for the exhibitor to say just what sort of a feature he desires before the picture is produced. This, of course, cannot be consummated at once, but it is the intention of those working for the interests of this association to eventually have the organization on a working basis that will insure this procedure.

Arrangements have been made whereby this newly formed organization to handle productions on the independent market, can supply the demand of in territories throughout the United States, Canada and the foreign markets. Simplicitly is the keynote of the working plans—simplicity of organization, simplicity of exploitation and simplicity in getting the production in the hands of the exhibitor. Unlike other associations of its kind, there will be no certain number of members in whose hands rests the question of purchase. Any number can buy a production, and the purchase price is fixed pro rata. If two members of the association desire to get a certain production—well and good. The rights are obtained for the territories which are represented. The remaining members of the association are under no compulsion to abide by the decision of the others.

There will be three special departments of the Lee Association—special attractions or features' department, under which head comes only the pictures which are usually classed as first run; ordinary commercial pictures and the single-reel productions. Where it is necessary, special representative will be appointed in all the territories to handle these special classes so that there will be no loophole open for conflict in exploitation. Every branch of the feature pictures will be taken into consideration by this association, so that the exhibitor need not look further for his special production, his ordinary feature and his filler of one or two reels.

Representative men of the independent field will be associated in this enterprise and assurance of proper presentation will be given the exhibitor.

In the New England States the association will be represented by Louis B. Mayer, general manager of the Master Producers' Photoplay Company of New England, Inc.; in the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia by the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, with Harry Crandall and A. Dresner at the head; S. Grauman, controlling the Empress Circuit of theatres on the Coast, will be the representative in California, Arizona and Nevada. He will open a film exchange in Los Angeles. Greater New York and the State will be represented by Harry Samwick, a prominent state rights man in this territory. The South will be represented by one of two prominent state rights men in this section. It is expected that the representative chosen will be the owner of a circuit of theatres in this territory. The name will be announced later. In Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho, the Lee Association will be represented by the Greater Features Company, John Lannon, general manager. New York representatives of all the foreign have been selected and the entire foreign market can be handled.

Argentine, Chile, Uraguay, Spain, Portugal and New Guinea will be represented by the Sociedad General Cinematograph. Leroy Garfinkle is the New York representative. The Pan American Film Service Company will handle Mexico and Cuba, New York representatives, Thomas and Kopfstein. U Ono, a Japanese, will represent the territory of Japan. The Philippines, Peru, Bolivia, Switzerland and Italy will be handled by Charles W. Thompson, New York representative. England, Russia, Holland is represented by the Scandinavia Film Company, David Russell, New York representative. Egypt, India and the Far East by Royal Cinema Corporation. Greece and Balkans by Alexander Stratlaporilo.

Every representative of the Lee organization is a theatre owner. Mr. Lee stated that this was not only thought advisable, but he said that he insisted upon this so far as possible, because it was bound to insure proper exploitation, and the exhibitor is assured that he will get the right sort of productions. The headquarters for the foreign representatives will be suite 1103-1476 Broadway, New York, temporarily.

Mr. Lee said:

"I believe we have an independent organization that will answer the purpose for which it has been formed—to furnish the best possible product and to serve it in a way that the exhibitor will be satisfied, the patron will be satisfied, and there will be no dissatisfaction due to the fact that any member has been drawn into the purchase of a production which he did not think suited the particular trade of his territory. There is no compulsion. Any number can buy. Eventually we intend to get right back to the producer, so that before a production is started the members and the exhibitor will know just what he is to expect in the way of the feature for his theatre."

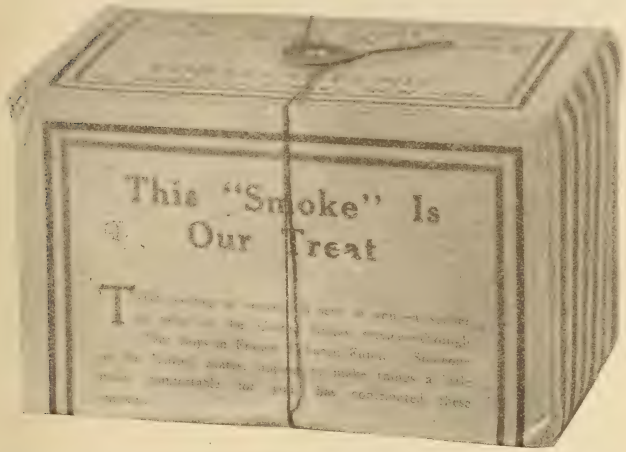
Music Tax Demanded of Los Angeles Exhibitors

Demand has been made on Los Angeles exhibitors for the payment of ten cents per seat per annum by the United Music Publishers' Association for the use of copyrighted music, and at the meeting of Southern California Motion Picture Men's Association, held August 20, plans were made for the negotiations with the representative of the association in California for adjustment of the matter.

Harry Williams, author of a number of song hits, and who now serves as director at the Triangle Keystone Studio, is the publishers' representative here, and he has been invited to confer with the theatre men at an early meeting. In the meantime a committee composed of A. P. Tugwell, J. A. Quin, Mike Gore and J. S. Lustig are handling the matter for the exhibitors investigating the feasibility of refusing to comply with the demands made and the legal outcome of such action.

"Smokes" Campaign Gaining Headway in All Sections

Exhibitors' Demand for "Drop a Penny" Cards Again Exhausts Supply—Inquiries Pouring In—Hundreds of Exhibitors Rallying to Patriotic Cause—Where to Send Cigarettes and Money Collected



How Our Boys in France Will Receive the Tobacco Your Patrons Chip in to Send Them. The Package Is Moistureproof. This Reproduction Is Two-thirds Actual Size. The Picture Contains Assorted Tobacco (for Pipes) and Two Packages of Good Cigarettes

MOTION PICTURE NEWS' campaign to provide "smokes" for our soldiers in France and Belgium is gaining headway in a manner to exceed even the most optimistic expectations.

Hundreds of exhibitors who are taking part in the patriotic movement report that cigarettes and money are flowing in; that the public is taking hold with enthusiasm.

According to the letters from exhibitors situated in all parts, the "Drop-a-Penny" plan is being given preference to the "Drop-a-Cigarette" plan, owing, they say, to the simplicity of handling money as opposed to loose cigarettes.

Exhibitors are instructed to send cigarettes and cash collected directly to the office of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The cigarettes should be packed carefully and shipped by parcel post. Checks should be made payable to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and will be turned over to the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

The packages of tobacco sent by the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" to the men in the trenches contain forty-five cents' worth of cigarettes and pipe tobacco, which the fund purchases, by arrangement, for twenty-five cents.

Exhibitors will be sent receipts from the boys who receive the tobacco—will get postcards of thanks directly from the trenches.

One of the most enthusiastic "cigarette centers" is Los Angeles.

Without an exception the downtown first-run theatres in Los Angeles adopted the plan to collect cigarettes for the boys in the trenches, suggested in MOTION PICTURE NEWS of September 1st, and an hour or two after copies of the magazine were received theatre managers had the plan in effect.

By the end of the Saturday evening performance on August 25th, thousands of cigarettes had been contributed into the goldfish jars placed in the lobbies of the theatres. Copies of MOTION PICTURE NEWS are delivered to subscribers in Los Angeles Saturday preceding the date of the publication, and the cigarette collecting plan being adopted so promptly points out that coast subscribers eagerly read this publication for suggestions as to how to better conditions at their theatres.

Manager Frederick Miller was perhaps the first to have the glass jar and sign in a conspicuous place at his theatre. It stood in the lobby, where almost a continuous stream saw the contributions made and endorsed the patriotic endeavor of the management to add to the comforts of our fighting boys abroad.

"There is no doubt in my mind but that millions of cigarettes can be collected for the soldiers," Mr. Miller said after seeing many of his patrons throw cigarettes, packages and coins into the glass jar. "Everybody seems glad to see us taking a part in first aid to the lonesome. The boys at the front have a lot of time on their hands, and I really know that a good smoke makes it pass quickly and more pleasantly. Pictures we have shown show that almost all of the soldiers smoke cigarettes, and these small contributions will help greatly."

Another Los Angeles theatre manager to see the advisability of following the NEWS' suggestion was J. A. Quinn, who has the Rialto. A few big, broad leader, you cannot realize without being present why we would follow such a leader right out into that ocean and clear to Africa if he said the word."

It would well have paid any manufacturer to have attended the Ocean View affair. Lewis J. Selznick, shrewd observer of film affairs, and ever with an hand on the exhibitor pulse, did upset his business plans to journey to the convention Saturday and pay his respects to the A. E. A.

LOUIS B. MAYER announced last week that he had signed Anita Stewart, of Vitagraph, to a long-termed contract. Work on Miss Stewart's first production will be commenced in the near future. Arrangements are now being completed for the acquisition of a Eastern studio. Some of Miss Stewart's productions will be made on the Coast, it is announced. The first two in the East and the majority of the productions in Los Angeles.

It is understood that Miss Stewart's contract with Vitagraph will be fulfilled.

Incorporation papers for $1,000,000 were taken out Saturday by the Anita Stewart Production Company. Louis Mayer and J. Rowits Rubin are among the incorporators.

Mr. Mayer stated that all production in which Miss Stewart will be featured will be produced on a large scale, and with the end in view to make them equal to some of the best productions that can been made. Mr. Mayer made no definite announcement as to channels through which his productions will be distributed. He said that negotiations were under way to provide for distribution of Miss Stewart's pictures by several large distributing companies, and one would be decided on within the next few days. It is not announced who will direct Miss Stewart, nor has a story been chosen for her first work. It is possible that a special distributing company may be organized to handle the Stewart productions.

Mr. Mayer said in commenting on the acquisition of Miss Stewart's services for a series of special productions:

"I have had the producing end of the business under consideration for some time, but did not take the initial step because when I did decide to enter the producing end I wanted to have something big to offer. I believe I have in productions in which Anita Stewart is announced as the featured player. Miss Stewart has proved her worth as a screen artist. She has a large following, and has proved by her work in the past that she can handle the most difficult situations with a real, dramatic touch. In selecting stories for Miss Stewart's productions I will endeavor to obtain only those stories which offer dramatic worth and contain plot material that will bring out the best that is in Miss Stewart. I expect to start producing as soon as a director has been chosen."

Mr. Mayer has been associated with both the legitimate and silent drama for years. At one time he was representing the B. F. Keith interests in the New England States, and had under his personal management some of the best known actresses and actors of that time. In later years he has affiliated himself with the motion picture industry, and is now the owner of several large picture houses in the New England States. The Park theatre in Boston is one of the finest picture houses in the Hub. He also has interests in Lowell.

"Smokes" Campaign Gaining Headway in All States

minutes after he received his magazine he had arranged to give his patrons opportunity to contribute smokes.

"It's a dandy scheme, and I am more than glad to do my bit," Mr. Quinn said. "There are hundreds of men who enter this theatre every day, and for that matter, I expect many women who will be glad to contribute cigarettes. This is one way we can be of service to the soldiers, and we are enthusiastic to collect just as many cigarettes as we possibly can."

Other theatres of Los Angeles to adopt the cigarette collecting plan are Clune's Auditorium and Broadway Theatre; the Superba, managed by Al. Nathan; the Symphony, the Palace, the Garrick managed by H. P. Caulfield; the Alhambra, the Woodley, which is conducted under the management of Edward Holland, and others.

"For Freedom of World" to Be Shown

Ira M. Lowry will present for a trade showing at 10:30 o'clock, Monday, September 10, his eight-part production of Captain Edwin Bower Hesser's story, "For the Freedom of the World."

E. K. Lincoln is featured in the character of a young American enlisting in the Canadian army, with Barbara Castleton and Romaine Fielding.

"War Saving" Methods Prevail in All West Coast Studios

Strict economy is to be the watchword in the future at practically all of the West Coast studios, and articles that have been thrown away or destroyed in the past will be carefully conserved. Appeals received at the studios from various firms and organizations asking that this or that be saved, and finally a notice from the Eastman Company, stating that tin cans used for shipping raw film could not be secured from manufacturers are the principal causes for the "save it" policy.

Formerly the price of tin was so low that cans could be purchased new in the East for less money than they could be moved by freight from Los Angeles to Rochester. Now that the price of tin amounts to several times the former price the empty cans may be shipped back and sold at a profit.

One of the first studios on the coast to take advantage of the possible saving was the Triangle Keystone. Peter Shamray, manager of the laboratory, took an inventory upon receipt of the notice from the Eastman Company and found that in the past two years Triangle Fine Arts had received and used almost 9,000 cans of raw stock, or eighteen million feet, as every can contains 2,000 feet, which cost in the neighborhood of a half million besides expressage.

Court Reverses Major "Funkie," Who Is Twice Sued

Chicago's Censor Must Permit Immediate Showing of W illiam Fox's Play, "The Spy," Which Has Been Banned—Vitagraph Presses for Like Action by Mandamus for "Within the Law"

MAJOR FUNKHOUSER, police censor of motion pictures in Chicago, who recently barred Mary Pickford's "The Little American," since that incident has put his ban on the distribution of "Within the Law" and "The Spy."

This most recent action is being vigorously contended by Vitagraph, distributing "Within the Law," and by William Fox, owner of "The Spy." Both have brought court proceedings, the Fox action taking the form of a restraint proceeding against Mayor Thompson, Chief of Police Schuettler and the valiant Major Funkhouser. Albert E. Smith, president for Vitagraph, started a mandamus.

In the case of William Fox's bill, the United States District Court, Judge Alschuler sitting, has ruled in Fox's favor, and against the valiant major, already. The ruling is based upon the contention that Major Funkhouser's stated objection "that the picture was too strong and made the sweat stand out on his brow" was not within the meaning of the ordinance providing for the censorship of motion pictures. The order permits the showing of "The Spy" at once.

Chicago generally laughs at the Major. No one takes him seriously except the film people. He has been nicknamed "Major Funkie." This is based on the incident in Pickwick papers when the judge at the breach of promise trial misunderstood the name of the widow's lawyer and said to him, "Yes, Mr. Monkey." "Not Monkey—Funkie," the lawyer hastened to put in.

Chicago Alone Suffers

Major Funkhouser's ridiculously frequent rulings affect the distribution of films in Chicago only. It therefore often happens that the interdicted pictures are being shown nightly to thousands of people in all the towns around Chicago, while Major Funkhouser is vainly charging at windmills in an attempt to prove that the films would be harmful to Chicago morals.

But the owners of films who have taken infinite pains in production in the endeavor to make the pictures uplifting in every way find it hard to take any lenient view of "Major Funkie." In the Fox bill, for instance, the following sentences appear:

Offense to Germans Feared

"Mayor William Hale Thompson has repeatedly expressed himself publicly and privately as opposed to the war and opposed to the prosecution thereof by the United States.

"Major Funkhouse heretofore has refused permits for motion pictures depicting the events of the war and the conduct of the war by Germany, on the ground that it would offend Germans living in Chicago, and since the declaration of war, he has established a rule in his department against issuing permits for such pictures."

All this gives "Major Funkie" a portentious aspect that does not belong to him, and at the same time exaggerates the importance of his action.

Funkhouser, having viewed the picture, refused to give it a permit, declaring (the bill states) "that the acting in the play was in places too powerful and too dramatic and that it made the sweat stand out on his brow."

William Fox Stands Firm

Mr. Fox, however, would not consent to the elimination of the scenes desired, because they were vitally necessary to the patriotic mission of the piece, and because the scenes could be condemned only as the result of a short-sighted policy.

THIS PLASTIC INDUSTRY

The film business is like wax—constantly molded by many hands.

Are you keeping pace with the swift changes, the amazing developments?

Motion Picture News records faithfully and accurately, week by week, these unaccountable changes.

Its information is gleaned from countless reliable sources and sifted down to plain, authenticated statements.

Advertisements — news — editorials—reflect this spirit.

Why do you reach for "the book with the bright red cover"—FIRST?

The bill for the injunction establishes the point that since the outbreak of hostilities between the United States and Germany, President Wilson has specifically requested that film producers and distributors organize and mobilize to co-operate with the Government in waging war and in bringing it to a successful conclusion.

In producing "The Spy," Mr. Fox has taken definite steps in this direction. He is warning America to the perils within her own gates. He is trying to assist the Government by having people ferret out the thousands of spies.

People Like the Films

Manager Eckhardt, of the local Fox office, arranged for a special showing of the picture at the Studebaker one day last week. A representative audience was invited and requested to say what they thought about the picture and the justice of Herr Funkhouser's ban.

All of these were later filed in the Federal Court, where the case of the Fox Company against Funkhouser will be tried. Among those who voiced enthusiastic approval of the picture were William G. Edens, of the Central Trust Company; Inez Rogers Deach, representing Bishop Fallows; J. H. Poague, master in chancery, and a score of other well known Chicago citizens and upholders of rights and morals.

Favor "Within the Law"

Before starting suit Vitagraph held a private showing of "Within the Law," also at the Studebaker. More than 1,200 of the most prominent residents of Chicago attended. The great majority declared that "Within the Law" was a splendid picture in every way and that not one scene should be eliminated. Not a single person present offered an opinion other than along those lines.

Immediately after the showing Attorney Jacobson gathered these opinions together and, armed with them, called upon Major Funkhouser and upon Herman F. Schuettler, General Superintendent of Police, and requested a permit to publicly exhibit "Within the Law" in the city of Chicago. Major Funkhouser and Superintendent Schuettler refused to accept the fee. Immediately after this refusal the petition was drawn up and filed.

Prize Winners at Merry F.I.L.M. Club Outing

Five hundred exhibitors, exchangemen and wives and sweethearts were at the F.I.L.M Club outing at Glenwood-on-the-Sound.

Miss Jessie Touraine, Triangle, won the baseball throwing contest. A human wheelbarrow race was almost won by Harry Busbaum of General Film and John A. Hammell of Pathe. The hundred-yard dash for members of the club was won by Eddie Saunders of Metro. The three-legged race was won by Chas. Harring of the Palace theatre.

The big event of the day was a baseball game between exhibitors and exchangemen. This turned out to be a surprise as the game was hotly contested. It ended in the sixth inning, in a tie-score, seven—seven. The result was satisfactory to neither side, and a return game between exhibitors and exchangemen is planned to be held at Pelham Bay Park, September 8.

The day ended with a big shore dinner which was enjoyed by more than three hundred and fifty persons.

Tobacco Fund in Baltimore

Two new special productions will open in legitimate houses in Baltimore on Monday, September 3. One will be the William Fox production of "Jack and the Beanstalk," which will be shown at the Auditorium.

The management of the Auditorium has arranged with the Baltimore News to devote a percentage of the entire week's receipts to the Tobacco Fund of the American soldiers.

Universal Gets Government Film Contract

To Distribute All Motion Pictures Showing Activities of the United States Department of Agriculture

THE United States Department of Agriculture signed a contract with Universal this week to distribute motion pictures illustrating the work and activities of the department during the coming year.

Fifteen companies were competing for the contract. The deal is the most important of the kind ever made by the Government. It is a recognition of the superiority of the film as a means of publicity.

A number of pictures have already been completed by the Department of Agriculture, and others will be made with the cooperation of Universal, as the contract provides that the services of scenario writers, scenario editors, producers, directors, actors and actresses, and others utilized in the manufacture and editing of films shall be furnished by the distributing organization whenever needed. Operators are also to be provided for the exhibition of pictures in foreign lands.

Some of the pictures already made show the work of the Forestry Bureau in fighting forest fires and caring for the immense tracts of wild land under Government supervision. There are also many beautiful and picturesque studies of the agents of the department at work among the sheep and cattle ranches of the West, and a reel devoted to the work of road building under various circumstances is highly instructive, besides possessing many splendid bits of photography.

One of these features will be released every two weeks, bearing the notice, "Official Film of the United States Department of Agriculture, Distributed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company."

Special advertising matter and lithographic paper will also be issued for the series in co-operation with the department.

Any scenes that are of particular timeliness will be utilized in issues of the Animated Weekly, Current Events and the Screen Magazine. It is planned, however, to edit the original films so as to bring out all of the dramatic and human interest qualities in the subjects handled.

Each feature released will thus be the official expression of one of the most interesting phases of work carried on by the Government of the United States, presented in a way to interest and educate all classes of citizens.

Charges for this service will be made reasonable enough to meet the purse of any exhibitor in the business.

Keith Takes Pathe's Official War Pictures

Proceeds to Go to War Charities, American Ambulance and Red Cross—Largest Booking, 5000 Days in All

ONE of the largest bookings made for motion pictures was that consummated the last days in August by the B. F. Keith Circuit and the Official Government Pictures, distributed by Pathe, for a showing of these war pictures that will be over 5,000 days and will amount to almost a quarter of a million dollars.

All the theatres on the Keith Circuit will show these latest pictures of the war. Beginning Monday, September 17, and continuing for three weeks, these pictures will be the headline feature of the Keith vaudeville houses.

"Mr. Albee, general manager and half owner of the B. F. Keith Circuit, proves himself not only a good showman but also a good patriot by booking these pictures," said J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., the company distributing the war pictures in America, "because these pictures show the people of America just what they want to see —that is, war as it really is—and because the proceeds from these pictures are devoted to war relief benefit."

Mr. E. F. Albee states that the B. F. Keith Circuit is not being turned into a motion picture circuit, and that the war pictures will be shown in addition to the usual vaudeville program.

"I have booked these pictures merely as a high-class feature that the people who patronize our houses will want to see," said E. F. Albee, general manager of the B. F. Keith Circuit.

"I believe that these pictures, giving a true presentation of events on the battlefield in northern France, will be one of the biggest features ever seen in this country. These pictures will be shown in three episodes. One episode of approximately four reels will be shown each week.

"It was a special pleasure to make this booking, which totals up over a 5,000-day showing for these pictures, as the proceeds from them go to war charities, and the American ambulances in France will benefit by our showing of them, as will also the Red Cross funds. I believe our patrons will want to see these pictures again and again, and I am thoroughly convinced that the showing of them will speed up Red Cross and other work that will be of benefit to the soldiers fighting our battle."

The showing these pictures will be given on the Keith Circuit is stated to be the greatest showing ever given any pictures, and it is estimated that more people will see them during the three weeks following September 17 than have seen any other motion picture in the same length of time.

The Pathe Exchanges are making plans to distribute these in the regular picture houses after the showing on the B. F. Keith Circuit.

Michigan Exhibitors Form A. E. A. League

The exhibitors of Michigan held a meeting at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, Tuesday, September 4, according to call, for the purpose of forming the new state branch of the American Exhibitors' Association and wiping out the old state league.

Entertainment features for the ladies and a smoker in the evening for the men were provided.

Rembusch in Charge of Complaint Bureau of A. E. A.

The complaint department of the American Exhibitors Association will be handled by Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana. He is recognized as one of the best informed exhibitors on trade questions and will gladly answer the inquiries of the exhibitors on all questions pertaining to the industry.

Each suggestion and complaint will receive his personal attention, and exhibitors are invited to write him regarding any angle of their business. Any movement for the betterment of exhibitors will receive his hearty support, and every communication will receive careful attention on his part. Such matters as cannot easily be taken up in the Western offices will be forwarded to New York for investigation and a report made after the investigation has been concluded.

Inglis in New York with Marine Feature, "Lorelei of the Sea"

Gus Inglis of the Los Angeles firm of Willis & Inglis, is in New York, accompanied by the general manager of the Marine Film Company, M. Philip Hansen. They have brought the first feature made by that concern, "Lorelei of the Sea."

Willis and Inglis acted in an advisory capacity in the making of this ocean story, which was written by Richard Willis. They are also in charge of the marketing arrangements.

Mr. Inglis is staying at the Hotel Astor and will meet several stars and directors who contemplate making the Pacific coast their home and business center.

He says that there is no panic over the war in the photoplay colony and that they fully expect to see conditions improve rather than deteriorate. There is work for the better class of artists, although most of the firms are hiring their support by the picture now. He says also that there is a big demand for good stories and that they have reorganized their scenario department to meet this demand. Since his last visit his firm have added two more offices to their suite, now having six large rooms.

Transcontinental Trip for Balshofer Company

In order to complete the production, "Paradise Garden," which was begun in the Hollywood, California, Studios of the Yorke Film Corporation, the Harold Lockwood company, under the direction of F. J. Balshofer, will this week go to New York, where scenes of the picture requiring locations in New York City will be filmed.

Since taking the Harold Lockwood company to California about a year ago, the Yorke-Metro company has produced six pictures at the Hollywood Studios. According to Balshofer, this is an ideal location for the making of most of the Harold Lockwood features.

Those who are leaving Los Angeles for New York this week are Harold Lockwood, Fred J. Balshofer, Lester Cuneo, heavy man; Richard V. Spencer, scenario editor; Tony Gaudio, cameraman; Ben Pierpaolo, assistant, and Wiley J. Gibson, business manager.

Co-operation in Expositions of N.A.M.P.I. and M.P.E.L.A.

Five Members of Each Body to Serve on Controlling Committees—Two Expositions to Be Held in 1918—New York Will Be Center in February and Boston During July Meeting

A CONFERENCE of a committee appointed at the recent meeting of the N. A. M. P. I. with a committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League, held last Monday, resulted in the decision to hold two expositions in 1918. The first is set for New York in February and the second is to be held in Boston at the time of the annual convention of the National Exhibitor's League in July.

The promotion and management of both expositions will be under the direction of a joint committee, members of which will be designated by each organization and it is the purpose to plan these two trade showings so that they will compare favorably with the annual shows and expositions held by other leading industries of the country.

Committee Representation

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was represented at the meeting by President William A. Brady, ex-officio; Arthur S. Friend, J. E. Brulatour, William L. Sherrill, J. A. Berst, Gabriel L. Hess and J. H. Hallberg, The National Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was represented by Lee A. Ochs, president, ex-officio; Ernest H. Horstmann, Alfred S. Black, J. H. O'Donnell, Eugene M. Clark and Frank Eager.

It is expected that permanent committees will be appointed within a fortnight so that preliminary arrangements can be made for the New York exposition in February, which will include the selection of a building and manager.

No expositions of the motion picture industry have been held in New York during the past two years and it is contended that a well organized and conducted exposition, at which every big producing and distributing corporation, as well as supply and equipment companies, will be represented, showing the growth of the industry, will attract big crowds and prove a money maker for the promoting organizations.

Big Show Is Planned

Tentative plans are to have all future expositions conducted under the joint auspices of five members of the National Association—to be appointed by the president, and five members of the M. P. E. L. A.

The New York show is being planned as a monster trade show, the intention being to make it the biggest ever held. It is to be thoroughly representative of the growth and dignity of the industry, rather than merely a series of advertising exploitations for the various manufacturers who are represented.

Boston "Blue Laws" Waived for Italian War Pictures

For the first time in the history of the city a Sunday night performance of a moving picture was held in a legitimate theatre in Boston, last week.

The attraction was "The Italian Battle-front," playing at the Tremont theatre. A special dispensation, suspending Boston's ordinance having to do exhibitions in a legitimate theatre on Sundays, was obtained.

The chief executive of the city, together with Governor McCall, General Clarence Edwards, commanding the New England Department, and his entire staff, as well as many other notables, attended the opening performance of this production.

They were so impressed with the picture that when a request was made by the management to exhibit the production on Sunday evening it was readily complied with.

The only restrictions imposed were that the curtain should be raised before the theatre was opened and remain so during the performance, and that any death scenes appearing in the picture should be eliminated. As the production is exceptionallly free from such scenes both stipulations were easily complied with.

"The Reasons Why" For the A. E. A.

Frank Rembusch Gives in Brief Twelve Reasons Why Exhibitors Were Forced to Withdraw from Ochs' League at Chicago

FRANK J. REMBUSCH, president of the Indiana Local of the American Exhibitors' Association, has compiled a set of twelve reasons why certain members and delegates of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League left the convention floor in Chicago last July and formed the new organization.

"There are many reasons why the men who are deeply interested in the advancement of the causes of the exhibitor should have withdrawn from the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, but the following reasons will suffice to prove that the convention at Chicago was run solely for the benefit of Lee Ochs and his henchmen and not for the exhibitors:

FIRST—No exhibitors were allowed to hear the deliberations of the convention except delegates. The object of this was to prevent the exhibitors from bringing forth another candidate who might smash the Ochs machine.

SECOND—The machinery of the convention was in the hands of the national organization and the delegates received their badges from William Sweeney, National Secretary, at the Hotel Morrison. He was to give out delegate and alternate badges, but when the states which were opposed to Ochs applied for badges they were given an insufficient number and the excuse given was that they had run out of badges. Policemen were stationed at the door and exhibitors without badges were shoved about as if they were burglars trying to get in the hall.

THIRD—Indiana had nine badges for seventeen delegates and seventeen alternates, while Massachusetts and Illinois, entitled to eight badges each, had more than fifty delegates on the floor of the convention. They got the badges because they were Ochs men.

FOURTH—Ochs appointed the credential, resolution and grievance committees and put on these committees a majority of his followers, who were able to pass any resolutions they desired passed and could defeat all resolutions they did not want to pass. In former years the convention appointed the credential committee as provided in the constitution of the League.

FIFTH—Ochs paid no attention to the regular order of procedure during the meetings, nor did he follow the constitution and by-laws from the very start. He conducted the meetings solely as he saw fit and with utter disregard for the rights of the delegates and members of the league.

SIXTH—In meetings conducted in regular parliamentary form a minority report is acted upon first. Mr. O'Donnell of Indiana, who had been appointed on the credential committee by Ochs, brought in a minority report which was never acted upon. Mr. Momand, of Oklahoma, brought in a minority report on the Exhibitors' Trade Review, which was never even read, much less than acted upon.

SEVENTH—Members of important committees who were in the majority are known to be silent stockholders in the Trade Review. Proof of this is easily established as they were the same men who were selling stock and subscriptions when the paper was started a few months ago.

EIGHTH—The exhibitors left the league because they thought they were not attending an exhibitors convention but a meeting of the stockholders of the Trade Review, as the convention was in the control of this paper, and the Chicago police were keeping them in control.

NINTH—From the start of the session unless you were an Ochs supporter, you could not get the floor of the convention.

TENTH—Ochs had proven himself to be an incompetent executive, using his paper to bulldoze both the exhibitor and the producer. He ridiculed the best exhibitors and workers in the league who were against his continuing in office. He used his patronage to play politics against any other candidate for the office of president, which was decidedly unfair.

ELEVENTH—Ochs advocated a tax of 10 per cent on gross receipts of the exhibitor and no tax on film, and the exhibitors could not support a president who worked for the interest of the manufacturer against the exhibitor.

TWELFTH—Protesting delegates at the convention felt that they did not want to follow a leader whose affiliations with the film interests was such that he could not look after the interests of the exhibitor. As the principal owner of the Trade Review, he must cater to the manufacturer for advertising patronage, for that paper could not last a week without that advertising; therefore the exhibitors could not hope to have their interests protected under the circumstances, and withdrew and organized the American exhibitors Association as a matter of self protection.

Omaha Theatre Men Confronted with Sunday Delivery Problem

Express companies in Omaha, Neb., have notified the exchanges they will not pick up or deliver films after 4 p. m. or on Sundays. This has necessitated several exchanges buying their own delivery equipment. Others already have automobiles or delivery horses and wagons. There is considerable talk of a co-operative plan.

The reason given by the express companies for cutting down its service is the lack of help.

The situation has renewed the talk of parcel post deliveries and collections. The Nebraska Exhibitor's league officials are now in communication with the postoffice headquarters at Washington to learn what can be done to better the parcel post system of handling films. They are certain, they say, a plan will finally be agreed upon which will make the parcel post plan entirely satisfactory to exhibitors and exchanges.

American Signs Miss Fischer

Margarita Fischer has just signed a contract with President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, Inc., and will start work on a new American picture on September 10. The name of the picture has not yet been announced.

Countrywide Organization for Foursquare

M. H. Hoffman Establishes Chicago Office—To Visit Next Middle West Cities and Philadelphia—Canada to Follow

M. H. HOFFMAN, vice-president and general manager of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., left New York last Monday and early the following day was in Chicago. From that city he sent the following wire to P. V. R. Key, his manager of sales and advertising:

"Chicago Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange will be established next week. Exhibitors here united in endorsing our policy of reasonable profits on strong features and want our combined product. After visiting exchanges in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia will return to New York. Toronto and Montreal Foursquare exchanges will be next in order of establishment."

According to Mr. Key, Mr. Hoffman will personally start the Hoffman-Foursquare service stations. Before the end of September not less than three cities will be added to New York, Boston and others mentioned.

"Mr. Hoffman's plans for exhibitors," said Mr. Key, "are certainly more than liberal. He feels that the quickest and surest way to build up a permanent patronage is to give big value for a sum considerably under what would ordinarily be regarded in the motion-picture industry as reasonable.

"The Hoffman-Foursquare idea is to seriously approach the price question—among others to be corrected. When we say we purpose putting our prices for each feature to the exhibitor on a basis allowing us only a small margin of profit Mr. Hoffman means it.

"The common-sense methods of business, which Mr. Hoffman has declared will be the only ones applied to this organization, are absolutely the only methods which will be permitted to prevail. For if such business methods are adopted (as they have been by M. H. Hoffman, Inc.) they are certain to prove to be the best. This has, in fact, already been demonstrated.

"When Mr. Hoffman reaches New York from his western trip he will have a statement of the utmost importance. Independent as the firm of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., is its management realizes that independence is never so strong as when it realizes that it rests upon inter-independence. In other words, apply the golden rule to the firms and individuals with whom one deals and long and lasting business relations may be counted on to reign."

Italian War Pictures Pack Chicago House

Subjects Showing Victorious Armies of Italy Draw Big Crowds to Auditorium at Advanced Prices—Critics Praise Picture

BUSINESS for "The Italian Battle Front," the Italian war picture controlled by the Fort Pitt Theatre Company, Pittsburgh, and now showing at the Auditorium, Chicago, is reported unusually good by the company. It is said that the house is packed at every performance, at prices ranging from fifty cents to two dollars. The reviewers of the Chicago papers have been enthusiastic in their praise of the picture.

Louella O'Parsons in the Chicago Herald, said: "Not even 'The Birth of a Nation' produced more genuine thrills. The dramatic effects of the incidents on the battlefield are better than any other war films I have ever seen. The picturing is exquisite, in its magnificent scenic beauty."

The Chicago Journal said: "All through the evening the pictures—and very remarkable pictures they were—kept the audience in a fever of interest, and the applause was well nigh continuous. The production is as complete a record of warfare as it is possible to set forth on the screen in the evening, and is an excellent example of motion photography."

Oma Moody Lawrence, in the Chicago Evening Post, said: "Mary Garden never brought to this theatre so much concentrated appreciation of a performance. A longer line never formed outside the box office, not even when Caruso was most in favor."

Rob Reel in the Chicago American said: "It has been long since Chicago has had such a pretentious cinema premiere as that given in the Auditorium last night to 'The Italian Battlefront.' The picture has a picturesque and unusual quality about it, totally different from those that have gone before it."

The presentation given the picture by William Moore Patch made an impression second only to the appeal of the picture itself. With the immense stage of the Auditorium at his disposal, Mr. Patch constructed a massive setting showing a section of the snow-clad Alps, over which the Italian armies are fighting. The curtain rises on a blinding snow storm, through which a lonely Italian sentinel, standing on a rocky peak, is seen. This scene dissolves into the picture proper and strikes an atmospheric keynote for that which follows.

A noteworthy feature of the production is the orchestra, numbering fifty men, selected from the grand opera orchestra, utilized by Cleofonte Campanini during the winter season of opera in the Auditorium theatre.

"Notwithstanding the pace set by this opening performance, which was attended by Lieutenant-General Guglielmotti, one of the highest ranking officers of the Italian army, who with his entire staff, went from Washington to Chicago for the premiere, and Major-General Thomas H. Barry, Commander-in-Chief of the Central Department, who has since left for active service abroad, together with the Italian, French, British, Belgian, Russian and Japanese consuls, the picture has consistently maintained the high level of business with which it started," says an officer of the company.

Julia Sanderson and Ann Murdock First Empire-Mutual

MISS JULIA SANDERSON will make her initial screen bow to the public in "The Runaway," an Empire All-Star picture through Mutual. It is officially announced that all Empire pictures will be released through Mutual, the first being the "Outcast," with Ann Murdock and David Powell, September 10. The Julia Sanderson picture will be shown September 24.

For years now, Miss Sanderson, New York's favorite light opera star, has shaken her head in response to all offers to act before the camera.

But the magic of Charles Frohman's name still lives, and when it was made known that the Empire All-Star Corporation had been formed to give his plays an opportunity to be seen by hundreds of thousands of people.

Norman Trevor is supporting Miss Sanderson. This is Mr. Trevor's first appearance on the screen and he too was tempted by the mention of Charles Frohman's name. Mr. Trevor was last seen as "Our Policeman" in "A Kiss for Cinderella," the Barrie play that Maude Adams delighted New York with all last season. Rex McDougal and Henry Fielding are in the cast of "The Runaway."

October 22 is the date set for the next release which is to be "The Beautiful Adventure." Dell Henderson is the director for all three pictures.

"The Impostor," "The Richest Girl" (directed by Albert Capellani) and "My Wife" will shortly follow.

Varner Again Contracts for All Pathe Pictures

H. B. Varner of the Lyric theatre, Lexington, N. C., one of the influential exhibitors in the South, has booked all Pathe pictures through the Charlotte branch.

In making his decision to play the entire Pathe program Mr. Varner wrote the following letter to R. V. Anderson, Pathe's Charlotte manager.

"Nothing pleases me more now than the fact that I have booked the whole Pathe output through your Charlotte Exchange. When I run back through my three years' experience here and begin to check up box-office results, my Pathe connection becomes doubly pleasing."

David Powell Plays Role of Blind Man

David Powell, in the Empire-Mutual play, "In the Unforeseen," plays Walter, who is stricken suddenly blind.

"For a man that has been blind since birth or has gradually lost his sight, things are made a little easier," said Mr. Powell when questioned about his part, "but when a man is suddenly plunged headlong into pitchy blackness, and endless night—there are no end to the things that perplex and terrify him. For instance, when cautiously walking along, he suddenly runs into something and is hurt, experience, acquired in this picture, has been that his first thought is—not 'how badly am I hurt,' but 'what hit me?'"

Some Few Loew Theatres Advance Prices Five Cents

Marcus Loew at the Same Time Lowers the Admission to a Cleveland Theatre, Declaring Fifty Cents Too Much for Pictures, "the People's Amusement"—Nebraska in Line for Small Price Boosts

NOTICES posted in various Marcus Loew Theatres in Greater New York for the past two weeks have announced that owing to the increased cost of providing entertainment and theatre equipment the prices would be raised slightly on Sept. 3. The price changes went into effect, with entire satisfaction. As far as known no patrons objected to the increase in any Loew theatre, since it was never over five cents in any house, and everyone seemed to realize that it was necessary.

Prices were not raised generally in the Loew theatres, but only in a few, where the price of orchestra seats had been ridiculously cheap. In the De Kalb theatre in Brooklyn, for instance, the price was raised from 15 to 20 cents for the orchestra, for a big vaudeville bill and motion pictures.

Loew could not be reached for a statement regarding the raise in prices.

It has been known for a long time that Marcus Loew was the pioneer of small prices and big shows, and he owes his success to this. He has always been an advocate of low prices. In several cases, where a theatre had not been going so well, Loew lowered the prices, and gave wonderful shows, proving that this was a short cut to success. Now, however, with the cost of theatre material considerably advanced, with salaries of employees going up, actors' salaries double what they were three years ago, Loew had to raise his prices or lose money in some houses. His receipts have been almost the same for several years, while the price of theatre operation has almost doubled. Loew has been fighting against a price for several years, but has finally been forced to it.

The price of film also must have had something to do with the raise of prices.

It is plain that there is no change in policy on the part of Marcus Loew for within the last few weeks he has shown a desire to make admission prices to motion picture theatres as low as is possible, considering quality of performances.

In Cleveland for instance Mr. Loew took over a motion picture theatre that had been running highest quality pictures and charging fifty cents. His first move was to lower the price of admission. At the time Mr. Loew was interviewed in Cleveland and quoted as saying:

"Fifty cents is too much for motion pictures. It is the people's amusement and nothing should be done that will not maintain it secure in that position."

"Count Nebraska in on any campaign to increase admission prices to motion picture theatre" is the word from H. M. Thomas, manager of the Strand, Omaha, Neb., and president of the Nebraska Exhibitors' League.

"All over the state already there is a tendency to boost the admission prices and to boost the quality of the shows. This tendency is growing stronger every day. A campaign in this direction is certain to meet with instant approval and to accomplish a whole lot of good.

"I could name any number of theatres over the state that charge from 15 to 25 cents now. The five-cent house is a thing of the past, and every proprietor of a ten-cent house is thinking seriously of higher admission prices.

"The Strand has charged 10, 20 and 30 cents with big success. This price has enabled us to put on the best of music, buy the best pictures on the market and to maintain one of the most comfortable, and attractive theatres in this part of the country. From my own experience I would say to an exhibitor 'Don't hesitate about charging higher prices. It won't hurt your business—it'll help.'

"And it will help the motion picture industry in Nebraska when the cheaper pictures are shown no more. Exhibitors looking forward to the future see a big thing in the notice of the Artcraft and Clara Kimball Young companies that their pictures cannot be shown at an admission price of less than 15 cents.

"Nearly every suburban theatre now has its special nights for superfeatures, when the admission price is from 15 to 25 cents. They can't show these costly pictures, with other expenses as high as they are, and make money unless they charge a higher admission price."

The Largest Circulation

When a company volunteers the information that MOTION PICTURE NEWS has the largest circulation of any similar publication in the territory in which the company operates, the popularity of the "News" is apparent.

The National Film-Booking Service, Pittsburgh, says: "We find that the 'News' has a large circulation in this district."

Clara Kimball Young Heads Two Companies

Clara Kimball Young, who is now being managed by Harry I. Garson, holds the distinction of being the only woman star to own and control two picture producing companies.

She not only heads, owns and controls her own producing company, known as Clara Kimball Young, which releases eight big pictures a year to the C. K. Y. Film Corporation, but she also owns the controlling interest in the Fun-Art Films, Inc., a New York corporation, to will release two two-reel comedies each month. The latter organization will feature Gordon Dooley and his sister Ray, beginning about September 15. It has not been decided just how these comedies will be released.

Miss Young and her new organization has just completed her first picture, "Magda," and will start work immediately upon "The Marionettes," which will be followed by "Shirley Kaye."

Universal Makes Speed Record with New York Parade

Universal covered the big military parade in New York, August 30, with six of the best cameramen on the staffs of the Animated Weekly and Current Events.

Although the parade was not over until three o'clock, the Universal version was shown on the screens of the Broadway and other leading New York theatres the same evening. Some 450 feet of selected views have also been incorporated in the 17th issue of Current Events, released September 1.

Besides picturing Manhattan's farewell to her boys, the Universal secured permission to send a cameraman with the Twenty-second Engineers to Spartanburg, S. C. In this way, the entire journey of Colonel Vanderbilt's famous regiment will be pictured.

To Elect New President of Art Dramas, Inc.

Resignation of Harry Raver Due to Prearrangement on Part of the Owners—To Attend to His Own Productions

A NEW president of Art Dramas, Inc., will be elected this week to fill the place made vacant by the resignation of Harry Raver. Speaking of Mr. Raver's resignation, Arthur F. Beck, general manager, said:

"Art Dramas has made wonderful progress under the leadership of Harry Raver. We regret that, owing to the pressure of his production interests, Art Dramas must lose the services of a film man of Mr. Raver's comprehensive experience.

"Mr. Raver's resignation of the presidency is in line with the recently announced policy of the heads of the producing companies making pictures, for release through Art Dramas, Inc., to devote their entire time and attention to the details of production.

"Art Dramas will continue along the same lines as heretofore. There will be no radical changes in methods or policies—at least, for the present. Our present releasing schedule will be adhered to and all production plans of contributing producers heretofore announced will be carried out."

Regarding his resignation, Mr. Raver said:

"My resignation as president and director of Art Dramas, Inc., need occasion no surprise, as I have for some time contemplated turning over the reins to one whose sole time and energy could be devoted to its multifarious details, leaving me free to supervise my productions.

"My Art Dramas association has been pleasant and profitable and I am glad to say that the program has made excellent progress, through the efforts of no one individual in the organization, but because every one has done his share, backed by a progressive and loyal group of territorial distributors who have expressed faith in the program by their continued patronage."

Vitagraph is to Fling Dupers Into Jail

Albert E. Smith Announces That Twenty-seven Features Have Been Copied and Are Being Sold Broadcast Over the Country

THE film dupers, engaged in a particularly despicable kind of crime, are at large again, so Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph states in a warning sent out to exhibitors all over the country.

Through careful investigation Mr. Smith has discovered that twenty-seven Vitagraph features, deemed particularly salable, have been duplicated and are being offered for sale. Mr. Smith announces he purposes to apprehend the criminals and fling them into jail. Following is a list of the pilfered Vitagraphs: "Battle Cry of Peace," "The Ninety and Nine," "Rose of the South," "The Test," "The Late Mr. Jones," "Vengeance of Durand," "Father's Hatband," "A Regiment of Two," "Fanny's Conspiracy," "How States Are Made," "Goodness Gracious," "A Lesson in Jealousy," "The Politician's Dream," "The Troublesome Secretaries," "Happy Go Lucky," "Chains of an Oath," "Betty in the Lion's Den," "The Violin of M'sieur," "An Elopement at Home," "The Feudists," "The Master Painter," "Her Husband," "When Women Go on the Warpath," "Winning the Stepchildren," "The Reincarnation of Karma," "David Garrick," "Auld Lang Syne."

The first picture mentioned is a special "Blue Ribbon" feature, the next two are regular "Blue Ribbon" features, and the balance of the list are re-issues being put out by Greater Vitagraph under the brand name of Favorite Film Features.

In the preliminary investigation President Smith has discovered that the films of several other companies are being duplicated and all the work apparently is being done by the same gang judging from the similarity in the work, the printing and tinting.

Not satisfied with duping the films the dishonest distributors go so far as to practically copy the paper of the regular manufacturers, making it appear that the exhibitors are doing business with the real owners of the pictures.

The duped films are released simultaneously in Boston, New York and St. Louis. It is believed that there are duping plants somewhere near New York City and at Chicago.

"The best way to prevent this film duping and film stealing is for the exhibitors to purchase only from the recognized distributors of manufacturers," says President Smith.

Paralta and Triangle Heads Confer in West

Lynch, president Triangle Distributing Corporation, and President Carl Anderson of Paralta Plays, Inc., arrived in Los Angeles last week to spend two weeks with Manager Robert Kane of Paralta Studios, to get in close touch with production activities, which at the present time consists of three producing units being actively engaged.

It is anticipated a number of additional producing companies will be put to work during the coming week, as Paralta has several directors and leading people who are not engaged at the present time, the list including Director Raymond B. West, Clara Williams, Rhea Mitchell and Henry Walthal, who has just arrived on the Coast.

Fred G. Sliter
(Albany Mgr. Mutual)

"Chip Off Old Block" Wins Film Fame

"A chip off the old block" well describes Fred G. Sliter, who is manager of the Albany branch of the Mutual Film Corporation. He is a son of W. G. Sliter, professionally known as "Colonel Stanton," who up to the time of his death managed the Central Square theatre, Lynn, Mass., and managed such attractions as Thomas E. Shea, Fox and Ward's minstrels, Jerry McAuliffe and May Fiske.

Young Sliter was naturally woven in with affairs theatrical early in life and soon began acting as advance man for attractions his father managed. He started in the moving picture business in 1912 and followed the industry through all its branches. He built and managed and became part owner of the Broadway theatre, Schenectady, operated by Garlock and Sliter. He entered the employ of the Mutual in 1915 as road representative and immediately began to show big results. His unusual sales ability won him appointment as the manager of the Albany branch.

Mr. Sliter is only thirty-two, but he has a wonderful grasp on the industry and he is one of the "information bureaus" of New York State managers. He is always willing to take on new and large responsibilities.

Retraction Demanded by Universal of Metropolitan Co.

Attorneys of Film Concern Notify Magazine Suit Will Be Instituted on Article Appearing in September Issue Alleging Infringement on Novel in Universal Production

PROCEEDINGS have been instituted by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, through its attorneys, Stanchfield and Levy, against the Metropolitan Magazine Company for the article appearing in the September number of the periodical in which alleged dishonest practice on the part of picture concerns, especially on infringing on copyrighted material, was purported to be exposed.

The specific basis for the threatened libel action was a paragraph in which the writer, Willis J. Abbot, cited a supposed instance in support of his charges, in which Universal was said to have knowingly transgressed on the rights to Sir Gilbert Parker's "Right of Way" in making a picture titled "The Superior Law."

A letter to the Metropolitan company, notifying it of the proposed institution of suit, sets forth the side of the Universal company. The letter in full follows:

Our client, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has directed us to take appropriate proceedings against you for the vindication of its reputation in connection with a libel published in your September number of the Metropolitan.

The libel consists of false and malicious statements made concerning our client in the article entitled "The Perils of Writing for the Movies," by Willis J. Abbot, appearing on pages 10, 11, 73 and 76 of the September number. In this article you have deliberately and falsely charged our client with knowing and intentional misappropriation and theft of the literary property of another.

The article as a whole deals with the alleged dishonest practice on the part of motion picture producers of systematically and deliberately infringing and stealing copyrighted material, which, as you are undoubtedly aware is, under our copyright laws, a criminal offense. The article sets forth several alleged examples of such a practice, and, after quoting an alleged excuse of motion picture producers to the effect that they cannot always prevent their scenario writers from stealing the ideas of others, continues as follows:

> Unhappily, facts do not square with suave excuses.
> A rather startling illustration of calm appropriation, not by an irresponsible scenario editor, but by a thoroughly responsible corporation, was given in court recently, with Sir Gilbert Parker as the complainant. To the ordinary observer it would seem that to steal the novel, "The Right of Way," and produce it without compensation or even credit to the author would be as brazenly rash as to steal the Kohinoor from the crown jewels and expect to sell it without detection. But Pathe of Paris and the Universal of this country cheerfully took this risk. They did indeed change slightly the title of the story, making it "The Superior Law," and the names of some of the characters—Charley Steele becoming Charley Rock, thus retaining the literary suggestion that he was a hard case. But the action, atmosphere and localities of the story were retained unchanged. Portions of the dialogue were used verbatim in the "leaders." Sir Gilbert had a trick of using quotations—rather hackneyed ones—as chapter headings. One can scarcely copyright quotations from the Book of Proverbs and similar familiar places, but the "adapters" of Sir Gilbert's novel used precisely the same quotations on the screen to indicate the action following. Whatever their ethics, the artistry of the pirates was weak. They were too indolent to properly disguise their loot. For example, though it was "Charley Rock" in the cast, frequently it was Steele in the leaders, or cut-ins, as the photoplay makers call the words thrown on the screen at intervals to elucidate the story. Other characters also were thus mysteriously shifted back to their original names, like men with a dual personality.
> In fact, the piracy was so barefaced that neither company put in any defense. The court adjudged it a case of infringement of copyright and sent it to a referee to fix the measure of damages. In December last this action was still pending, but in the course of the hearing a curious fact developed. The offending companies—already convicted of theft, for that was the essence of their offense—summoned managers of most of the other producing companies as witnesses. With one accord they all testified that Sir Gilbert Parker has suffered little damage, if any, by the misappropriation of his work. They insisted that he could go on and reproduce his "Right of Way" under its proper title without injurious results from its earlier unauthorized publication. With one voice they stood by the offenders, and ridiculed the idea that the author had lost anything—the normal attitude of producers when authors' rights are concerned.

The meaning and intent of this article and, in particular, of the language quoted above, are too plain to require any comment on our part. We desire, however, to call to your attention the fact that our client, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, far from having been guilty of any deliberate or intentional appropriation of Sir Gilbert Parker's work, was in fact entirely innocent of any conscious wrongdoing. The film, "The Superior Law," which was released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in 1913 was not produced or manufactured by it, but was purchased as a finished product from another independent corporation with which the Universal had no connection whatsoever, and in which the Universal had no financial interest; but which sold "The Superior Law" to the Universal pursuant to a contract between the two corporations providing for the production and sale by the former to the Universal of a number of photoplays to be delivered over a considerable period of time. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company had nothing whatever to do with the production or manufacture of the film or with the selection of the scenario, and did not see the picture until the finished product was delivered to it under the contract. In fairness to the Pathe Company, we might also state incidentally that the corporation which manufactured and sold "The Superior Law" to the Universal was not, as you say, "Pathe of Paris," but another corporation having nothing to do with Pathe.

Not only have you misstated the facts of the case, but you have also misstated the facts concerning the court proceedings to which you refer. In truth, neither in the copyright suit nor anywhere else was the Universal Film Manufacturing Company "convicted of theft," as you charge in your article. On the contrary, the referee in the copyright suit distinctly held and found it to be a fact that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was innocent of any conscious infringement of Sir Gilbert Parker's copyright. The language of the referee's finding, after a review of the evidence, was as follows:

> I report that the Film Company (our client) and its officers and directors were not aware that the company was infringing the copyright and that the infringement could not reasonably have been foreseen.

The innocence of our client was established before the referee by uncontradicted proof of such overwhelming character that even the complaintant practically conceded the good faith of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company by omitting to take any exception to the referee's finding on this subject.

We have, in the foregoing, called your attention to only the most glaring of the many misstatements of fact injurious to our client, with which the article abounds.

In view of these facts, we assume it unnecessary to point out to you in further detail the serious character of the wrong which has thus been done to our client and its reputation. We trust that you will appreciate the fact that nothing short of a complete retraction, published in as conspicuous a manner as the libelous article, will have any effect whatever in reducing the damage which our client has suffered and will continue to suffer as a result of the libel.

We would thank you for an immediate reply stating your position, in a default of which we shall be constrained to commence legal proceedings at once.

Turmoil Over Sunday Show at Dewey, Okla.

A second clash between county authorities and citizens of Dewey, Okla., over Sunday amusements resulted in a near-riot at the Ramsey theatre. The State law prohibits Sunday "movies," but the city ordinances do not. Warrants were issued for L. A. Ramsey, manager.

A. C. Harrison, county attorney, and E. A. Dunlap, sheriff, served the papers Sunday night and stopped the show. The crowd interfered in behalf of the manager to such good effect that Harrison called for police protection. The police chief would not respond, saying, "It's not my affair."

New Motion Picture Corporations as Recorded

McKay and Olga Schultheis, of New York, $20,000; Fun Art Films, Inc., W. H. Rudolph, A. B. Williamson and B. H. Cohen, of New York, $1,000; Efanem Film Company, Inc., William F. O'Keefe, George G. Stiegler and E. E. Wright, of Wilmington, $100,000.

Vitagraph's "Blue Ribbons" for the Jackies

Bookings for the Fleet Include Ten Feature Plays with Fifty-three Reels of Film for Use in Weekly Jollities

EVERY battleship in the United States Navy will soon have on board a print of some Vitagraph "Blue Ribbon" picture. The Government has contracted for a weekly show, and as first booking contracted for ten pictures in fifty-three reels.

So the chances are that if a U-boat sinks an American warship hereafter in the property loss will be sevral hundred dollars' worth of film belonging to Vitagraph. The titles of first pictures are:

"The Juggernaut," Anita Stewart and Earle Williams; "An Enemy to the King," E. H. Sothern and Edith Storey; "The Enemy," seven-reel, Evart Overton, Charles Kent and Peggy Hyland; "Kennedy Square," Antonio Moreno and Muriel Ostriche; "Crooky," Frank Daniels; "The Dawn of Freedom," Charles Richman; "The Eagle's Nest," Edwin Arden and Romaine Fielding; "The Caveman," Robert Edeson and Fay Wallace; "The Crown Prince's Double," Maurice Costello; "A Man's Making," Richard Buhler and Rosetta Brice.

Owing to the secrecy with which the movements of the fleet are shrouded and the changing locations of warships from day to day, George Balsdon, manager of the New York branch of the Vitagraph distributing organization, arranged with the officer in charge of motion pictures to ship to a given point, whence they are to be transshipped to the fleet.

Motion pictures now form the chief diversion for Uncle Sam's bluejackets. Practically every ship in the fleet has its own projection machine and all boast of one or more expert operators, men who abandoned the theatre booth for the Navy. Each night shows are given on the decks of the fighting ships. The screen is stretched on two uprights at one end of the ship and the projection booth is located midships. Officers and men, the latter draped on guns, rigging, turrets and every other vantage point on the ship, gather nightly and the sight of the crews makes an inspiring one.

The Vitagraph Company booked its pictures to the fleet and no specific ship, so that before the reels are returned to the company any number of vessels can have had their use.

Mrs. Vernon Castle Stars at Century Theatre

Pathe's Courtesy Permits This Engagement with Ziegfeld-Dillingham Show—It Will Not Interfere with Her Pictures

MRS. VERNON CASTLE has been engaged by courtesy of Pathe Exchange as star of the 1917-18 Ziegfeld-Dillingham show at the Century theatre, New York, but it is announced that this will not interfere with her appearance in Pathe features.

Mrs. Castle will continue her work in the studio, where she has completed enough pictures to render negligible any delay her simultaneous appearance on stage and screen may cause.

It is estimated that about one million persons see a Century show during the season. Many times that will see Mrs. Castle on the screen.

"Messrs. Dillingham and Ziegfeld have made fortunes by their ability to judge box office value. They want Mrs. Castle at their theatre. Such a lead as this is worth the attention of any wide-awake exhibitor. It should convince him that he needs her for his," says a Pathe official.

Mrs. Castle is now at work at her special studio on a story by Lois Zellner. The working title is "The Girl from Bohemia." It is a story of a Greenwich village artist whom circumstances bring to a little New England town where she gets more excitement and romance than she had ever known existed.

The picture is being made under the direction of Larry McGill.

The man engaged to play opposite Mrs. Castle in this picture is Edmund Lowe.

Louis Rosenbluh to Distribute "Standards"

William Fox Picks His Old Associate in the Greater New York Rental Company to Be an Important Fox Executive

WITH the announcement by the Fox Film Corporation of the inauguration of Standard Pictures, comes the further news that the chief executive for their distribution in the East will be Louis Rosenbluh.

Mr. Rosenbluh's re-entry in the field of film distribution recalls to the trade a career notable for its spectacular features. Ten years ago Mr. Rosenbluh, in co-operation with William Fox, entered the exchange business with their Greater New York Rental Company, on Fourteenth street.

At the height of its success came complications with the Motion Picture Patents Company, and there ensued a long controversy in the United States Courts. The Greater New York Film Rental Company won striking victory over the Patents Company.

Recently the Greater New York Film Rental Company was sold.

Mr. Rosenbluh has looked carefully over the film men manufacturing market for the organization which he believed was producing the class and type of pictures that the exhibitor demands. He found a haven in Standard Pictures under the banner of Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Rosenbluh describes the situation as follows:

"Not until I viewed the first Standard picture on the screen did I decide that I had found films that were worth my conscientious recommendation, and which would retain for me the confidence which my customers have always had in any product I recommended to them. Apart from that as a pure proposition of dollars and cents, Standard pictures are the first proposition I saw that merited unquestionably the effort that I intend to put into them."

Mr. Rosenbluh is now busy with his staff, getting into shape a home befitting his high opinion of Standard Pictures. These quarters will occupy the seventh floor of 130 West Forty-sixth street.

N. Y. Run of Italian War Films Must End

The run of the Italian War Films at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, will end with the Saturday performances. This is necessary owing to the demand for theatre room on Broadway. It is said as many as three attractions are now pressing for each Broadway house.

"The Italian Battlefront," it is said, has broken all records, except that made by "The Birth of a Nation." It was desired to continue the run. Jos. M. Gaites, representing William Moore Patch, under whose direction the American tour of these pictures is being conducted, offered inducements said to have been unprecedented.

Annette Kellermann Raises $4,000 for Charity

Annette Kellermann gave a four-minute exhibition at the Bar Harbor (Me.) Swimming Club the other night and as a result $4,000 was raised by society for the Bar Harbor Hospital. Miss Kellermann and her company are at the society haven producing "Queen of the Sea" for William Fox.

Miss Susette Sturgis arranged the affair and every cottager in Bar Harbor was there.

After the swimming exhibition which was repeatedly applauded Miss Kellermann was given a reception on the lawn and a tea by Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee. Mrs. William Lawrence Green, wife of the president of the club, and other prominent social leaders.

The boxes holding five persons sold for $50, while the reserved seats were disposed of for $5 each.

Some of those present were Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Pierce Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, and the Misses Mabel and Eleanor Satterlee; Gen. Horace Porter, formerly ambassador to France; the Danish Minister, Constantin Brun, and Thomas DeWitt Cuyler.

Fox Takes Whole Seventh to Get More Room

William Fox's film business has increased so enormously recently, owing to the demand for Standard Pictures and the Fox Special Features, released weekly, that it has been decided to increase office space.

The Fox Film Corporation, a few years ago, had a single floor at No. 130 West Forty-sixth street. It now has offices on five floors, and to this space is being added the entire seventh floor in the building.

Fire on the Night of August 23 Gutted the Providence, R. I., Studio of the Jaxon Film Corporation

Start Rebuilding Jaxon Studio Day After Fire

By a fire that started from undetermined causes at 3 a. m. on August 23, the extensive plant of the Jaxon Film Corporation, at Providence, R. I., was damaged to the extent of $65,000. By 2 p. m. Frank A. Tichenor, president of the company, had arrived on the scene from the New York office, and at 3 p. m. work was resumed at making pictures. On the second day following, Saturday, President Tichenor had ground broken for rebuilding.

The fire destroyed the main studio building at the plant but left the laboratory unscathed. The company is enabled to make shift to go along with its regular work from having an outdoor studio and a small indoor studio left. The work of making Sparkle Comedies and Jaxon Comedies for release through General Film Company will therefore not be interrupted. A serial which the company is producing will not be delayed much. However, considerable film which was being handled on Government contract was destroyed in the building which was burned, entailing a setback which will be costly. Arrangements have already been made to replace this film.

The new building which President Tichenor so promptly started is to cost $75,000. The company has also a studio at Jacksonville, which can be used if necessary.

Anna Mead Saves Mother's Life in Surf

Anna Mead, who is studying motion picture acting under Director Carroll Fleming, won the plaudits of a large crowd at Steeplechase Pier, Coney Island, the other day by rescuing her mother.

The mother had been holding to the ropes when fierce breakers, coming in rapidly, one after another, broke her hold. The woman could swim but little and soon went down. Shrieks of onlookers brought the girl, who dove several times and finally clutched her mother around the waist and by repeated plucky efforts got her to the surface, crying for help.

Morgan Mead, the father of the girl, managed to get to the place in time to complete the rescue, for the surf was too strong for the girl to have battled it alone carrying such a heavy weight. It took some moments' work to resuscitate the mother.

Fred Rath Called to Colors

EXHIBITOR SERVICE BUREAU

A department devoted to the problems of every theatre manager

Advertising Problems in the Small Town

Only Weekly Newspaper Available, But It Can Be Used with Good Results—Mailing List a Business Getter

"I HAVE one of two theatres in a town of 3,000 where the population is largely of the working class, with practically every one employed and prosperous. There is no paper published here except a weekly, although the papers from the neighboring big city, some eighty miles away, circulate here freely. I don't believe that ten per cent of the possible patrons read the country weekly and I do not see why I should advertise in it. My publicity now is practically confined to the lithographs that I post in front of my theatre and heralds that I use on special attractions. How can I get more publicity?—for I realize that I need it."

Here is an inquiry that will fit in with many a theatre through the country, hundreds of whom are faced with the same problem. Here is the theatre manager who is faced with the most serious problems of advertising, because he appears to lack the media for exploitation.

It is obvious that the manager cannot afford to advertise in the "big city" papers which sell only a few hundred copies in his town, for he would have to pay the same rate as the general advertiser, and the results would be in slight percentage to the expense.

We would advise this manager to use the weekly paper published in his section, because he will get some results from it. You should go to the publisher of the paper and say frankly to him that you do not believe that you will get a great deal of results from using his paper, but that you are willing to pay him at a rate based on the money the advertising brings into the box office. Suppose that he tells you that his paper has a circulation of 1,500 through the county. If you can reach these fifteen hundred people each week you have accomplished a great deal. Naturally, a considerable share of these will be people who are not motion picture fans and a percentage of these will be people who cannot reach your theatre.

The Automobile a Factor

But right in this connection it is well to bear in mind that the big growth of the use of the automobile is the biggest single contributing factor to the success of the moving picture show in the country town. The writer spent his vacation in the Tennessee mountains, twenty miles from the nearest town in which a moving picture show was located, yet experience showed that this theatre got nearly a third of its patronage from people who came distances of from four to twenty-five miles to see his pictures. And, mind you, they did not come these distances to see a particular advertised film, but simply to go to "a picture show," for they had no means of knowing what they were going to see. An advertisement each week in the county paper would probably have reached a considerable share of these.

You will find the editor of the country weekly probably willing to run quite a few stories for you free if you advertise with him. Take your copy of the NEWS, together with your advance press matter on various productions that you are to show, and each week write a half a column of short paragraphs about the players whom you feature at your theatre, about coming productions without trying to mention the name of your theatre in every line, and the editor will probably be glad to use this for you, especially after he finds that you are giving him the sort of matter that interests his readers.

It would be advisable to test this advertising. This could most easily be done by printing in your advertisement a coupon either good for free admission or half the admission price at your theatre. You might even get an agreement with the editor to base his rate to you on the number of coupons that are brought to your theatre. He might be willing to test the drawing power of his paper by this means.

Naturally you are going to have to advertise the program for a whole week. Don't advertise the show for the day in the paper that comes out that day, for a considerable part of the circulation is probably by mail and you will not get the results from it. Use the following day's bill and then the attractions for the six days following.

Work the Mailing List

But there are many other ways of advertising besides in newspapers, and these ways must be used when the daily newspaper is not available.

We have already mentioned the automobile. The wise theatre manager will immediately get the name and address of every person who comes to his house from a distance in a machine. This will form the most valuable sort of a mailing list—a list of people who want to buy your goods bad enough to come and look for them. These people should get your program and copies of special announcements that you send out.

This particular manager says that his is largely a manufacturing town. The first thing he should do would be to go to each one of the plants and get the name and

EXCHANGE MEN SEE GREAT VALUE IN THE EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU

MEN in the exchange field, those who are actually selling the pictures, are unanimous in realizing the importance of the EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU and promising their assistance toward making it a success. Here are a few quotations, picked up from a day's mail.

R. O. Proctor, manager of the Standard Film Corporation in Chicago, distributing Art Dramas in ten mid-western states, writes: "I am very much interested in this department and have issued instructions to my salesmen to forward any original ideas."

Edw. R. Craig, office manager of the Cincinnati branch of the Famous Players Film Service, says: "I wish to advise you that this department has already come to our notice and we believe that it is very good stuff. By getting in direct touch with the exhibitors you will be able to give them service of the greatest value."

A. I. Shapiro, manager of the Detroit branch of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, tells us: "This is something that the trade has needed very badly for a long while and I want to assure you of my most sincere co-operation."

Fred G. Sliter, manager of the Albany branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, declares: "I see no reason why this should not materially better business conditions and help to commercialize the motion picture business, a thing so sadly lacking in the past."

W. L. Hill, publicity director in the Chicago office of the Famous Players Film Service, says: "We are conducting a similar department in the work of this company and fully appreciate the benefits derived by the exhibitor through all efforts directed through this channel."

And there are many others who tell us they like the new SERVICE.

Getting Down to Brass Tacks

"HOW much should I spend for film rental?" "How much should I spend for advertising?"—or "Programme?"

Frankly this department cannot answer these questions in the abstract without knowing anything about the conditions that are confronting you—the size of your town, the appeal of your theatre, the sort of pictures that you are showing, the competition that you have.

This EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU is here to help you on your problems in a way that will bring you more money. We do not intend to hand you a lot of theories and let you experiment with them. Real SERVICE saves you from the experiments and gives you the practical ideas.

For instance, during the past week we had three letters from managers who wanted to issue programs for the first time and they asked how to go about it. They gave no facts, failed to outline their local conditions, and we promptly wrote them for these and when they arrive we will be in a position to answer.

It would have been very easy to design some idealistic programs for all three of these gentlemen, and the stenographer, instead of making carbon copies would have written all the suggestions out as "originals" and have mailed the three sets of the same programmes to the three exhibitors.

That's been the trouble. Some very good advertising expert has been content to sit in his New York office and devise a plan of advertising for you. Some of it has been wonderfully effective—if you have the big house in a big city. But the same specimens of advertising, in many cases, have gone out to the small town exhibitor in the same mail, with the same advice—and entirely different local conditions.

The EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU is not going to do this. We have told you that we want to stand in the position of doctor for your business. And what would you think of a physician who had a set of six or eight printed prescriptions filled and then, in his mind, classified the disease that he thought you ought to have and handed you one of his eight printed prescriptions. If you were sick, you wouldn't take the trouble to carry the prescription to your druggist. You would go to see a REAL DOCTOR.

Facts—Not Hot Air

ANYBODY can hand you the bunk. It seems that it ought to be about time for the motion picture industry to stop listening to the LOUD VOICE and come down to BRASS TACKS.

Now back to the comparison with the doctor. The chances are that the doctor who did business with the printed prescription system was aiming to secure the sale of certain brands of medicine. There was something behind his advice—something else for you to pay for.

There is nothing of that sort here—nothing for you to pay for. The one object of this bureau is to benefit the business. The exhibitor is the foundation rock. Unless the exhibitor is prosperous, the rest of the industry can have only a mushroom existence. That's the only secret behind this SERVICE.

But back to the doctor again.

Are you familiar with the sort of modern physician who appeals to the near-ill—who prescribes for his patients pleasant medicines, trips to Florida and the like? He is the sort of a doctor who wants to humor the whims of his patients, to keep them on his list of clients. But there, still that "old-fashioned" sort of a doctor that'll send you to bed in summer time under hot blankets and will give you medicine that makes you twist your face into a nightmare. It's darned unpleasant, but he cures you.

The truth is sometimes bitter, but it's a whole lot more helpful than a bunch of sugar-coated vanity pills.

High Voltage Ideas

WE really want to know what you are doing. Don't say to your self that you are simply one of the "general run" of exhibitors and that your activities will not be of interest. Don't class yourself with the MOB. The man who is succeeding in the motion picture business and any other business today is the man who thinks.

For years the farmers have used the ordinary barbed wire fence. Cattle often tear it down and pigs root through. But wire fences are today being used in this country to prevent the escape of the most dangerous sort of prisoners here and abroad—enemy soldiers, sailors and citizens. These are wire fences, but the fences are charged with electric current. They are LIVE WIRE fences.

Don't be a barbed wire exhibitor, staying in the rut, depending on well worked principles. Let us help you be a LIVE WIRE.

And you that are already charged up with ideas, you exhibitors from whom there radiates the current of the industry, let us hear from you about what you are doing.

Possibly you may see some statement in this department with which you do not agree—which experience has proven to you to be unprofitable. Let us hear about it. If we are wrong, we want to know it.

Send us specimens of what you are doing, copies of your programmes, your heralds, your newspaper advertising. Tell us of the ideas that you are using to bring you benefits, of ticket selling plans, benefit performances, special appeals you are making. Let us see the specimens of YOUR ELECTRICITY.

This department is wider than a merely advertising bureau. It is the place for you to air your opinions and to register your complaints. If you don't kick, nobody is going to do it for you. If you don't get out in the open and tell your troubles, no one is going to join in the fight simply because the fighting is good. There is a whole lot of demand right now for the various fighting nations to tell their "war aims." Let's have yours.

We believe that the exhibitors of the country are studying these pages and that they will profit. Most of the articles are based on inquiries that we receive, fundamental problems that are confronting a great share of the exhibitors. But don't be content to read the articles and lay the magazine away. Sit down and write us your opinions, your troubles, your ideas.

Let's cut out so much of this talk about "building up the profession."

Instead of that get out the trowel and begin to LAY BRICK.

Triangle Asks Exhibitor Criticism

Special Bureau to Be Started to Find Out What Is the Matter with Pictures and the Desires of the Public

TRIANGLE want the exhibitors to tell them what sort of pictures they want, what is the matter with the films that are supplied, what future releases can appeal more strongly to the public.

H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation announces that he is going to establish a special bureau to invite criticism. He holds that standardizing, a consistently high quality in pictures, is the only solution of the short run and long run problem.

Declaring that he is not in sympathy with combinations to compel a man to exhibit the pictures beyond their box-office usefulness, he announces that hereafter the three corners of Triangle will be producer, exhibitor and public.

"The short and long run controversy is the perennially blooming subject of conversation in the motion picture business," says Mr. Davis, and many theoretical solutions of the problem have been advanced, but there is only one way to keep a production on the screen for a longer period than is now ordinarily alotted, and that is to make it so compellingly good that those who see it will want to see it again, and their interest will stimulate a desire on the part of their friends also to enjoy it.

"Schemes have been formulated to make exhibitors takes pictures for a stipulated period, but never has anyone guaranteed to the exhibitor that the picture will be patronized during the time he has it, or that it will be profitable for him to show. The exhibitor has been taking all the chances, and when experience has taught him that his confidence has been misplaced, he is forced to bear the loss alone. When exhibitors discover that certain productions are of such a consistently high standard that they automatically create a demand for themselves, the short and long run problem will have been solved for all parties concerned.

"The Triangle Film Corporation immediately will organize an exhibitors' service department at the Culver City studio, which will be maintained solely for the purpose of studying exhibiting conditions and co-operating with exhibitors from the studio end. The individual and community needs of the exhibitors will be investigated from every viewpoint, and sincere effort will be made to determine the most satisfying kind of pictures and the methods of production that will best please exhibitor and public alike.

"Right now I want to take occasion to appeal to every exhibitor in the country to communicate their needs, suggestions and complaints to me at the Triangle Culver City, California, studio, and I will see that they are given immediate attention by this department. We do not expect to satisfy or please every exhibitor, but our efforts will be directed toward securing the best results obtainable for the majority.

Paramount Enlarges Exhibitor Service

With the beginning of Paramount's new Star Series booking policy, that organization announces that its Exhibitors Service Department for Paramount Pictures and Artcraft Pictures is now at the service of all exhibitors.

Paramount takes the attitude that the motion picture has not fulfilled its complete function until it is shown to the public; Paramount has, in the course of five years, spent nearly $3,000,000 in national exploitation and advertising.

The service extended through the exhibitors' service department is to further perfect this exploitation. Letters have been sent to every Paramount exhibitor calling attention to the advertisements in the current magazine issues. Colored slides have been sent to all exhibitors announcing the early presentation of all the new Paramount and Artcraft productions together with slides showing likenesses of all the Paramount and Artcraft stars.

Following this, Paramount calls the attention of the exhibitor to its press book, newly enlarged and expanded into a complete synopsis of all the details of each picture together with a display of those things necessary for the proper exploitation of the picture by the exhibitor. These include newspaper cuts of the star of the picture, biographical matter concerning the star, director and cast, suggestions for circular letters and post cards, suggestions for attractive lobby displays, a synopsis of the story, the cast and personality stories, advertising cuts and advertising copy, an outline of lithograph matter, and press notices on every particular of star and of play.

"Paramount Progress," for two years and a half the Paramount publication which served as a text book for Paramount exhibitors throughout the country, has also been expanded.

The first edition of "Artcraft Advance," a new publication of the same character as "Paramount Progress," has already gone out to all Artcraft exhibitors.

Uses Babies as Tickets at "Skinner's Baby"

Manager Grauam of the Strand theatre, San Francisco, used babies as admission tickets during the presentation of "Skinner's Baby," but he kept many of the "tickets" from disturbing the audiences by providing attendants and a nursery in the basement, where the "admission cards" of great lung power were taken.

Mothers with babies were admitted free at the matinee performances and the front of the theatre and neighboring stores were lined with baby carriages every day. Mr. Grauman figures that he gained enough in advertising from the stunt, even if it may have discouraged others from attending the matinee performances.

Shea's Celebrates End of Third Year

On August 26 Shea's Hippodrome was three years old. Manager Harold B. Franklin did not celebrate this by any lavish display, but kept the ideals of his house in view by sending to his patrons an artistically printed and illustrated folder calling attention to the past policies of the house and that "it has established itself supreme in the field of motion picture presentation." No claims are made for the future, except that the same policies are pursued. One page of the folder is devoted to the names of some of the producers and stars whose work is to be seen at Shea's during the fourth year.

Wallace Reid in Stirring War Drama, "The Hostage"—Love, War and Romance

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

Wallace Reid, one of Paramount's cleverest screen actors, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in a late production entitled "The Hostage." This is a stirring war drama, Mr. Reid presenting the part of a young lieutenant. The story was written by Beulah Marie Dix who is responsible for many of Paramount's most successful screen dramas. As a lieutenant in the army of the Lowlanders, Mr. Reid is given as a hostage by his father to insure the good behavior of the army in its retreat from the territory of the Highlanders. In depicting the scenes of this trouble, the director has reproduced faithfully some of the most striking incidents of the war. Through it all runs a love story and the intensely dramatic incidents in the war element of the story combined with the lighter vein of love and romance, gives to the screen a most interesting subject. The young lieutenant falls in love with a beautiful young girl who is the daughter of the chief of the Highlanders. But the way to the young girl's heart is not easy and before he wins her he meets with thrilling experiences because of his defiance of all known rules governing hostages of war and as a result he is sentenced to be shot. He is saved only by the declaration of peace between the two factions.

"The Hostage" is a story that will appeal to all classes and one that will be thoroughly enjoyed by each and everyone who sees it at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Taylor Holmes in Uproarious Comedy-Drama, "Edgar's Courtship"—Laugh-a-Minute

(K.E.S.E. Five Reel Production)

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" from the story by Clarence Budington Kelland, with Taylor Holmes, the famous stage star and vaudeville entertainer, will be the attraction at the ——— Theatre ——— week. Mr. Holmes in comedy-drama makes possible a laugh every minute of the sixty-five it takes to run this offering from the Essanay studios. This is Mr. Holmes' first appearance under the Essanay banner and he proves that he is as entertaining on the screen as he has been on the stage. He presents the role of Edgar Bumpus. Virginia Valli has the leading feminine role. Ernest Maupin and Rodney LaRock are in support. Edgar wins success in business—why not in love? Edgar Bumpus, a rising young man, applies this reasoning to his courtship of Mary Pierce. He first eliminates Wimple, his closest competitor, who plays a guitar, by learning to play saxaphone, which makes louder music; and by sending Mary flowers and candy each time Wimple calls on her. The plan works O. K. until the saxaphone disturbs Mr. Pierce's slumbers. He and Edgar clash and the latter is forbidden to visit Mary any more. Edgar immediately employs a clipping bureau to send news items to Mr. Pierce which tell of the troubles young girls get into when their fathers refuse to let them have beaux! One eloped with a milkman; another disappeared. This has no effect upon Mr. Pierce however, except to make him hate Edgar mor; howvr the youth's persistence finally wins Mary's love. Then Edgar plays his trump card. He gets Mary to sign a legal agreement to forfeit $10,000 to him, unless she marries him. The two then confront Mr. Pierce with this document. Rather than lose the money, he consents to lose his daughter, the only stipulation being that Edgar will throw away his saxaphone. It's a "scream" —you don't want to miss it.

Louise Glaum Presents Vampire Part in "Idolaters"—Strong Supporting Cast

(Triangle Five Reel Production)

"Idolaters" is the title of the five part drama from the Triangle studios, in which Louise Glaum will be seen at her next appearance on the screen of the ——— theatre. The story and scenario are by John Lynch and Monte Katterjohn, both well known scenario writers for the Triangle stock. "Idolaters" presents one of the best dramas in which Miss Glaum has been seen. This star of the Triangle stock has attained her place among the best actresses before the camera by virtue of true artistic ability. She is always seen to advantage and is always the exemplification of the part she presents whether it be the cowgirl of the Western Plains, the girl of the dance hall or the attractive vampire whom men idolize and women hate. In this late offering she presents the part of Viola Stratmore. By accident Viola meets Anita Carew at the station in Chicago. These two girls are of opposite dispositions and both are beautiful. Viola is the kind that all men notice and everyone talks about. Anita is of the kind that is reserved and bent upon doing something worthwhile, not wishing merely to flit through life on the wings of fickle fortune. The two girls leave Chicago for New York on an equal footing, both determined to have their names emblazoned on Broadway in electric lights. Arriving in New York the two girls separate. Later they chance to meet. Viola has become a favorite actress and Anita who has come within reach of stardom behind the footlights, had married a playwright whose ability was measured by his own opinion of himself. He completed a play in which Viola was to be starred, the financial backing being furnished by a sensual old man of wealth. Ralston, Anita's husband and playwright becomes infatuated with Viola and neglects his wife Which of the girls wins the bigger success? Come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Louise Glaum and a strong supporting cast will answer the question in "Idolaters".

Jack Gardner and Ruth King in Western Drama, "Men of the Desert"—Gripping

(K.E.S.E. Five Reel Production)

Jack Gardner and Ruth King will be seen on the screen of the ——— in one of their Western dramas, "Men of the Desert". Mr. Gardner and Miss King are both artists in portraying characters of the Western Plains. They have been seen to advantage in several dramas telling of life on the Plains and have always pleased those who have seen them at the ——— theatre. This late one is typical of the West and Miss King is given every opportunity of showing what a clever horsewoman she is. Some of the most sanguinary feuds in the history of our country have been fought out, not in the mountains of the South but on the deserts of the great West, where cattlemen and sheepmen often dealt out death to each other with the aid of their old friends, Winchester and Colt. Such a feud is in progress between the men of the desert when Jack, (Jack Gardner), a nomadic cowboy wanders into the scene. He is outspoken against the outlawry and the sheriff, in jest, hands him his badge and asks him if he can do any better. Jack accepts the challenge and arrests one of the most recent slayers. The latter's companions immediately storm the jail and rescue him. In the fight Jack is desperately wounded. May, (Ruth King), a girl of the ranch, finds the cowboy half dead and hides him in a isolated hut while she nurses him back to health. The feudists discover Jack's hiding place and attack him. He and the girl escape, and while Jack holds a narrow canyon against his pursuers, the girl dashes across the dsert inn search of aid. The girl saves Jack's life and she two are united for all time.

Presenting the part of the mother is Ruby La Fayette who was prominent on the speaking stage long before the motion picture was known. Ruby La Fayette is seventy-two years old and has been on the stage for half a cenutry. She tells the story of a mother's love for her son and what a mother will sacrifice for her children. She presents the part of Mrs. Standing who lives in a small country town with her son. When he graduates from college he comes home to spend a short vacation with her before going to the city to try for his fortune. He adores his mother and she lives for her son. He leaves for the city and from the start is successful. Everything he touches turns into money and in a short time he is wealthy. Five years pass and he has not gone home to see the mother who adores the ground her son trods. He has met a daughter of the rich whom he loves. He still loves and adores his mother but he forgets that she longs to see her son. The mother finally decides to surprise him and goes to the city arriving during an evening he is entertaining some of his fashionable friends. She is ushered into his richly furnished home and told to wait in the reception room. Her son is sent for and he is surprised to find that the old lady who was announced is his mother. He believes that his fiancee will be ashamed of his old mother so he introduces her as his former nurse. Afterwards, his mother having left during the night because she realized that her son did not want her, gave his life among the rich up, and went back to the old home to live the rest of his life with the mother whom he had denied. He meets Brunhilda, a charming young person, whose parents thinks her a jewel and so does Philander. fore the camera, will make right good entertainment. This is what happens in the Triangle production, "Ten of Diamonds," with Dorothy Dalton in the leading role. Miss Dalton, who is recognized as one of the best impersonators of "vampire" roles, on the screen, is introduced as a cabaret singer in a cheap restaurant in New York's famous Bowery district. Environment often has a decided effect upon human kind. A man is judged by the company he keeps, is a saying with a meaning attached. Paraphrasing this we might say that a woman's life is often changed radically by a change in companionship and environment. Miss Dalton as the cabaret girl on the lower East Side of New York meets with men of the Fifth avenue society. She has lived the life of the streets and cheap resorts, but she decides that she can pass as a Fifth avenue society belle and tries the experiment. If you see the "Ten of Diamonds" you will learn just how she accomplishes it. "Ten of Diamonds" is an intensely interesting drama, with Miss Dalton presenting a role well suited to her ability. She presents the part of the girl of the streets without giving her audiences the slightest provocation for taking offense at her interpretation of her role. There is a lesson taught which many can learn to advantage. Miss Dalton is supported by a cast of exceptionally clever screen artists, and is seen in one of her best screen dramas.

Dorothy Dalton, in "Ten of Diamonds," a Triangle production, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

(American-Mutual Five Reel Production)

Juliette Day, prominent on the legitimate stage, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in "The Rainbow Girl", written by Jere F. Looney and produced for the American Film Company under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon. The rainbow girl describes Miss Day better than a whole volume of paragraphs. She is the silver lining in the cloud and radiates sunshine wherever she goes. In "The Rainbow Girl" she is all smiles even when her dad comes home and reports that he has lost his job and is too old to get another. She smiles just the same and determines to make the best of it all. She has the part of Mary and when her dad makes the report of his failure, she quietly inserts an ad in the paper stating that she has an attic room to rent and in reply is met by a young fellow who likes her and she likes him. Their likes develop into love but each insist that they have another to whom they are engaged. Richard Warner is the name of the newcomer and he has found it pretty hard to dispose of his songs. He gets shabbier and shabbier and finally hungry. He even debates with himself as to the advisability of ending it all by means of gas. Mary has noticed his plight and takes one of his compositions and disposes of it at a nice figure and returning with the money is just in time to save Richard from ending it all. She brings him a plate of hot biscuits, a pot of tea and the money and Richard decides that life is worth living after all. He decides however that so long as Mary is engaged to another he will leave but when he announces his intentions. Mary confesses that he is the only one she loves. The two settle down to happiness ever afterwards. With Miss Day are George Fisher, Charles Bennett, Lillian Hayward, Louis Morrison, Emma Kluge and Marie Robertson, in the supporting cast.

Juliette Day, well known stage star will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Rainbow Girl".

Gail Kane in a Gripping Mystery Drama, "A Bride's Silence"—Mutual

Harold Lockwood in "Under Handicap," Millionaire's Adventures in the West

Anna Little is playing opposite Mr. Lockwood, presenting the part of Argyl Crawford, daughter of a ranch owner. Miss Little has been seen to advantage in some of the biggest successes on the screen. Repeating Comedy Pleases Matinee Late Comers

Many managers have been up against the problem of matinee performances. They have found that business did not justify their running pictures continuously through the afternoon and that with a fixed hour a portion of their patrons were late and missed part of the program.

Manager Charles Decker of the Majestic theatre, Grand Junction, Col., has solved this difficulty so far as he is concerned. He first runs the comedy, then the drama and repeats the comedy for the benefit of those who have come in late.

That exhibitor who takes advantage of the thing that is most important in the public mind is the exhibitor who is going to get the results. Just now patriotism is the dominant note through America, the criticism of the slacker and the world war problems.

Here is a "throw-away" that was put out by Fox's Comedy theatre, Brooklyn. This house is located in a section where practically all the patrons are of foreign birth and so, on the fold, the throw-away was addressed "Citizens! Aliens!"

Three productions were advertised. Not one of them had to do with the question of aliens in the war. Two of them had nothing in the world to do with the present war, except that the element of patriotism and honor ran through them. But the point is that the theatre manager brought the appeal of the pictures right up to the present moment—he put the punch in the picture.

Advertising in the Small Town

address of every employe. Here's another splendid mailing list—of people who are earning money and can afford to patronize your house. You can doubtless add to this list several hundred others from people you know, the merchants, doctors, etc.

With this combination you have an almost ideal mailing list. We would strongly advise this manager to issue a small, neat, inexpensive program, giving his attractions for the week. This should contain the names of the productions, the name of the star and a few snappy lines about each picture. Don't try to crowd the stories of the films and a lot of reading matter into the program. The matter can be confined to a four-page folder that will fit into an envelope and which can be mailed for one cent.

In addition to this when you have special attractions you should include a special herald or announcement on this along with the program. These heralds can be bought from your exchange or printed at a low cost, and there will be no additional postage unless you make them unnecessarily large.

Many exhibitors will object to this plan on the ground that they cannot afford it. But we believe that all exhibitors situated in towns such as described here and where conditions are similar will find this a splendid plan.

If your town is big enough to support two motion picture theatres, with neither of them advertising or doing anything to bring people to their theatres, it is plenty big enough to make real money for the one manager that keeps reaching out after new business and working the whole field.

Your popularity contests and side exhibitions are all well enough to interest the people that are already coming into your theatre, but it is doing nothing to get new patronage. And that is the very thing that the small town exhibitor needs to aim at, especially as there are few avenues of amusement open for the general public.

Don't wait for the boys and girls of the town to walk down in front of your theatre to see what you are showing. Let them know about it in advance, and let not only these know about your bill, but every one of your possible patrons—the people who are coming from a distance in automobiles and those who are on the payrolls of your factories at a few dollars a week.

Georgian Uses Mirrors in Soda Fountains

Robert H. Hightower, manager of the Crystal theatre, Dublin, Ga., is finding a successful small city idea in using the mirrors of soda fountains for announcing his productions. He has a man who paints the announcements on the mirrors, and there is no better form of advertising if you can secure the permission of the owners. However, he is exceedingly fortunate in getting the permission, which would not be granted everywhere.

Soda fountains are the chief gathering places in the smaller communities, and where men and women gather to talk is always a good place to advertise.

Personality Clubs Strongly Urged by Triangle

Organization of Parties to Attend Theatre in a Body Helps Sell Large Blocks of Seats and Works for Permanent Popularity of the Theatre

The following article has been prepared by the editor of Triangle Magazine for distribution among the service men of the various exchanges:

In the campaign for better business, the theatre manager soon learns that while it is important to spend great effort in trying to promote sales, it is a waste of good energy if the returns are so small that they do not equal the value of the worker's time.

So it comes about that the theatre manager thinks in terms not of individual seats, but of whole blocks of seats. There are many ways to promote the selling of many seats through publicity; and publicity campaigns are important. But there are other means by which the same end may be reached directly; and the manager is passing up a big opportunity if he ignores them. By these means we mean organization of parties to attend the given theatre in a body.

First of all, there are special clubs that are built up through the mailing list. A long time ago Triangle strongly recommended this sort of work, and indicated clearly how it might be done. In the first place, the exhibitor was reminded that certain of his patrons preferred some players to others. If he could isolate these patrons from the rest, he would be able to make a special appeal to them when the favorites came along again in a new play.

The way in which the members of the group are to be found out is to encourage the persons composing the audience to express their preferences on slips distributed among them, to be filled out with their names and addresses. A card index of these names may be kept then in the manager's office for ready reference. They should be kept in groups, each group known by the name of the favorite player. In this way it will be easy to notify the patrons as the plays come along.

This plan has the great merit of bringing the manager in personal contact with the patron through correspondence, a condition which stimulates the loyalty of the patron to the theatre, and which encourages that best of all advertising, the word-of-mouth recommendation of plays.

Some of the theatres in large cities employ men and women to do nothing else but get theatre parties together, working for the managers on commission basis. These special representatives are usually persons of some social acquaintance, being able to reach people of means who are likely to give parties of the kind; and in some cases they are vested with authority to sell seats en bloc at something below the usual box office scale. This plan of reduced rates, however, is not one to be encouraged. There are enough advantages in having an entire section of the theatre reserved, to make the proposition at regular rates, entirely attractive.

This arrangement is subject to wide variations, and is never particularly dependable. Still, if the representative works far enough ahead on the schedule so as not to interfere with the regular business by tying up gangs of seats, it may be resorted to with profit, and certainly no loss if it does not work, because the agent is doing his or her part on a commission basis.

There is still another way of handling this business that is rather more dependable, because it depends less on whims and caprices. It is going after the conventions that come to town, the regular resident clubs, the hotels, the chamber of commerce, and the board of trade.

In mentioning the two last-named institutions, one has in mind the fact that a theatre is always an adjunct to be mentioned with more or less pride by civic pride associations. If a town has a theatre, however poor it may be, the implication exists that the town is thriving. But it is up to the theatre manager in many cases, to call the attention of the boards to this fact, for, in press of other work, promoting the town canning factory or the knitting mill, they are apt to overlook it.

Uses Combination Ticket to Raise Prices

F. E. Osborne, manager of the Star theatre, Kitchener, Ont., believes that he has solved the question of raising the price of admission without losing patronage, temporarily, at least. He found with the first use of the plan that he actually increased the gross receipts and avoided the greater part of the complaints that he had experienced with higher prices.

When Mr. Osborne booked "Womanhood, the Glory of a Nation," for three days he planned to charge 50 cents admission. Following this he had excellent attractions for the next six days, including Pauline Frederick and Clara Kimball Young features, and finally George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones." The usual admission price of the Star had been 15 cents, but he planned to increase the price of the two other bills to 25 cents each.

He accomplished this by the novel method of issuing a single ticket good for the three attractions, and covering a period of nine days. The result was that on the three attractions he gained a nickel from his former price and then got a considerable share at his higher prices. In other words the coupon "broke the ice" for the raise, for the fellow who only came along to see "Broadway Jones" and had to pay a quarter, had no basis for a complaint when he was shown the bargain prices that he could have obtained for all three bills.

Vitagraph Notifies of Billboard Campaign

Vitagraph is mailing to the exhibitors a post card reproducing the 24-sheet that will be posted in every city in the country of over 10,000 population in its great campaign for "The Fighting Trail," the new serial in which William Duncan is starred.

The same postcard announces that in cities of less than 10,000 Vitagraph will give the stands provided that the exhibitors do the posting.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Evan Evans to Have Charge of Red Cross Pageant

The American Red Cross Bureau of Motion Pictures, of which Evan Evans is the director, has been placed in direct charge of the forthcoming pageant by Henry P. Davison, head of the Red Cross War Council.

The pageant, which is expected to be one of the most splendid and stupendous spectacles ever produced in this country, will be staged in the beautiful open-air theatre on Rosemary Farm, the estate of Roland R. Conklin, at Huntington, L. I., Friday afternoon, October 5.

Prominent society and stage people are giving their services to the Red Cross in this connection, and the performers in the pageant will represent the leading families of New York and Long Island as well as the principal stars of the speaking and silent stages.

In line with the general policy of the Red Cross to have volunteer workers for the cause, Mr. Evans has organized a volunteer publicity committee for the pageant composed of newspaper and publicity men who have gladly consented to give their time to this work.

The office of the committee is at 71 West Twenty-third street, room 1702, and the telephone number is Gramercy—2544.

Helen Holmes' latest Mutual-Signal fifteen-chapter photonovel, "The Lost Express," the first chapter of which will be released on September 17, is said to be a thrilling adventure drama.

The story, which was written by Frederick B. Bennett, is based on the amazing disappearance of an express train between way stations. The new photonovel has been directed by John P. McGowan, who has directed most of Miss Holmes' plays.

Included in the cast are Leo D. Maloney, Thomas Lingham, William Brunton, Edward Hearn, Al. J. Smith, Andrew Waldron, V. O. Whitehead, S. A. Sues, R. V. Phelan, Clyde Roe, William Behrens, Charles U. Wells and Lauren Maxam.

Hart and His "Fritz" in "The Narrow Trail"

William S. Hart's initial Ince production to be released by Artcraft Pictures, in October, is now rapidly nearing completion at the Lasky Studio in California.

The photoplay, "The Narrow Trail," offers a dramatic western story involving the life of a bandit and his great love for his beautiful pinto, the fastest horse in the community. Appearing opposite the star with almost human intelligence is "Fritz," Hart's famous horse. The story allows for a heart appeal, which is effectively brought out by the actor and his pony.

"Fall of the Romanoffs" Marvel in Fidelity

Julian Johnson, Well-Known as Critic, Writes of Wonderful Characterizations of Living Russians in Brenon Production

By Julian Johnson

NO motion picture ever made shows characters so remarkable as those who are chiefly concerned in Herbert Brenon's great crystallization of recent history, "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

These characters had to be remarkable because each is a personification of a living man or woman whose features and deportment as well as occupation and morals, are familiar around the world.

Of the Russian personages, and others, all are living save one, and his death is so recent that it is still an event of genuine news interest.

In the momentous affairs of Russia no man has had so close a view into all the departments of government and revolt as

Brenon and Iliodor
("Fall of the Romanoffs")

the distinguished Iliodor; the former confidant of Rasputin, and one who, resolutely challenging the gross immorality and Teuton-tinged despotism of the imperial court, was obliged to flee to America for the preservation not only of his records, his writings and his occupation, but life itself. Iliodor plays himself in every one of the stirring scenes in which he really took part, and re-enacts them magnificently.

The entire list of available actors in New York and country at large was gone over for a man who would be physically and mentally suited to play Rasputin, the Siberian peasant who gained complete ascendency over the Czar's family, and ruled Russia in a combination of horrible despotism and sensuality unrivalled since the days of Catherine the Great. Mr. Brenon decided upon Edward Connelly. When Mr. Connelly walked upon the first scene in the smock, high boots and silky beard of the moujik-hypnotist the whole company gasped, he actually seemed to be Rasputin. His enactment of the character throughout more than two hundred tremendous scenes has added a permanent portrait to the gallery of great photoplay achievements.

Equally deserving permanence is the truly great study of Czar Nicholas II by Alfred Hichman. No replica of any public man in the whole range of camera accomplishment has ever surpassed Mr. Hichman's Nicholas, and less than half a dozen have equalled him.

The Czarina is a much less familiar figure, but she lives again in the person of Nance O'Neill, whose preparations for the character were simply colossal. Miss O'Neill estimates that she read not less than thirty volumes relating to Russian life, court customs, dress, the personalities of the Romanoffs, traditions, superstitions, royal occupations, recreations and the society of Petrograd.

Mll. Ekaterina Galanta has the role of Anna, the Gypsy sweetheart of Rasputin. Pauline Curley's performance of Princess Irene, the flower of the court, will be long remembered, as will Peggy Bett's rendition of Mme. Virabova, a veritable figure now immured within the cold, wet walls of St. Peter and St. Paul, the fortress-prison of the Neva.

Mr. Brenon selected William E. Shay for the difficult role of Theofan, Archbishop of the Greek Church; Conway Tearle, perhaps the most distinguished revolution-leading man of his type in this country, plays Prince Felix, the revolutionary noble, with grace, fire and irony.

Two further characterizations are absolute historic facsimiles—the Grand Duke Nicholas, hero of the Caucasus, portrayed by Charles Craig, and Baron Fredericks, the reactionary minister of the interior, by R. Payton Gibbs.

First Goldwyn Showing in East at Sing Sing

Oddly enough the initial showing in the East of the Goldwyn picture, "Polly of the Circus," was at Sing Sing prison, as a favor to the Mutual Welfare League.

Mae Marsh, the star; Margaret Mayo, the author, and officials of the Goldwyn Corporation were present. Chairman Meagher of the League, writing to President Goldfish, said:

"The men have read so much about Goldwyn pictures recently, they are continually asking me if I cannot arrange a projection of one of your features."

Bluebird Stars to Shine Six Times a Year

Eight Weeks Between Twinkles for Each of Them—Four Extra Features to Fill Out the Annual Program—Dates

BLUEBIRD'S new idea, announced this week, is to present eight stars, on definite dates in rotation. Each star will therefore appear on the program every eight weeks, or six times a year. This leaves four weeks to be filled by extra features up to the Bluebird standard.

For instance, Mae Murray, the newest Bluebird star, will be introduced to the series early in November, probably November 5, and eight weeks later she will appear again on the program, continuing thus every eight weeks thereafter.

This same principle will be applied to the presence of every star in Bluebird's constellation—Carmel Myers, another addition to the list; Dorothy Phillips, Violet Mersereau, Franklyn Farnum, Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford, Brownie Vernon and Herbert Rawlinson.

October 1 Ella Hall will present "The Spotted Lily," a feature previously referred to as "Bitter Sweet." J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton fixed it up for the screen, and Harry Solter directed Miss Hall for the first time. Charles Hill Mailes, Gretchen Lederer and Jack Nelson will be principals in support of Bluebird's juvenile star.

October 8 brings Franklyn Farnum in "The Maverick," directed by Joseph De Grasse, to make his first lone-star appearance. Hitherto Mr. Farnum has shared stellar honors with Brownie Vernon, but hereafter he will go it alone among Bluebirders. Director De Grasse brought Lon Chaney and Claire Du Brey from the Dorothy Phillips company he has all along directed, and they will be featured in Mr. Farnum's support. Isola Forrester and Mann Page furnished the story.

October 15 Dorothy Phillips will present "Bondage," with William Stowell as her leading man. Gretchen Lederer and Gertrude Aster will also have prominent supporting roles. Ida May Park, who will produce all Dorothy Phillips' Bluebirds hereafter, prepared for the screen a story suggested by Edna Kenton and directed Miss Phillips in an intensely dramatic offering.

October 22 brings Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford to star in "The Desire of the Moth," with Monroe Salisbury appearing as Miss Clifford's new leading man. The story originated with Eugene M. Rhodes, Elliott J. Clawson prepared the scenario and Mr. Julian directed. It is Bluebird's purpose, by the way, to make a special feature of "Rupert Julion Productions" hereafter.

October 29 brings Violet Mersereau back to the screen in "The Girl by the Roadside," based on Varick Vanardy's novel of the same title, prepared for the screen by John C. Brownell, and directed by Theodore Marston, to complete a month of exceptionally attractive offerings.

Dual Role for Eltinge in "The Countess Charming"

"The Countess Charming," in which Julian Eltinge will be starred in a dual role suited to his impersonations, was written by Gelett Burgess and Carolyn Wells and prepared for the screen by Gardner Hunting. Donald Crisp is the director.

The plot surrounds the effort of two society leaders to oust a young college man from the social world where he has met Betty Lovering and fallen in love with her. He promises her a large Red Cross donation but the difficulty with the society pair makes this a hard task. So Saunders Julian, the college youth, masquerades as a Russian countess, is accepted in society, collects donations wholesale, not always in a legitimate manner. Then, in a series of hilarious and exciting scenes, the story is carried to a rousing conclusion with the two young people mated, the double personality exposed.

A fine cast in support of Mr. Eltinge includes Florence Vidor, Edythe Chapman, Tully Marshall and others.

"Extras" Average Five Years of Age in Fox Kiddies

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, children who have leading roles in "Jack and the Beanstalk" have been cast in like roles in forthcoming releases of the Fox Kiddies Series. These are:

"Babes in the Wood," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "The Brownies," "Mikado," "Pinafore," "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" and "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland."

C. M. and S. A. Franklin, screen generals of the series, are selecting children five years and under for the photoplays. The average age of all the actors and actresses is about five years.

Triangle Officials Like Desmond in "Flying Colors"

William Desmond, Triangle star, is to be seen in "Flying Colors," as a Yale athlete, who put into practical use some of the gymnastic stunts which made him a star at university field meets.

The picture was shown to the officials of the Triangle Distributing Corporation in the New York projection room last week, and was pronounced the best Desmond play ever turned out at the Culver City studio.

In the cast supporting the star are: Golda Madien, Jack Livingston, Laura Sears, J. Barney Sherry, George W. Chase, John Lockney, Bert Offerd, Mary McIvor and Ray Jackson. The story was written by John Lynch and R. Cecil Smith, and produced under the direction of Frank Borzage.

Audrey Burelle to Be Directed by W. A. Sheer

William A. Sheer is planning to produce a picture play which will give Audrey Burelle a part to her advantage. Mr. Sheer, finding her in doubt whether to choose the screen or the legitimate stage, strongly advised her to stick to the silent drama.

The girl is said to screen well and to have an education suited to the motion picture art.

Combine Virtues and Reject Errors of Booking Modes!

Program System Held Most Logical, While Open Booking Has Many Faults—Star Selective System Has Many Good Points—Combining Virtues of All Would Aid All Around

BY NAT I. BROWN

ONE man says program booking is the only rational system on which to conduct a moving picture theatre.

Another man says the open booking plan is the only one to follow.

Another man says that the selective star series method only will assure success.

Another man says none of these are right; he can't state any other plan, but he is sure they are all wrong.

Why not seek the truth? Why be a wolf?

The truth is that each of these plans possess essentials of right, valuable if appreciated and properly applied. Why not combine the real benefits of all plans and profit by them?

The program system is unquestionably the most logical, for it furnishes substantial assurance of the basis of a strong bill and eliminates a very important element of doubt.

No sane man would build or lease a dramatic or vaudeville house without knowing where his attractions are coming from and the general merit of what he has to depend on to draw people to his theatre.

The manager of a dramatic house depends on the productions provided by his booking exchange; the vaudeville manager is in the same boat, with this difference—he can strengthen the bill he books of his regular exchange by putting on a star act, or "big headliner."

Advantages of Program System

The moving picture manager who books a program is in just the same position as the vaudeville man. He puts on a good program bill, but, being enterprising and desiring to give his patrons an entertainment they willl appreciate and talk about, he puts in a star feature film, secured either on the open-booking system or under the selective star series method.

What is the result? He has a well balanced bill and puts on a show that sends his patrons away with the opinion that he is a generous provider and is deserving of support.

The program will ever be the real foundation of moving picture exhibition, for it is certain in contract and of fixed charge. It enables an exhibitor to constantly secure the foundation of his bill under such conditions, and at such price, as will enable him to figure with some degree of certainty just what his operating charges are going to be on the week and to what expense he can reasonably go to provide special star attractions.

Open Booking a Gamble

The open booking system appeals strongly to the man who has not experienced its uncertainties. He thinks, at first blush, that he can be a real "picture picker"; display not a little discrimination and make a big record for selecting the best productions made.

From the moment he enters into this proposition he goes back to the days, practically, when theatrical business was transacted on the curbstones in front of the old Morton House, at Broadway and Union Square. He abandons system, safety and certainty and enters into a "catch-as-catch-can" contest with conditions of a most uncertain nature.

Open bookings (indiscriminate booking of pictures of various makes and subjects), will never prove successful or satisfactory to the manager of a moving picture theatre, for he has nothing to gain by it as a system except an advance in rentals.

Waste of Valuable Time

Because of lack of responsibility behind most open booking features—a program name carries responsibility which must be met in quality—a manager depending on the open booking system for success will be forced to see run a large part of what he books.

Imagine what that means! He will spend much of his time in a projection room selecting what he may desire to play, whereas, under a program booking contract, he knows he will not get good pictures, for the program cannot afford to kill itself by putting out bad pictures.

Many fine pictures get on the market through open booking channels. They cannot be disregarded, and here is where the wise booking manager will avail himself of conditions favorable to him in the open-booking system and use them to his advantage. Combinations of the valuable parts of the open booking system with the program system, wisely made through the selection of big features offered in open market, brings together two elements which are important to a well-balanced moving picture theatre management.

Star Selective Method Good

The arugument for the star series selective method is also a strong one. On the one hand the producer is proceeding on that certainty which comes from knowing just what his market is and what he can get for his pictures. On the other hand, the exhibitor can secure a series of pictures of a star most popular with his patrons, under such conditions, and at such cost, that he is enabled to so figure his other bookings that he can "cut his coat according to his cloth."

The selective star series method is really a step forward. The history of the theatre, in this respect, is being repeated in the moving picture. Competitive production and public demand means constantly bigger and better things; and these can only be provided on such a basis as the selective star series method of booking makes possible.

Why Not Combine Best Methods?

So, instead of the adherents of any one of these systems getting out in the open and shrieking his views with the vehemence of an intolerant frantic, he would far better study in what way the other fellow's idea may hook up with his.

"Why be a wolf?"

That's one of the great troubles with this business—this habit of seeing where the other fellow may walk a little lame, and then the whole pack jumping on him.

Rex Beach Stories Slip Easily Into Film

Goldwyn Says They Are Readily Adapted to Photoplay Because the Action Does Not Depend on the Dialogue

GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, which will release "The Auction Block" and all future productions made from the novels of Rex Beach, has discovered these books lend themselves remarkably to transference to film.

They do not, Goldwyn says, lose their action value in photography. The problem in Rex Beach productions is to compress the plethora of action into the limits of a seven-reel picture, not to pad out.

Mr. Beach, Benjamin B. Hampton, president of the Rex Beach Pictures Company, and others of his associates have departed from the accepted motion-picture procedure in subordinating the players to the story. In the words of the author, the story is to be the star of all Beach productions released through Goldwyn.

This does not mean, Goldwyn explains, that well-known and capable players will not be seen in the pictures. In "The Auction Block" the leading feminine role is in the hands of Rubye De Remer, for several years with the Ziegfeld shows. Tom Powers, who was in "Mr. Lazarus" and "Mile-a-Minute-Kendall" has the principal man's role. Florence Deshon, formerly in the Belasco production of "Seven Chances," also has a part.

Years ago, when two-reel motion pictures were an experiment and five and seven reel features were unheard of, the head of a producing firm approached Rex Beach with a proposition to put several of his novels into two-reel pictures. Though the proposition was attractive, Mr. Beach shook his head.

"I realized," he says, in discussing the subject, "that the motion-picture industry was bound to expand and carry with it the stories that could only have been sketched in two-reel form. I consistently turned down offers for the film rights to my novels because I believed I could afford to wait. The present-day development has proved the soundness of this theory."

As a consequence of his foresight Mr. Beach now holds the sole rights to all of the stories he has written and will continue to reserve them in future.

"The Phantom Shotgun" Is Mystery Aboard Ship

General Film produces as its fourth and current four-reel Falcon feature "The Phantom Shotgun." It proves that the strange shotgun is aboard ship. Several persons are wounded before a newspaper reporter, as a silent investigator, turns up the guilty man.

Stanley Clisby Arthur, magazine writer, wrote the story. The director of the photoplay is Harry Harvey, supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer, in the cast are Kathleen Kirkham, R. Henry Grey, Frank Brownlee, William Marshall, Gloria Payton, J. E. Nicholson, Barney Furey and Bruce Smith.

The next Falcon feature will be "His Unpolished Self" from the great play "Self's" by Horace Annesley Vachell. This is a George Loane Tucker production, and features Henry Ainley and Mary Dibley.

Department Stores After "Jack and the Beanstalk"

Department stores, particularly in Western cities, are bidding for the right to exploit the Fox kiddie feature, "Jack and the Beanstalk," because of the special appeal it makes to women and children.

One department store already has obtained the play for one week and shown the film at a downtown theatre, giving a free ticket to any purchaser of a dollar's worth of goods. The film was viewed by 30,000 persons during the week, it is said.

William Fox is gratified at the wider vogue this offers for this picture, and doubtless for others of his "Kiddie Features."

Work Begins on New Gladys Brockwell Picture

The new Gladys Brockwell feature, which is expected to be a noteworthy production, is now in the making at the Fox studio in Hollywood, California. Bertram Bracken, who recently returned to Fox, is the director.

Two places in the cast remain to be filled. Those already chosen for parts are: Marjorie Daw, Eugene Forde, Harry Lonsdale, Douglass Gerrard, Bertram Grassby, Edwin Cecil and Colin Chase.

With the exception of the star and of Grassby and Cecil, the faces will be new to the William Fox films. Eugenie Forde and Marjorie Daw are both famous on the shadow stage, and Miss Forde was well known for her performances in the legitimate before she came to the cinemas. She appeared for more than fifteen years with such footlight favorites as George Munroe, William Faversham and Chauncey Olcott.

Cast Chosen for Goldwyn's "The Cinderella Man"

The cast for "The Cinderella Man," Goldwyn play with Mae Marsh, has been selected by Adolph Klauber, casting director. Work upon Edward Childs Carpenter's story is already under way.

Tom Moore has been picked for the name part, Tony, "the Cinderella man." George Fawcett takes the part of Caner, and George Farren appears as Sewell. Alec B. Francis will be Romney. Others in support are Louis R. Grisel, Elizabeth Aaronson, Julia Coogan, Dean Raymond and Harry Scarborough.

Alma Rueben to be Starred in Coming Triangle Plays

Alma Rueben will henceforth be featured in Triangle plays, the first one selected for her being "The Firefly of Tough Luck," in which Walt Whitman, the veteran actor, will also have a leading part.

"The Firefly of Tough Luck" is a Western drama, most of the scenes being filmed on the Arizona deserts. E. Mason Hopper is the director.

Award Made in Vitagraph's Preparedness Essay Contest

Baltimore Man, Henry H. Bliss, Winner of $1,000 for Best Thesis—Presentation Made by Nat Stronge, Representing President Smith—21,000 Essays Submitted and Judged

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS, all in one-dollar bills, the prize offered for the best essay on "How America Should Prepare" in the contest run by President Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph in connection with its preparedness picture, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation, was presented Henry H. Bliss, 932 Calvert street, Baltimore, Md., last Tuesday.

Nat S. Stronge, publicity director for Vitagraph, representing President Smith, made the presentation on the stage of the New theatre, Baltimore. The winner is a widower who for years worked in the engineering department of the Pennsylvania Railroad. He has two sons in the aviation corps and recently moved to Baltimore to be near them.

21,000 Essays Submitted

The essay contest closed on July 4, but owing to the fact that more than 21,000 essays were submitted, from all parts of the world, the award committee was unable to make its decision until August 28, when the certified check for $1,000 was presented to Mr. Bliss at the New theatre in Baltimore.

The original committee selected to make the award consisted of President Albert E. Smith of Greater Vitagraph, Rear Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee, General Horatio C. King, Hudson Maxim, the munition expert, and Allan Hawley, president Aero Club of America.

When the work of the committee was finally taken up Rear Admiral Sigsbee was too busy to act, and General King was ill. The decision was left to the three other members of the committee.

After eliminating the essays to eleven, the members of the committee found it almost a hopeless task to make a final decision. After reading and re-reading the essays numerous times they did finally agree upon the essay of Mr. Bliss as being the best.

Many Other Good Essays

The names of the other ten persons whose essays the committee found so hard to eliminate are: Edwin Curran, 735 Moorehead avenue, Zanesville, Ohio; F. Valentine Zimber, 263 Palisade avenue, Hoboken, N. J.; N. D. Anderson, 810 North Payson street, Baltimore, Md.; H. M. Simpson, 603 West Front street, Findlay, Ohio; Cyril Lanckland Williams, 117 Bristol street, New Haven, Conn.; William P. Delaforce, 58 West Forty-seventh street, New York City; J. Wedgewood Drawbell, 90 Iona street Edinburg, Scotland; Miss Martha Browne, 1429 Holmes street, Kansas City, Mo.; Thurlow Weed Barnes, 315 West Ninety-seventh street, New York City; Richard Hoadley Tingley, 1413 Turks Head Building, Providence, R. I.

The essays submitted by these ten persons were of such excellence that the committee felt that they were entitled to something more than just an ordinary honorable mention.

Nat Stronge of Vitagraph Awarding $1,000 Prize for Preparedness Essay

Out of the 21,000 essays submitted the committee selected approximately 600 which should receive honorable mention.

The winning essay consisted of several thousand words, covering practically every phase of preparedness. Some of the most essential parts of the Bliss essay read as follows:

Portion of Winning Thesis

Effectual preparedness consists of a right mental attitude, plus the material resources, plus the vigorous and orderly employment of these resources. America's war problem, therefore, falls under three general heads—MENTAL ATTITUDE, MEN AND MEASURES.

Our first and imperative duty is a campaign of education as widespread as the Teutonic propaganda has been; for to be successful in this war America must be a solid nation.

"Educational Campaign Necessary"

That this campaign of education and publicity should be successful, I should suggest the establishment of a National Bureau of Education equipped to reach every individual in this country. The man problem is our next consideration. This does not mean arm-bearers especially, but applies to all the men of the Nation, because one of the most important factors in this crisis is the selection of the right men for the right places. Our President is the ideal commander—cool, capable and highly intelligent.

The organization of our resources should be in the hands of the Nation's captains of industry, for these men, great organizers and executives, have succeeded in making American industry preeminent in war.

Our chief consideration in assembling our resources is in using every man where he is most fit. As many fighting men as are needed will be obtained, but the same may not be true of artisans and workers generally. Of the women, girls and boys we need not worry, they will do their duty and do it well.

Money is the next thing. To win this war our money resources must be unlimited and the only way the Nation can finance itself is by appealing to the people. Provision should be made for raising the needed funds by taxing those who have money. This could be done either by a special inheritance tax, a tax on luxuries or a graduated tax on the net gains of all corporate and individual enterprises. In making these taxes, however, care should be taken to see that the taxed class does not hand the tax down to the poorer classes in the shape of increased prices. There should be a guard against speculation

New Sanborn Laboratory, Completely Equipped, Opens

THE new plant of the Sanborn Laboratories with a capacity of one million feet of positive prints per week, was opened at Culver City this week, and business of the firm has been transferred from their former location in East Los Angeles.

The opening of the new plant marks an additional success for L. F. Sanborn, who for two years has been at the head of this company. He first opened a small laboratory, and because of the exceptional results given patrons, the business was increased so rapidly that new equipment was found necessary and additional facilities added at frequent intervals. In the past the Sanborn organization which has P. H. Burke as treasurer and Clyde W. Slater, secretary, has devoted practically all its time to the development of negative and the making of sample prints, but in the future it is planned to make release prints for various producing companies on the West coast.

The new laboratories occupy a handsome building built especially for the needs. This is equipped with Bell and Howell automatic, and Freid Step printers; Simplex projection machines sold through the Pacific Amusement Supply Company; Bedill filtering plant with a capacity of 3,500 gallons per hour, and specially constructed tanks made by the Pacific Tank and Pipe Company. The temperature of the building is regulated thermostatically by the Johnston Service Company devices, installed under the supervision of their Los Angeles office. Private cutting rooms are maintained for directors who wish to edit their film at the plant, and there are two theatres for the showing of films. The laboratory proper is laid out on plans to conserve labor, the film being progressed so that the least amount of labor will be required. The drying rooms contain six drums ten feet in diameter and twelve feet in length, each with a capacity of 3,000 feet. The air of the building is filtered at the intake, and exhaust fans keep circulation at a maximum at all times throughout the day.

Sanborn Laboratories are at present doing the work of a number of well-known companies, including Rolin, Essanay, and have the assurance that within a few weeks they will be operating at capacity.

Call for Funds for Movie Ambulance Fund

"The Ambulance Fund of the Motion Picture Players," a branch of the Stage Women's War Relief, has issued a call for funds to purchase and maintain ambulances in France. The officers are Paula Blackton, chairman; Bess Meredith, vice-president; Anne Scott, manager, and Nancy Palmer, secretary, An office has been obtained at No. 1 West Sixty-seventh street.

All motion picture workers are being sent books with twenty tickets to be sold at five dollars each. Those who sell a book will have their names engraved on a brass plate on one of the ambulances. The call says:

"This will be your personal, silent message to America's fighting men in the trenches."

Among those who have already subscribed are: Anita Stewart, Madge Kennedy, Alice Brady, Dorothy Gish, Alice Joyce, Mabel Normand, and many others.

Josephine Sedgwick Elevated to Stardom by Triangle

Miss Josephine Sedgwick, who recently joined the Triangle Culver City Studio playing forces as a stock woman, has done such creditable work in the first production in which she appeared that she has been elevated to the rank of a leading woman and will play opposite Roy Stewart in the Western star's next picture.

In her new position Miss Sedgwick will be one of the youngest leading women enrolled under the Triangle banner.

Universal's "Earthquake" Destroys Studio "City"

An earthquake has swallowed up a city in the South Seas, this in producing "The Phantom Ship" serial at Universal City.

Four charges of powder and high explosive were first put under the walls and gateway of the "city" which had been erected at a cost of thousands. The first earthquake tremors were supposed to have been felt. Eight hundred "extras" as natives, rushed about in panic. Then the explosion came while six cameras took the flying rocks and timbers, Director Ford overseeing it all.

Next, twelve hundred pounds of explosives was sent up under a temple and archway, more substantial and expensive still. This explosive was in eight charges. It is said windows in buildings quarter of a mile away were shattered.

"Bab's Diary" to Be First of Series

For the five five-reel productions, starring Marguerite Clark, and adapted from the "Sub-Deb" stories in the Saturday Evening Post, by Mary Roberts Rinehart, the same cast will be used throughout, according to Hugh Ford.

The principal players in the "Bab" pictures are Marguerite Clark as Bab Archibald; Leonora Morgan as Jane; Nigel Barry as Carter Brooks; Richard Barthelmess as Tommy; Frank Losee and Isabel O'Madigan as Mr. and Mrs. Archibald; Helen Greene as Leila; Guy Coombes as Harry; and Jack O'Brien as Harold.

"Bab's Diary" will be the first released. It is a tale of an entirely delightful girl who resents the efforts to marry off her sister before she herself has grown up. She therefore invents a sweetheart with a name derived from fictitious sources. What is her consternation when he later appears in the flesh—at least someone with the same name.

Censors Laud Goldwyn Pictures They Review

Goldwyn pictures have won distinguished honor in the Bulletin of the National Board of Review, which departs from its usual custom to commend the productions. The board says of Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus."

"'Polly of the Circus' is one of the most remarkable productions we have ever seen. It is more than a moving picture—in fact, it is not a moving picture, but life itself transferred to the screen."

This is what the board says about Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine":

"A light, domestic comedy, delightfully acted in fine tempo. The comedy situations are particularly well adapted to the screen."

Maxine Elliott in "The Eternal Magdalene," by Robert McLaughlin, elicits the following praise:

"The sympathetic screen version of this touching drama takes hold of one's heart."

Well-Known Actress Supports Metro Star in "Nobody"

Florence Short, dramatic actress and artist's model, has been engaged for the part of Mrs. Standish in Metro's screen version of "Nobody," Louis Joseph Vance's novel, which has been adapted by Charles A. Taylor for the use of Emmy Wehlen.

Miss Short is intensely patriotic, and divides her time between patriotic duties and her work at the studios.

Automobile Audience for Annette Kellermann

The William Fox Company, with Annette Kellermann, filming "Queen of the Sea," at Bar Harbor, Me., is still a center of attraction to society visitors to the resort.

More than 200 automobiles of every make, from the lowly "flivver" to the high-power foreign car, park daily near the sandy stretch where the diving Venus and mermaids disport before the camera.

Forthcoming Triangles Present New Players

All Departments Have Been Augmented—Directors and Scenarioists Added—Negotiations Under Way to Obtain Services of Other Stars

MORE than twenty new players, scenario writers and directors have been added to the Triangle Culver City forces since the reorganization of the company, and it is reported that negotiations are now under way to obtain the services of several more stars and production experts.

Among the most important of those recently engaged is Richard Bret Harte, grandson of the famous writer. Mr. Harte will devote his time to preparing original stories for the screen.

Texas Guinan, whose engagement was officially announced last week, is already a favorite of the public by reason of her musical comedy success.

"The Devil Dodger," a forthcoming Western drama, will present Roy Stewart as gunfighter for the first time in the Triangle program. Stewart is master of all the tricks of horsemanship, it is said, having owned and operated a ranch in Mexico prior to the disturbances there some time ago.

Belle Bennet is another "find" for whom a wide popularity is predicted. Her first appearance before the Triangle cameras was in "Valley of Fear," to be released the middle of September. She is now working on "Ashes of Hope," a play similar in locale and action to "The Flame of the Yukon."

Arthur Hoyt, whose most recent appearance was in the title role of Mr. Opp, has become a member of the Triangle Players' Company and will appear in roles of the type which he has interpreted with remarkable success during the past.

Claire MacDowell, featured in numerous recent plays produced by other companies, has been added to the Triangle lists for leading roles.

Ruth Stonehouse, already one of the film favorites of the day, has started work on a Triangle production the title of which has not been decided upon.

Margery Wilson, who has long attracted attention for her work in Triangle plays, comes forth as a new star in "Mountain Dew" on the program for the week of September 16.

Among the other new names that appear on the roster of the stock company is that of George Cheseboro, who has played leading roles in numerous productions, his most recent being in support of Arthur Hoyt in "Mr. Opp." He will act as leading man for Olive Thomas in "Broadway, Arizona," just completed. George Hernandez, George C. Pearce, Gloria Madien, Carolyn Wagner and others whose names are known to the film fans, will shortly appear in Triangle offerings.

The directorial staff has been augmented by the addition of Lynn F. Reynolds, Jack Conway, E. Mason Hopper, Ferris Hartman, Thomas H. Heffron and William V. Mong. Cliff Smith, who has directed William S. Hart in many of the star's Western dramas, now being reissued, has been assigned to the direction of plays featuring Roy Stewart, Walter Edwards, one of the best known of Triangle directors, having completed "Idolaters," with Louise Glaum, is now directing Belle Bennet in "Ashes of Hope."

Tanya Fetner in Difficult Role in Russian Films

In "The Painted Doll," the first release of the Russian Art Film Corporation, Tanya Fetner plays the part of the young and pretty wife of a plodding engineer. In the same cast are two of the popular players of Russia, Ivan Mozukin and Natalia Lesienko.

In Russia, Tanya Fetner is known merely as one of the company of the famous Moscow Art theatre. In the present role she is expected to achieve the success in America an artist always finds waiting.

Forthcoming Triangles (Left to Right): Winifred Allen in "The Man Hater," Dorothy Dalton in a New Play; Bessie Love Shaking Hands with a Suit of Armor in "Wee Lady Betty"

Russian Stories Are Not Built by the Yard

N. S. Kaplan Says They Are Deep, Uncanny and Breathe and Live the Spirit of a Nation That Has Suffered Long

THAT the stories in Russian Art Films are stories—not mere pot boilers—is the statement of N. S. Kaplan, who has returned from Moscow with fifty productions of his great studios to be shown in the United States. Mr. Kaplan says:

"In Russia," Mr. Kaplan adds, "we have to give our theatergoers stories or they will stay away. And as a rule the stories they want are the ones they know. That is why Russian drama, stage and pictorial, is really a reflection of the literature of the country, which is in turn a reflection of the life of the people. I have no scenario writers on my staff in Moscow getting so much a week and turning out stories by the yard. I'd have to throw their stuff away if I had them, because no actor in Russia who is worth a nickel at the box office would appear in a play based on such material.

"Within a few weeks I have read the statements of half a dozen heads of big film producing corporations in this city, all on the common topic: 'Stories.'

"Russia would be a paradise for them. There they could get a man like Andrieff, for instance, to write for them. Andrieff is writing for the stage and the same players who appear in his plays at the Moscow Art Theatre would very likely create the same roles in the screen version or would portray his characters in some play that might not be adapted for the speaking stage. And if Andrieff or his living contemporaries had no works for presentation at the present time, the producer would go to the volumes of some of Russia's foremost writers, perhaps even go back eighty years or more to the legacy left to literature by the young Pushkin, whose pen was forever stilled in a duel in 1837.

"Pushkin's vision of the future was uncanny, or else the writers of today are using 'old stuff,' as the phrase is. For instance, the first release of the Russian Art Film Corporation in the United States will be 'The Painted Doll.' This picture play was based on a poem written by Pushkin ninety years ago. It is a story of the domestic triangle, the perennial and eternal, but how differently Pushkin handles the subject in comparison with his modern successors. The screen adaptation gives adequate play for the artistic abilities of four of the best actors in Russian stage life. The author has followed his trail to the bitter end; there is no appeal to shallow minds that demand that reason and logic shall be ignored to provide one of those 'and they lived happily ever afterward' endings. They don't live happily ever afterward, not in Pushkin's works.

"The same may be said for the writings of Tolstoy, Sienckiewiecz, Dostoevsky, Turgenieff and Ostrovsky. Whatever the foundation on which they built thereon they erected a logical superstructure. Among the actors there is Mozukin; we call him the miracle man of the matinee in Russia. He looks as E. H. Sothern did about twenty years ago and is as versatile. Of the women there is Natalia Lesienko, favorite vampire; Zovska, most popular leading woman; Karabanova, Mlle. Caralli, Nelska and Tanya Fetner, soon to be seen with Mozukin and Lesienko in 'The Painted Doll.'"

Lillian Walker Seen on Screen and in Person by Convicts

"The Lust of the Ages" was shown to the convicts at Sing Sing recently. Lillian Walker appeared in person at the showing and addressed the inmates. The gold and green program from the penitentiary print shop had on its back the following "appreciation":

"In deep appreciation of the many golden hours we have spent in your company, in remembrance of your winsome smile, and stellar, clever acting, through the medium of the screen, we bid you welcome and wish you every success and blessing in life."

Miss Walker, Albert Scowcroft, president, and Mrs. Scowcroft, and Lester Park, vice-president of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, were entertained at dinner by Warden and Mrs. Moyer. Miss Walker was voted an honorary member of the Mutual Welfare League. She was informed that a year previous by vote of the inmates she had been recognized as "the most popular moving picture star."

Dwan's Company Back from North

Winifred Allen, Triangle star, and her supporting company, under the supervision of Allan Dwan, have recently returned from Canada, where scenes of "Melia No-Good" were filmed.

The episodes of the story requiring a military background were photographed at the Canadian army cantonment at Camp Borden, eighty miles from Toronto. Albert Parker is directing the production. Richard Hartelmess is acting as leading man for Miss Allen, and Margaret Ballin has a prominent role.

Denver Critic Sees Real Plot in "Vicar of Wakefield"

Robert Courtney, dramatic editor of the Denver Post, in a personal letter to the manager of Pathe's Denver Match, writes:

"I believe I can count the motion pictures that I really have enjoyed on the fingers of my two hands, and I number "The Vicar of Wakefield" among these. The picture is an enjoyable one, first because there is a real story and secondly because the characters are portrayed by thoroughly capable actors.

"My own argument against the run of motion picture is that the first essential is usually overlooked—a well-developed story that lends itself to the medium employed. Every good story is not necessarily good motion picture material but no film can be of any real value unless there is a good story to begin with."

Transcontinental Trip for Location Planned by Fairbanks

Douglas Fairbanks' next picture calls for scenes in New York. Instead of faking Fifth avenue and Broadway in a studio backyard, Fairbanks has decided, so letters from Los Angeles say, to transport his whole company across the continent at an expense of $60,000.

This sum, it is explained, will include the salary of Fairbanks and all the members of his staff and the company.

Fairbanks will be accompanied on his transcontinental trip by Eileen Percy, John Emerson, Business Manager John Fairbanks, Joseph Henaberry, Victor Fleming, Glen MacWilliams and Bennie Zeidman.

Zoe Rae in "The Little Pirate"

Little Zoe Rae will be the star of the Butterfly feature to be released September 10, "The Little Pirate." In the cast are Gretchen Lederer, Frank Brownlee, Charles West, Lillian Peacock and Burwell Hemerick. They are directed by Elsie Jane Wilson. Norris Shannon and Elliott J. Clawson wrote the story.

As Margery, Zoe Rae is held up on the road by Captain Kidd, Jr., who adopts her forthwith as his trusty first mate, and the two children take up their residence in a grass hut on a nearby island, where they live a life of gay piracy until they finally take part in a denouement that brings happiness to all.

Chemical Research in "The Hungry Heart"

In "The Hungry Heart," a Pauline Frederick play for Paramount, Howard Hall takes the part of a chemist, Richard Vaughn, who is so wrapped up in his researches that he forgets his wife.

Robert G. Vignola is a stickler for details and in this particular production he found enough of them to suit almost any painstaking person. For one thing a chemical laboratory was needed.

Vignola got Professor Davis and Professor Hans, analytical chemists at Columbia University, who arranged the laboratory equipment and taught Hall precisely how he should handle each utensil. The two professors watched the filming of the scenes.

Triangle Kiddies to Appear in Support of Margery Wilson

Georgie Stone, Beulah Burns, Thelma Burns and the Triangle Kiddies soon will be seen again in a production which has been begun at the Triangle Culver City Studio under the direction of William V. Mong.

Margery Wilson is featured player in the cast and is supported by George Cheseboro, but the youngsters have prominent parts in a counterplot.

The title of the new picture has not yet been announced, but it is temporarily named "Wild Sumac." The plot involves the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police and their adventures in the pursuit of outlaws in the northern wilds. Miss Wilson enacts the role of a gypsy maid.

"Nobody" Next Vehicle for Emmy Wehlen

Emmy Wehlen has commenced work on her new Metro subject, "Nobody," a screen version of the novel of the same name by Louis Joseph Vance. Charles A. Taylor has adapted the story for the screen. Directing "Nobody" is William C. Dowlan, and assisting him is Benjamin S. Kutler.

Through accident Sally, the "outsider" witnesses a robbery, and circumstances place her in the position of lady's maid so that she cannot tell. This scheme leads to complications and Sally has plenty of adventures and also of admirers. Finally, the young millionaire who loves her persuades that marriage would be just the thing.

Many of the mystifying incidents in "Nobody" take place at a masquerade ball.

Herbert Hayes, Florence Short, Ilean Hume, Virginia Palmer and Boyce Coube are in the supporting cast.

No Date Set for Release of New Chaplin

The date of the release of "The Adventurer," Mutual-Chaplin Special No. 12, has not yet been set and will not be decided upon until the film reaches the executive offices of Mutual and is viewed by President John R. Freuler.

Mme. Petrova Engages an Art Connoisseur

Added Member of Her Staff, Baron Dewitz by Name, Is Really a Consulting Technical Director to Oust Flaws

MADAME PETROVA, who is now producing independently, has engaged an art connoisseur-regisseur in the person of Baron Dewitz to see that the actors appearing in Petrova Pictures dress, bow, eat, fence, write telegrams, telephone and dance in strict accordance with the social customs and practices of the country in which the scene of the play is laid.

Hitherto producers have had to be their own regisseurs, but in this day when every effort is being directed to make flawless photodramas Petrova has decided to spare no expense in presenting absolutely perfect productions hence her engagement of Baron Dewitz.

The baron's first duties will be to co-operate with Director George Irving in making the big spectacular scenes and the locale of her first picture absolutely authentic and correct. A regisseur can best be described as "a consulting technical director." His work consists of removing all of the little inconsistencies which are apt to creep into the film, and which, to an exacting audience, are inexcusable.

A few years ago such defects would have passed without a murmur, but today the engagement of the baron is Petrova's answer to the public's just requirements. It is, therefore, safe to say that when an audience views a scene in Petrova Pictures it can be sure that it is an accurate representation.

Other experts who will assist Director George Irving in the production of Petrova Pictures are Robert North, studio manager, who brings to his new work a fund of experience gained while serving in this capacity with other companies.

Harry B. Harris, cameraman. Mr. Harris was associated with Petrova in former pictures and assisted her director, Mr. Irving, in the production of "Raffles."

Mrs. Emma B. Clifton will be the continuity writer for Petrova's first picture, the story having been written by Petrova herself. Mrs. Clifton has collaborated with Petrova on former occasions.

Messeniér, from the Biograph Studios, will be Petrova's technical director.

It has been decided by Frederick L. Collins, president of Petrova Pictures Company, to present Petrova Pictures to the public through one of the most powerful yet dignified publicity campaigns in the history of motion pictures.

Madame Petrova has engaged Miss Beulah Livingstone as her personal representative in charge of her special publicity work. Miss Livingstone was formerly associated with Thomas H. Ince as his general publicity representative in the launching of "Civilization."

Marie Dressler Comedy All Daylight Photography

"Tillie, the Scrub-Lady," Marie Dressler's first new comedy, has just been completed in the Goldwyn Studios at Fort Lee. Without exception, every scene was photographed by daylight.

There were many disconcerting and not altogether inexpensive waits. Sometimes for hours, even for days, the company stood about the studio praying for sunshine. Often it was necessary to defer the completing of a scene while a cloud the size of a continent or two passed over the face of the sun.

All of this was productive of a splendid result, however. The finished film is without the flat tone so often observed in even the most carefully photographed subjects acted under mercury lamps.

All are to be written and directed by Vincent Bryan, Miss Dressler's chief recruit from the Charlie Chaplin forces.

Marian Swayne Begins New Play

A new play, starring Marian Swayne, has been started at the Erbograph Studios for release on the Art Dramas program. The story is said to be a distinct departure from those previously produced by Erbograph. The play was started as soon as "The Little Samaritan" was completed.

Three Screen Stars on Artcraft's Program

Fairbanks in "The Man From Painted Post"; Wm. S. Hart in "The Narrow Trail," and Farrar in "The Woman God Forgot"

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, Geraldine Farrar and William S. Hart, a trio of stars of the screen world, appear in plays scheduled for release by Artcraft during this month.

Douglas Fairbanks is in a photoplay entirely different from anything in which he has appeared on the screen to date. The original title of this picture, "Fancy Jim Sherwood," has been changed to "The Man from Painted Post."

At the frontier celebration in Cheyenne recently Fairbanks signed all the winners of the competition to appear in this photoplay. In order to get the proper atmosphere for the film the entire Fairbanks producing organization, numbering some two hundred people, journeyed from California to a ranch in Wyoming covering 160,000 acres and including 30,000 head of cattle.

Frank Campeau, Eileen Percy, William Lowery and Rhea Haines appear in the chief supporting roles. Joseph Henaberry is the director, assisted by Millard Webb. Victor Fleming, head of the Fairbanks photographic department, is the cameraman. The film is now rapidly nearing completion.

"The Woman God Forgot" is the title of Geraldine Farrar's new production from the pen of Jeanie Macpherson and staged under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille. Miss Macpherson and Mr. De Mille were author and director, respectively, of "Joan the Woman." Supporting Miss Farrar are Wallace Reid, Hobart Bosworth, Raymond Hatton and James Neill, as well as the famous Russian danger, Theodore Kosloff,

As its third release in October, Artcraft announces its initial Hart-Ince offering, "The Narrow Trail," a typical William S. Hart subject written by himself. Hart not only gives himself a vehicle particularly adapted to his capabilities, but also affords his famous horse "Fritz" a big opportunity to display his merits to the many admirers of this beautiful animal.

As leading lady to the star Sylvia Bremer, who appeared with him in "The Cold Deck," adds her talents to the general merit of the picture.

Essanay Gives Long Term Contract to Mary McAlister

MARY McALISTER, six-year-old "star," has through her parents signed a long-term contract with Essanay to produce five-part comedy-dramas this coming season. This is in accord with President Spoor's wartime policy—to produce only subjects in lighter vein.

"Pants," the first of these, will be released September 10. It is being offered to the trade now at showings at all branch offices of the K-E-S-E service. This production, said to be an amusing portrayal of a rich little girl's adventure in the city's tenement district, has a screen time of sixty-five minutes, approximately.

Tiny Miss McAlister's next production will be entitled "Young Mother Hubbard." It is a travesty on Old Mother Hubbard of Mother Goose rhymes. However, the fact is brought out, through a humorous interpretation, that had Old Mother Hubbard been Young Mother Hubbard, in these days of living's high cost, her cupboard would have been bare just the same.

Untitled Picture, with Crane Wilbur, Is Finished

Lorimer Johnston has finished the fifth of a series of five-reel comedy dramas, featuring Crane Wilbur and Juanita Hansen for release through Art Dramas. The new picture has not as yet been given a release title.

Edith Storey in Double Role in First Metro Picture

In "The House in the Mist," the forthcoming Metro play in which Edith Storey will make her bow to Metro screen patrons, the star will be seen as both mother and daughter, first in fascinating crinolines and powdered hair, and later in the mode of the present moment.

In this story adapted by June Mathis from the novel of Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy, the mother of Carma Carmichael marries the wrong man. She marries Roger, a carefree ne'er-do-well, whereas it is his brother, Quincy Carmichael, who has a heart's devotion to offer her. She makes her choice between the two at a costume ball, where the guests are garbed in the manner of 1832. The ballroom scene is said to be a brilliant one, resplendent in laces, frills and powdered wigs, with men and maidens dancing the minuet and quaint old-fashioned "square" dances.

Later, as Carma Carmichael herself, Miss Storey appears in modern evening gowns and "sport" clothes. Plenty of incident is arranged for the Cohen-Giesy story. Tod Browning directed.

Speed Demons Unconsciously Play Part in Jaxon Comedies

In the new or number three series of six one-reel Jaxon Comedies just announced, the initial release carries about a dozen cut-ins of an honest-to-goodness auto world's championship race. This comedy, dated for September 14, is "Speed Demons." Besides Pokes and Jabs in their burlesque of automobile strenuousness, Barney Oldfield and Ralph DePalma figure as racers in deadly earnest. The automobile color for this film was obtained July 21 at Providence, R. I., when DePalma and Oldfield held their meeting before a tremendous crowd.

The Jaxon Film Company, whose Eastern studios are at Providence, had special facilities for covering the Narragansett Park event, and had several cameras on the scene.

Soon to Award Prizes in Pathe's Serial Contest

The work of sorting out and reading the great mass of answers submitted by serial fans throughout the country in the contest on "The Neglected Wife," Pathe's serial, is practically completed, and the judges are now considering the merits of less than 100 of the 50,000 answers received, to decide as to who will obtain the prizes.

The prizes to be awarded consist of the first prize of $1,000, a second prize of $500, and five additional prizes of $100 each.

Mabel Herbert Urner, the author of "The Neglected Wife,"; J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Lewis Joseph Vance, a well-known American writer, are the judges who will make decision in this contest.

Reports from Pathe exchanges throughout the country indicate that the "Neglected Wife" is proving popular with all audiences. Good bookings are reported and exhibitors state that this serial is proving popular with their patrons.

Bret Harte's Grandson Is Writing Scripts

Richard Bret Harte, grandson of the famous author, has just been added to the scenario staff of the Triangle Culver City studios. He says his grandfather would be writing scenarios, too, if living.

His training for dramatic writing is unusual. While born in Philadelphia, his residence in America was short, for his father took him to England as a little child. He was educated in prominent schools in England and Belgium, later engaging himself with art studies in the Beaux Arts in Brussels. While clever with his pencil, he prefers his typewriter.

Tom Ward Producing Comedies for Brunel

Tom Ward is now hard at work producing two-reel fable comedies for the Brunel Film Producing Company at the studios at Riverdale.

Dates of release and titles are to be announced. It is reported that some great funmakers will come forth.

Story of "Magda" Well Fits Clara K. Young

First Subject Since She Formed New Corporation Nearly Completed—Plot Offers Many Opportunities for Star's Talent

IN her determination to do bigger things in a bigger way, Clara Kimball Young seems to have struck a particularly happy vehicle for her talents in "Magda," which will be completed at the end of this week.

"Magda," by Herman Surdermann, is the story of a girl whose father believes that the father's will is the will of the whole household.

"Magda" is a beautiful girl with a gift for music. The pastor of her father's church falls in love with her. He gets her father's consent to ask her to marry him, but Magda doesn't love him. The father tells her that she must either marry the pastor or leave his house. Magda leaves his house and goes to a neighboring city as companion to an old lady. The father closes his door to the girl.

Ten years later, Magda is a great singer. Her father begs her to return home and she does so on condition she be free—which stipulation angers the father. She shocks the staid friends of her father and the pastor, but meets at her father's house the man who years ago, when she was alone and friendless, betrayed her. He learns the truth from Magda just as her father enters. Complications ensue—the man, Von Keller, telling Magda that she must give up her career or else he will not recognize the child. She orders him from the house, but her father gives his word of honor to Von Keller that his daughter will do as he wishes. He tries to force Magda, threatening to kill her.

As he aims the pistol at Magda, he has a stroke of paralysis and dies. Magda is left free to live her own life.

"Magda" is Miss Young's initial production with her own organization under the management of Harry I. Garson.

"Arms and the Girl" Is Thrilling as Real War Scenes

"ARMS AND THE GIRL," the latest Billie Burke picture for Paramount, has been photographed in its entirety. The last scene has been "shot" and the film is now being cut and assambled—in itself no mean task, as many scenes had to be taken over and over to insure getting perfect results.

An army of etxra people was employed in filming the war scenes, involving the invasion of a Belgian town by the German troops. Some of the night effects, when the invaders depart hastily for Paris, leaving the formerly peaceful village disrupted and its inhabitants terrified, are said to be particularly fine.

Oddly enough, despite the hazardous nature of the work, the only living creature which suffered actual injury was a Belgian dog, one of a pair used in the production. This was the result of a fire caused when some criminally careless person threw a lighted cigarette into the auto truck in which the dogs were lying, covered by blankets.

This picture will be one of the most spectacular, according to the belief of those responsible for its production, ever turned out by Paramount. Director Joseph Kaufman has permitted no opportunity of enhancing the war scenes and rendering them realistic to escape his attention. One member of the cast who saw the Battle of Arras in films, declared that some of the scenes were almost paralleled in "Arms and the Girl," despite that the director had not seen the actual war picture.

Donald Mackenzie Directs Part of "The Seven Pearls"

It is announced Donald Mackenzie has directed only from the sixth episode of "The Seven Pearls," in which Mollie King and Creighton Hale are being featured by Astra-Pathe. His contract calls for his completing the serial to have fifteen episodes. Five episodes had already been completed upon Mr. Mackenzie's return to the Astra directorial staff.

Mr. Mackenzie says a number of scenes which he has recently completed will surpass those which he directed in "The Shielding Shadow," which was his last serial.

Fairbanks Finishes Cattle Rustling Subject

"The Man From Painted Post" Said to Give Star Exceptional Part—Company Coming to New York to Film Scenes for Next Production

A TELEGRAM received at the New York headquarters of Artcraft Pictures, from John Fairbanks, General Manager of the Douglas Fairbanks Company, announces the completion of "The Man From Painted Post," which has been in the course of production during the past month in Wyoming. The entire Fairbanks organization is highly enthusiastic over its newest offering and reports "The Man From Painted Post" will not only prove another record-breaker from a box-office standpoint, but will become established as the crowning achievement of the energetic Douglas.

Replete according to advance report with swift action and thrills of a story dealing with the cattle rustling days of the West together with the most beautiful scenic displays in Wyoming, the latest Fairbanks-Artcraft picture discloses the exponent of the smile in a role said to be quite different from any of his previous screen efforts. In addition to being a typical Fairbanks vehicle, the story allows Douglas a great opportunity of proving his dramatic ability.

The photoplay is based on Jackson Gregory's recent magazine story, "Silver Slippers," and was adapted to the screen by Douglas Fairbanks and his scenario staff. Staged at the Riverside Ranch, near Lamarie, Wyo., where 160,000 acres of land and 30,000 head of cattle were placed at the disposal of the players, this film presents the actual "color" of the story. This is said to be the first time a motion picture has ever been produced in this territory. Supporting Douglas in the most important parts are Eileen Percy, Frank Campeau, Rhea Haines and William Lowery.

Fairbanks and his company are expected in New York this week for the production of several scenes of his next Artcraft picture. The company will remain in New York only long enough to film the desired scenes after which it will return to California to finish the picture, which will be ready for release shortly.

Hornung Limits New "Stingarees" to Fifteen Episodes

"'THE Further Adventures of Stingaree' positively will be limited to fifteen episodes," William Wright, Secretary-Treasurer of the Kalem Company announced last week.

"Whenever possible we have extended our popular series in compliance with the request of exhibitors. Our railroad series, 'The Hazards of Helen,' ran for nearly three years. 'The Girl From Frisco' was extended from fifteen to twenty-five episodes, 'The American Girl' from fifteen to seventeen and 'Grant, Police Reporter,' from fifteen to thirty.

"If it were possible to secure more 'Stingaree' stories from author E. W. Hornung we would be glad to produce them. But in agreeing to write the 'Further Adventures' as a sequel to his original series, Hornung was firm in limiting himself to fifteen plots as he wished to insure his high standard throughout.

"Hornung, as you know, lives a retired life in England and we negotiated with him for a year, by cable and through our London representative, before we induced him to write the 'Further Adventures of Stingaree.'

"Exhibitors will be interested to learn," added Mr. Wright, "that Kalem soon will release a number of new 'Daughter of Daring' and 'Grant, Police Reporter' episodes and they will find these issues contain many novelties and thrills."

Mr. Wright's statement was prompted by numerous inquiries from all parts of the country. One from Arcade theatre, Brownsville, Pa., signed by the manager, E. Hommel, said:

"The only trouble with 'The Further Adventures of Stingaree' is that it should be 150 chapters instead of fifteen."

Manager Mintz reports unusual activity in the advance bookings.

Pittsburgh Police Horse Named After Universal Star

Mounted Patrolman Cryster, of the Pittsburgh Police Department, chose "Eddie Polo" as the name of his handsome new mount. "Eddie Polo" is one of ten fine black animals which recently were purchased in Kansas City and added to the equine personnel of the force.

Out at Universal City, where news of the christening has just been received, Eddie Polo is said to be planning to send a handsome present to his namesake in the city of smoke and millionaires.

Unusual Three-Part Picture to Aid Red Cross

William N. Selig has forwarded what is said to be an unusual film to the Motion Picture Industries, New York City, where the film will be utilized for a campaign for Red Cross funds. In brief, the motion picture is classified in three parts: First, the famous fight in "The Spoilers" is presented. It will be remembered that Farnum and Santschi engaged in the film conflict which, according to many, is the greatest fight ever given in the films. A complete staging of the fight is presented. Following are some movie stunts performed by Tom Mix. Astride a horse he tumbles headfirst down a steep embankment. Memories of the Selig wild animal dramas are also revived.

Jewel to Eliminate One Gambler's Chance

New Distributing Concern Purposes to Buy Outright Pictures That Have Had at Least a Week's City Run

A DIRECT answer to the national demand of the showman and the public to "get away from the old and give us something new" is given by Jewel Productions, Inc., one of the newest factors in the film industry.

Until recently, its activities have been almost unheralded to the trade, but, for over a year preparations have been under way. It is possible now, through Jewel Productions, Inc., to present, to showman and public, pictures which have attained, from any angle, a degree of superiority.

Jewel Productions, Inc., announces no elaborate or set schedule of releases, nor will it pursue such a policy or program. It may release a picture a month, two, three, or no pictures in six months; ten pictures, twelve, or only eight a year—this being entirely dependent on that standard of superiority which they have set and which they continue to maintain.

Jewel Productions, Inc., is in no way a producing concern. Its sole activities consist of marketing of pictures bought outright, or booked for the producer on percentage, on merit. Before any production is purchased, it is supposed to have received the stamp of public approval during a run of at least a week in a metropolitan center, thus eliminating one gambling chance which many distributors must assume in passing a production to an exhibitor. The company is capitalized at such a figure that it is able to purchase outright for distribution in the United States and Canada the best features obtainable. Independent producers are invited to submit their products to the reviewing board of the company. The concern will conduct a co-operative string of exchanges.

After reviewing a great number of features, Jewel Productions, Inc., have acquired the rights to five.

One was made by Edwin Thanhouser, with the idea of selling it on the state rights plan. Last week Jewel Productions, Inc., secured the world rights to it. They will offer it for the first time to the public at the Broadway theatre, New York, starting September 9. It is Edward Everett Hale's patriotic masterpiece, "The Man Without a Country." Florence La Badie and H. E. Herbert are the stars. Lloyd Lonergan wrote the present-day version. Ernest C. Warde is the director.

When "Come Through" was shown on Broadway it instantly became one of the picture hits of the season, Jewel states, and photoplay critics in New York admitted. George Bronson Howard wrote the story. Herbert Rawlinson, Alice Lake and Roy Stewart the featured players. Jack Conway is the director. Jewel Productions, Inc., bought the film from Universal.

"Pay Me" is another, with Dorothy Phillips as its star—drama of the West, put on by Joseph De Grasse.

"Sirens of the Sea," so termed by New York reviewers—is another. A fifth will come from Lois Weber.

Jewel offices have been established in the principal cities of the country, with headquarters on the fourth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, New York.

Four Art Drama Stars Seen in Variety of Fall Offerings

A FALL program is offered by Art Dramas, which is claimed to give exhibitors a wide range of stars and subjects.

Crane Wilbur, Jean Sothern, Catherine Calvert and Marian Swayne are represented in the list of features.

Crane Wilbur will se seen in a Horsley feature, "Blood of His Fathers"; Jean Sothern in a Van Dyke production, "Peg o' the Sea"; Catherine Calvert in "Behind the Mask," produced by the U. S. Amusement Corporation, and Marian Swayne in "The Little Samaritan," an Erbograph picture.

"Blood of His Fathers" treats of the subject of heredity. In "The Little Samaritan" Marian Swayne is fitted with a role, similar to that which she successfully interpreted in her former Art Dramas vehicle, "Little Miss Fôrtune" and "The Road Between." Miss Swayne's character is that of a little orphan in a New England village. Babbling tongues fire the minds of the small-minded villagers against her and heap down upon her unhappiness and misery.

"Behind the Mask," starring Catherine Calvert, is said to be the best production yet made by the U. S. Amusement Corporation. This picture was written by Charles T. Dazey. Alice Blache, who directed, cited it to the Columbia University journalistic students in connection with her lecture on scenarios recently as a desirable form to study. "Behind the Mask" was adapted to the screen by Frederick Rath.

Next in order is "Peg o' the Sea," by Winifred Dunn. Jean Sother, star of this picture, is seen as the daughter of an old fisherman, living in a New England fishing village.

Plot of "Behind the Mask," Catherine Calvert Play

In "Behind the Mask" by Charles Turner Dazey, the U. S. Amusement-Art Drama starring Catherine Calvert, she takes the role of a Southern girl, Margaret Stanton. When she learns that her father was ruined by Mark Harrold, the one man he had believed in, and who was indirectly responsible for Stanton's death, Margaret finds revenge by marrying Lord Strathmore, whom society had already accepted as the fiance of Harrold's daughter.

She does not love the man she has used as a tool to serve her purpose and in a stirring scene she leaves him. Then follows a series of surprises, until the climax brings the two together again and brings her to a realization that she really loves Strathmore.

The characters are of widely contrasted types. Harrold is a financial king, powerful and unscrupulous. Catherine Calvert is fitted for the part of Margaret. In this role, more than in any other she has played on the stage or screen, her ability for emotional acting will have full sway. Richard Tucker is cast as Lord Strathmore, while the part of Mark Harrold is in the hands of Kirke Browne. The picture was directed by Mme. Blache, from a scenario constructed by Frederick Rath.

Antonio Moreno Makes Bow on Pathe Program

Former Vitagraph Star in "The Angel Factory"—New Serial, "The Seven Pearls," Also Begins with September 16—Surrounding Subjects

PATHE'S program for the week of September 16 marks the first appearance of Antonio Moreno as a Pathe star. It also brings Mollie King in the first episode of "The Seven Pearls" serial, Pearl White and a Lonesome Luke two-reel comedy as other features.

Antonio Moreno is seen in "The Angel Factory." Opposite him is Helene Chadwick. Other important members of the cast are Suzanne Willa, Margaret Green and Armand Lopez. The story deals with a little East Side girl whose father is a drunkard and whose mother is a sloven. It tells how she comes into contact with the superintendent of a settlement house and finally develops into the kind of woman it was intended that she should be. The picture is said to work up to a big punch at the end with a shooting and circumstantial evidence to the guilt first of the heroine and then of the hero.

Mollie King stars in the first episode of the "Seven Pearls" entitled "The Sultan's Necklace." The story tells how the Sultan's necklace is stolen, how Ilma, a beautiful young American girl must recover the seven pearls contained in it, or see her guardian die and herself enter the Sultan's harem. Creighton Hale appears opposite Mollie King.

Pearl White stars in the 11th episode of "The Fatal Ring," entitled "The Short Circuit." The story tells how Pearl succeeds in recovering the Diamond from Carslake in an unusually interesting fashion, and how he in turn takes it from her. Lonesome Luke is seen in "Lonesome Luke Loses Patients," a two-reel comedy produced by Rolin. Lonesome Luke is the Doctor Killem of a twentieth century sanitarium. The humorous possibilities in the story are many.

There is a Pathe scenic on the program entitled "Triple Divide Mountains, Glacier Park" and "Japan, the Floral" (colored).

There is also an International cartoon and scenic split reel and Hearst-Pathe News (No. 76 and No. 77).

General Film Directors at Work on Nine O. Henrys

FIVE of O. Henry's best human interest stories will be filmed in four-reel form and distributed by General Film in the next two months. Three directors are at work on O. Henrys. A number of shorter stories will also be ready within the same time.

The big O. Henry features, named in the order of distribution by General Film, are: "The Defeat of the City," with J. Frank Glendon and Agnes Eyre, directed by Thos. R. Mills; "Blind Man's Holiday," with Carlton King and Jean Paige, directed by Martine Justice; "The Duplicity of Hargraves," with Charles Kent, J. Frank Glendon and Myrtis Morgan, directed by Thos. R. Mills; "The Ruler of Men," "A Night in New Arabia."

The new series of two-reel O. Henry stories starts with the "John Tom Little Bear" story, with Al Jennings, Ben Duffy and little Roberto Turnbull, followed by "The Last of the Troubadours," with S. E. Jennings, Ben Duffy and Nolan Leary. These are directed by Dave Smith. Succeeding them will be "The Lonesome Road" and "Law and Order."

"Polly of the Circus" Shown at Goldwyn Offices

THE first picture which Goldwyn will release, "Polly of the Circus," featuring Mae Marsh, was shown privately to a few members of the trade press last week. It is in eight reels and has many things besides its extra footage to distinguish it from the average picture of the day.

Margaret Mayo is the author of the play upon which the picture is based. Although it was one of her first dramatic efforts, it well stands the test of the lapse of years since it was first produced and makes an ideal screen offering.

Miss Marsh ably upholds her reputation, gained by her performances in D. W. Griffith spectacles, "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," in the title role of the Goldwyn offering. The role demands versatility in all of its many phases and there is not an opportunity offered the star which she has not made the most of.

The direction was in charge of Charles Horan. An entire circus was used for the many scenes that transpire under the big top. All of those present at last week's showing agreed that the light effects brought to view from time to time throughout the eight reels were the most realistic ever achieved.

A review of the picture will be published in the next issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Exclusive Club Arranges for Paramount-Artcraft Films

ONE of the most exclusive exhibitors in the country was added to the long Paramount and Artcraft list as a result of the visit of Pauline Frederick and her company to Lake George, where the scenes for her newest Paramount picture, "The Hungry Heart," were taken recently.

Miss Frederick was accorded the use of the big estate of R. C. Peabody adjoining that of his brother, George Foster Peabody, prominent Wall Street banker. The Peabodys are leading spirits of the exclusive Country Club at Lake George and during the Summer have exhibited motion pictures at the club with social lights of the club in the casts. The club members began to long for the real thing about the time Miss Frederick appeared on the scene and it didn't take much more than a suggestion by William J. Scully, assistant director for Miss Frederick, to persuade Mr. Peabody to arrange for the private exhibition of the Paramount and Artcraft pictures at the club.

The first picture to appear before the two hundred members of this club will be "The Poor Little Rich Girl." Other Paramont and Artcraft subjects will follow, a special projecting machine having been purchased for the club. Admission, of course, is strictly by invitation among the club members, and no more exclusive audience can be found in the world than the wealthy Metropolitan Opera House box owners of the Lake George smart set, many of whom have never before professed an interest in motion pictures.

How Anachronisms Are Removed in Films

"In producing the Lincoln picture the difficulty has been to cut out incongruous action in the backgrounds," explained Benjamin Chapin, "the Lincoln man," in his studio at Ridgefield Park, N. J., recently.

"For instance, in one of our pictures Abraham Lincoln is shown standing beside a bench south of the White House at Washington. A beaver-hatted gentleman of the 1861 period approaches respectfully and conveys to the President some message. All is well; photography good, action consistent. And lo! A very modern motorcycle policeman whizzes through the picture in the distant background. Everyone up front was so intent on the scene that the policeman action was not observed.

"Here comes in the advantage of moving pictures over the regular stage. It is the quickness with which you can shift the scenes. Therefore, just before the policeman enters the scene, it is "cut" and that part of the scene in which the policeman appears is left out. To fill this break the story shifts to another action—people coming to meet the President in another part of the ground—then back again the scene shifts to the President, as he finishes his action in front of the White House. So the policeman is eliminated with a rapidity of scene shifting that would cause a strike on the regular stage."

Farrar Leading Charge in "Woman God Forgot"

Expressing her delight that "The Woman God Forgot," the Artcraft photoplay, should have ben written especially for her by Jeanie Macpherson and produced by Cecil B. DeMille, Geraldine Farrar, prima donna and Metropolitan star, added ruefully that "she didn't understand why she was not privileged to play easy parts for cinema productions."

"I always seem to get things like this," said the diva to a press representative.

Farrar pointed ruefully to a pair of nearly nude warriors who, with arrows and spears were attacking a mob of fierce looking Spaniards on the lot nearby. Just five minutes previously, she herself was in the melee, leading the attacking Aztecs, the air filled with flying arrows and death dealing missiles.

To Give Fox Child Stars Other Roles

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, the two featured kiddies in "Jack and the Beanstalk," William Fox's production, are to have the leading roles in the other pictures of the series, to include "Babes in the Wood" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp."

Myrtis Morgan (Vitagraph)

Farrar's Cast in "The Woman God Forgot"

In the Aztec play, "The Woman God Forgot," a De Mille picture staged by Artcraft, it is said Geraldine Farrar has as good a cast as in "Joan the Woman."

Wallace Reid plays Alvarado, favorite Cortes captain, sweetheart of "the woman God forgot." Raymond Hatton is Montezuma, the "magnificent." Hobart Bosworth as Hernando Cortes leads an army into battle. Theodore Kosloff, Russian dancer, has the role of Guatemoc, nephew of Montezuma. Others in parts well suited to them are Walter Long, Charles B. Rogers and Olga Grey.

It is the opinion of those who witnessed the affairs, that Mr. De Mille's battle scenes for "The Woman God Forgot," staged chiefly on high battlements, are even more startling than those disclosed in "Joan." The production will shortly be completed and released by Artcraft some time in October.

Tom Terriss Is New Vitagraph Director

Tom Terriss has been specially engaged to play opposite Alice Joyce and direct her productions.

The first picture, which he is now working upon, is a Robert W. Chambers story, entitled "Anne's Bridge," to be followed by one of Mr. Chambers' most successful stories.

Mr. Terriss left the head of his own corporation as the Vitagraph made such an attractive proposition.

Two Selig Comedies Through K.E.S.E.

"A Midnight Bell" was released by Selig in K-E-S-E service on Monday, September 3. J. A. Richmond, the director responsible for the previous Hoyt comedy successes, directed "A Midnight Bell." In the cast are Wm. Fables, James Harris and Amy Leah Dennis.

Following "A Midnight Bell" the Selig Polyscope Company will release "A Contented Woman," another Hoyt Comedy.

Better Vision Photography in "The Little Samaritan"

AN illustration of Erbograph photography is found in "The Little Samaritan," the current Erbograph-Art Drama, in which Marian Swayne is starred. The credit is said to be due Ludwig G. B. Erb.

The remarkable tints and tones which play an important part in making the photography of Erbograph pictures distinctive when compared to many feature films, abound in this production and are typical of Mr. Erb's methods.

One scene in "The Little Samaritan," called for double exposure photography of a difficult kind. Miss Swayne is seen reclining on a couch, while in a vision countless fairies appear and dance before her. This required careful manipulation to the minutest details.

Throughout the picture, in fact, the photography is notable for softness, definition and artistic effect. Photographic critics have acclaimed "The Little Samaritan" a picture worthy of the Erbograph Studio and laboratory from which the picture emanates.

Mr. Erb, who is the president of the Erbograph Company, has been responsible for countless improvements and innovations on the technical side of motion pictures, and his many ingenious devices have placed Erbograph pictures photographically in the lead of a great many of their contemporaries.

Kansas City Paper Boosts Two-Reel O. Henry's

The Kansas City Star, in an article by its critics, says of General Film's two-reel O. Henry's:

"Along comes General Film and announces another series of ten two-reel O. Henry pictures. Along comes a half score more O. Henry plays, not one of which, probably, can boast a luxurious boudoir, and not one of which has anything to recommend it except a real plot, and 100 per cent human interest, and a few such trifles."

"Lorelei of the Sea" Company as Castaways

The "Lorelei of the Sea" company had many amusing experiences during the making of the feature. At the outset the company were castaways when the bearings of the yacht "Wisdom" burned out. The boat drifted for hours before being picked up by a fishing smack.

Some baby seals were captured and used in the film, and one night one of them crept under the cot of Frances Burnham. Jay Belasco, Gypsy Abbott, Winnifred Greenwood and John Oaker are in the cast.

Seven or Eight Reels in "Draft No. 258"

Although Director William Christy Cabanne's contract with Metro expires on September 2, he will continue with that organization until the completion of his newest war picture, "Draft No. 258."

The possibilities and magnitude of this production were not realized until Director Cabanne got well into it. He estimates now that it will be a picture seven or eight reels in length with stupendous scenes and groupings.

"Nan of Music Mountain" to Be a Paramount

Ann Little, former Ince star, and who will be seen with Conway Tearle in J. Stuart Blackton's forthcoming production of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The World for Sale," has been engaged by Jesse L. Lasky to support Wallace Reid in "Nan of Music Mountain."

Miss Little will go to California to begin work. She hopes to return in time to work in the third Blackton production.

"To Develop the Figure" in Universal Magazine

In Universal Screen Magazine No. 38, released September 28, Bernard McFadden shows poses by Miss Helen Tyler and demonstrates all of the best exercises for both developing and reducing the figure. There is an interesting pictorial description of the apricot industry. How cloth was made in our grandmother's day, including carding, spinning and weaving, by hand, is shown in a series of pictures taken at Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt's school. The squab is shown from the egg in the nest to the royal dish on the table. A bicycle speedometer which registers speed and distance while one races a "dummy" in his own home or gymnasium is shown. Miracles in mud afford another novel set of pictures.

Fox Kiddies "Extras" Average Five Years

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin have leading roles in "Jack and the Beanstalk." They will also be seen in the principal parts of forthcoming productions in the Fox Kiddies Series. The other films in the series will include:

"Babes in the Wood," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "The Brownies," "Mikado," "Pinafore," "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," and "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland."

C. M. and S. A. Franklin, who were in charge of the direction of "Jack and the Beanstalk," were also the screen generals for the rest of the series. The average age of the children in the photoplays was five years.

Tourneur's Master Work "Barbary Sheep" Says Greene

The combination of Elsie Ferguson, Maurice Tourneur and Robert Hitchens as star, director and author of the forthcoming Artcraft picture, "Barbary Sheep," has resulted in the production of a typical Artcraft offering, according to Walter E. Greene, president. Mr. Greene says:

"In keeping with the star's accomplishments are those of her director, Maurice Tourneur, the famous French master of artistic production extraordinary. That 'Barbary Sheep' is the greatest work of this producer is commonly conceded by those who have already viewed the production.

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS INC.

JEWEL Productions are a direct answer to the national demand of the show-man to "get away from the old and give us something new."

Jewel Productions (Inc.) is not a producing concern. Its sole business is to market fine pictures. It will buy negatives outright or it will book them for the producer on percentage solely on the basis of merit.

We may release a picture a month—or not more than five or six a year—entirely according to the supply of pictures that are up to the high standard we hope to maintain.

We have thus far acquired the rights to only five pictures after examining a large number.

One was made by Edwin Thanhouser, with the intention of selling it on the state rights plan; but we secured the world's rights.

Three are from the Universal Film Mfg. Co.

One is from Lois Weber.

All are of the calibre referred to in the trade as "state rights" quality—a quality that will stand the acid test of a Broadway run.

We have given our offices four of these great plays as a beginning. The fifth we will hold back until later in the season. The four that are now ready for booking are—

"Come Through"—George Bronson Howard's greatest melodrama.

"The Man Without a Country"—the patriotic classic.

"Sirens of the Sea"—the picture beautiful.

"Pay Me"—a big drama of the West.

You may see these plays and arrange for bookings at any of the following offices, already established.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Vic Moore in Laughable Farce, "Seeing Things"

On September 3, Victor Moore will be seen in a Klever comedy, entitled "Seeing Things, written by Edward McWade.

Vic has been in a sanitarium for sometime for the "cure," he having had "too many mornings after the night before." He is almost well and his doctor is about to discharge him, hoping that the change will also cure him of an optical delusion that he has. It seems Vic has a delusion that a certain "Gloomy Gus" looking creature is always following him, wherever he goes and this serves to get him into no end of trouble. The doctor wires this fact to Vic's wife and prepares to start Vic on his way. Vic, after bidding good-bye to the other inmates goes, only to be, so he thinks, followed by his friend "Gloomy Gus." He feels that he is with him all the way home, and he certainly has his troubles with him.

Vic arrives home much to the delight of his wife but much to the disgust of his mother-in-law. It is not very long after his arrival home that the "optical delusion" again starts working, and poor Vic gets himself into lots of difficulties, and at the finish gives it up as a bad job.

Gail Kane at Santa Barbara for American

Gail Kane, the Broadway star, who is making a series of pictures for the Mutual release at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., Santa Barbara, is starred in "The Bride's Silence," a five-reel mystery drama, scheduled for release September 10.

Miss Kane is supported by Ashton Dearholt, a stage and screen actor of note; Henry A. Burrows, James Lee Farley, Robert Klein and Lewis J. Cody.

Mutual Leads with "Outcast" Frohman Play

"The Bride's Silence," with Gail Kane, Is Another of Current Release—Others Are Comedies and Specialties

ANN MURDOCK'S new play, "Outcast" is announced for release through Mutual, September 10. It will be the first of the Charles Frohman successes to get a showing on the screen. On the schedule with "Outcast," under President John R. Freuler's policy of "two star productions a week," will be released "The Bride's Silence," a five-reel American Mutual drama, starring Gail Kane.

"Outcast" is a screen adaptation of Hubert Henry Davies' startling and sensational play on Broadway, with Miss Murdock in the stellar role. "Outcast" was one of the last productions which Mr. Frohman selected for the stage. The picture was directed by Dell Henderson.

Miss Murdock is supported by a notable cast, which includes most of the original company of players who appeared in the play. Their constant rehearsal of the drama made them so thoroughly familiar with every angle of its production that the result has been a thoroughly finished picture.

"The Bride's Silence" is the fifth of the series of American Mutuals, starring Miss Kane, who deserted the footlights of Broadway to go to Santa Barbara to make pictures for Mutual. The picture was originally announced under the working title of "The Unafraid." It was directed by Henry King, whose efforts are responsible for "Souls in Pawn" and "The Upper Crust." "The Bride's Silence" is a mystery story by Daniel Frederick Whitcomb.

"Outcast" and "The Bride's Silence" are the second releases under the "two-a-week" policy announced for Fall by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. The first releases were "Reputation," starring Edna Goodrich and "Charity Castle," the first of a new series of Mary Miles Minter productions.

"Jerry's Whirlwind Finish," a one-reel Cub comedy, is on the Mutual release schedule for Thursday, September 13. The picture features George Ovey, the funny man of the Cubs. On Wednesday, September 12, will be released Mutual Weekly No. 141, carrying current news and on September 13 Reel Life No. 72, the Mutual-Gaumont screen magazine will be released.

Edna Goodrich Victim of Scandal in "Reputation"

Edna Goodrich is intensely interested in her latest Mutual production, "Reputation," released September 3, in which she assumes the role of Constance Bennett, a pretty girl, compelled to earn her own living, and assailed in the scandal-mongering village she has chosen as her business location by all the wagging tongues and subtle innuendos awaiting the pretty stranger in a small town.

The play is one that affords Miss Goodrich an excellent chance to display her versatility, for the situations into which she is forced by her ill-natured critics demand picturization of nearly every human emotion.

"Reputation" was written by John Clymer, who wrote "Ashes of Embers," "The White Raven," "The Diplomatic Romance" and other screen successes. The play is being directed by John O'Brien, formerly stage manager for Augustus Thomas.

Ann Murdock and Views of Her First Empire All Star Production, "Outcast," Which Will Be Released by Mutual

If Such a Thing Is Possible, Theda Bara Grows More Mysterious with Each Tick of the Clock. She Is Soon to Appear in a New Fox Superpicture, "Camille"

Theda Bara in Fox Production of "Camille"

Play Based on Historic Book by Alexander Dumas, Fils, Which Has Brought Tears to Readers' Eyes a Half Century

THEDA BARA in a picturization of "Camille" is the latest announcement of William Fox to the motion picture public. The Fox version of this successful story will be released to exhibitors September 30.

"Camille," the story of Alexandre Dumas, fils, has behind it a long history of successful engagements in every civilized country of the world. It has been acted on every great stage of Europe and both Americas, and, in book form, it has brought tears to the eyes of men and women all 'round the globe.

Theda Bara, as the unhappy Parisian girl who sacrifices herself on the altar of convention, has surpassed all her previous work in this production. The spirit of her Carmen, the charm of her Cigarette, the piquancy of her Juliet, Fox says, all are combined in her characterization of Camille. The relentless Nemesis which pursues the famous heroine, is forgotten in the portrayal by Miss Bara.

Theda Bara's "Camille" has just been completed, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. Parisian life has been followed so that the atmosphere of the story fits with the acting.

"La Traviata," Verdi's noted opera, was founded on the story of the unhappy Parisian girl. The original story, known as "The Lady of the Camellias," was published in 1848. A year later its author recognized the dramatic possibilities of the piece and made a new version which was acted on the Parisian stage in February, 1852. Its success was enormous. The tears that it caused were genuine and the emotions that it stirred were deep.

Tense Old-Time Drama in Vitagraph's "Alabaster Box"

"AN ALABASTER BOX," the Blue Ribbon feature scheduled for release September 10, by Vitagraph, Albert E. Smith, president, is an adaptation of the famous novel of the same name by Mary E. Wilkens Freeman and Florence Morse Kingsley. Alice Joyce and Marc MacDermott, as a star combination are introduced.

The story, in novelized form had its vogue about twenty years ago. It was listed as one of the world's best sellers and permeated even the smallest towns in the United States.

The story contains a powerful and highly original theme which deals with the efforts of a noble girl to make restitution to the people of a once prosperous town for the ruin brought on by the injudicious speculations of her father, a reputable citizen and banker of the town, seventeen years before.

Hatred is still held by the townspeople for the man who caused the decadence of their town. The girl, Lydia Bolton, arrives incognita, prepared to make reparation to the extent of her private fortune and her life. One night at the expiration of his prison sentence, the man, Andrew Bolton, is secretly smuggled into the house by his daughter and her lover, who knows and who remains loyal.

The townspeople, now aroused to a paroxysm of fury, decide to wreak vengeance on Bolton and his daughter. They advance on the Bolton home, with the intentions of lynching Bolton, and despite the efforts of Lydia's sweetheart, batter through the door. In defending his daughter, who has been felled by a stone, Bolton, with the strain of seventeen years of prison confinement and broken of heart by the townspeople's unrelenting hatred, falls dead.

Included in the cast is little Aida Horton, Greater Vitagraph's three-year-old child, Bobby Connelly's leading lady; Patsy De Forest, Harry Ham and Frank Crane. Director Withey has provided some highly comical situations to relieve the heavy dramatic tension. The feature gives promise of being unusual in every department.

Scenic Photography in "The Sunset Trail"

Vivian Martin's forthcoming Paramount picture "The Sunset Trail," scenarioized by Beulah Marie Dix from the story by Alice McIver, will be released September 7.

Harrison Ford appears as Kirke, the lover of Bess. In the supporting cast will be found such Paramount favorites as Carmen Phillips, Charles Ogle, Billy Elmer, H. A. Barrows and Pauline Perry.

In the earlier stages of the story, Vivian Martin, as Bess, daughter of a rancher whose wife later elopes with a wealthy Easterner, is a veritable tomboy. She climbs trees and wears overalls; wades in mountain streams and generally speaking is about as fascinating a young person as you could find in a day's travel. In these scenes are some of the best examples of photography showing rolling hills and craggy cliffs, verdant meadows and purling brooks, seen through the spreading branches of gnarled and spreading live-oaks.

Two Rawlinson-Vernon Bluebirds

"It's Up to You" and "Flirting With Death" are two comedy-dramas Elmer Clifton has completed for the starring requirements of Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon. This is a new combination of Bluebird stars, "Flirting With Death" introducing them to the program September 24. Mr. Rawlinson has starred in other Bluebirds, having been the hero of "The Eagle's Wings" and co-star with Ella Hall in "Little Eve Edgarton." Miss Vernon has heretofore starred with Franklyn Farnum in Bluebirds.

"Flirting With Death' has circus life as the basis of its action and "It's Up to You" is a college comedy. The supporting company in both features will be practically the same, including Mark Fenton, Frank McQuarrie, Hayward Mack, Edward Brady and Nellie Allen. In "Flirting With Death" Rawlinson demonstrates a new-fangled airship. In "It's Up to You" he impersonates a prince of royalty to win the girl he loves.

Franklyn Farnum to Be Starred Alone in Future

Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, who have jointly starred in several Bluebirds, part company with the release of "A Stormy Knight" September 10, and Mr. Farnum becomes an individual star on the same program. Miss Vernon will continue among Bluebirds with Herbert Rawlinson as her starring companion, the first Rawlinson-Vernon release being "Flirting With Death," set for distribution September 24.

Joseph De Grasse, who has directed Dorothy Phillips, introducing her to the program, will screen manage Mr. Farnum, "The Maverick," written by Isola Forrester and Mann Page, being announced for October 8 as Mr. Farnum's lone-star initiation. Claire Du Brey will be leading lady of the company, with Lon Chaney heading the support. Sam De Grasse, Margery Lawrence, D. C. Appling, Eugene Moore and Marie St. John will also have essential roles.

Manager Says Arbuckle Vies with Chaplin

H. J. Allen at Calgary, Western Canada, in discussing the popularity of the "Fatty" Arbuckle comedies, says:

"To Western Canada exhibitors it seems that Chaplin has a rival. For instance, the Empire theatre, Hanna, Alta., played to the same business on a Fatty Arbuckle Comedy Butcher Boy as they did on the Chaplin subject "The Floorwalker." The same reports are being received from exhibitors all over Western Canada."

British Columbia House Praises Paramount Program

H. J. Allen, at Calgary in Western Canada, has received the following letter from W. G. Swayne, manager of the Opera House, Greenwood, B. C.:

"Any time I discontinue with Paramount it will be because I close my house. I am well pleased with your service, and would have no other. I run only two nights per week, and use your service both nights."

Summer Comedies in Universal's Releases

"Short Skirts and Deep Water," "Nearly a Queen," "In the Clutches of Milk," Are a Few of the Merry-Makers

FOLLOWING the release, on Monday, September 10, of the Butterfly feature, "The Little Pirate," starring Little Zoe Rae, the week's schedule of Universal pictures opens on Tuesday, the 11th, with a Gold Seal drama entitled, "The Perilous Leap." The scenario was prepared by George Hively from a story by T. Shelley Sutton and J. D. Davis directed the production. Helen Gibson and Val Paul are supported by a good cast. The scene is laid near the Mexican border.

On the same date Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts appear in a Nestor comedy, "The Boulevard Speed Hounds." They are arrested for speeding, but stall the officer. The real wife appears on the scene at a most embarrassing moment and adds to the amusing complications.

On Wednesday, September 12, Gladys Varden, Walter Stephens, and Harry Griffith are presented in a two-reel L-Ko comedy, "From Cactus to Kale." The plot involves the kidnapping of the week-kneed heir to a fortune. Universal Animated Weekly No. 89, is scheduled for release on the same date.

Mary Fuller is the star of the feature for Thursday, September 13, "To the Highest Bidder." She one day announces at a party that at the end of the month she will sell herself to the highest bidder. The outcome of this unusual situation is surprising. Emmett Campbell Hall and Catherine Carr wrote the play, which has been directed by Lucius Henderson. "Short Skirts and Deep Water" is the title of the Joker comedy released on the same day, featuring Gale Henry, William Franey and Milburn Moranti. Allan Curtis and Tom Gibson prepared the script.

Max Asher and Gladys Tennison are players in "In the Clutches of Milk," a Victor comedy released Friday, September 14. Written by Craig Hutchinson and C. B. Hoadley and put on by the former. The 36th issue of the Universal Screen Magazine will be released at the same time as the Asher comedy.

Saturday, September 15, "The Texas Sphinx," a Bison drama of the Southwest, featuring Harry Carey and Alice Lake will be released. The story was written by T. S. Sutton and George Hively and produced by F. A. Kelsey. Alice Lake is foil for Carey's sunburnt type of hero.

"Nearly a Queen," a Joker comedy in which Gale Henry and Milton Sims appear is released on the same day. Allen Curtis and Tom Gibson are responsible for the authorship and direction. The 18th issue of Universal Current Events completes the list of releases for the week with its usual quota of timely scenes, strikingly photographed.

Six Sparkle Farce Comedies for Release

General Film announces release of six new one-reel Sparkle comedies, farcical in character and produced by the Jaxon Film Corporation.

The new "Sparkles" are "Hearts and Harpoons," "Toodles," "Bangs Renigs," "Triple Entente," "Whose Hosiery" and "Wrong Wrights." The first of these is ready September 20, the others following in order and insured for delivery without a break each week.

Like the first and second series of Sparkle comedies, the new releases have each a clever story and snappy production.

Juanita Hansen Plays Opposite Crane Wilbur

Juanita Hansen will make her first appearance on the Art Dramas program in "Devil McCare," a five-reel David Horsley comedy-drama, starring the popular Crane Wilbur.

In "Devil McCare" she is cast as Mary Archer, a manicurist, who meets Devil, played by Crane Wilbur, is won by his description of life on the range, journeys to Sour Lake and finally, after weeks of stirring adventure, finds the happiness she had long been denied.

Another Outcome of the Russian Revolution: Julia Dean and Montagu Love in "Rasputin, the Black Monk," a World Picture-Brady Made

"Rasputin, the Black Monk" A Brady Release

Produced in Immense Scenes Constructed on Lines of Photographic Models Brought All the Way from Russia

"RASPUTIN, THE BLACK MONK," is the title of a newly completed World-Picture Brady-Made about to be published on the World program. This photoplay has been in preparation for several months under the direction of Arthur Ashley, with a most unusual assemblage of star players.

These include Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley, Henry Hull, Julia Dean, Irving Cummings and Hubert Wilke.

Mr. Love appears in the name part; Miss Elvidge personates the wife of Rodin (Mr. Ashley), the early leader of the revolutionists, betrayed by Rasputin; Mr. Hull is seen as Kerensky, the hero of the hour in Russia, to whom the young American actor bears a quite striking likeness; Miss Dean is the Czarina's favorite lady in waiting under such hypnotic fascination for the black monk that she eagerly performs his bidding in all things; Irving Cummings plays a gallant young prince whose influence, thrown to the revolutionists at the crucial moment, enables them to overthrow the government and accomplish the freedom of their country, and Mr. Wilke portrays the Czar, whose rule is ended in the final episodes of the new drama.

In "Rasputin" the unbelievable career of the self-appointed monk who so influenced the Czar that for years he practically swayed the destinies of the Russian people, is followed from its peasant beginning to its tragic end. He is shown first as the queer, sinister villager, half feared and half disliked, whose strange hypnotic power over women is not understood by the simple folk to whom he is known.

Against a grim background of intrigue, debauchery and wanton disregard of human rights is drawn a story of live, devotion, self-sacrifice and heroism which finds its happy ending in the crash of revolution and the beneficence of national liberty.

It is declared that the present exposition of the conditions and influences which led to the great upheaval is entirely authentic and that many details are brought to light for the first time, even to certain state secrets which have been guarded heretofore with the greatest care.

"Rasputin, the Black Monk," is described as an exceptionally "big" picture in theme and production. Several immense scenes have been built outside the studio from photographs brought to America by returning representatives of World-Pictures Brady-Made who had been in Petrograd for a long time prior to the culmination of the movement for freedom. In addition to the star cast large numbers of "extras," horses, etc., are employed in the several imposing spectacular episodes.

Bob White, as Lost Baby, Ably Supports George Beban

"LOST IN TRANSIT," George Beban's new feature play, released through Paramount September 3, is from a story by Kathlyn Williams, also a Paramount star. Gardner Hunting prepared the scenario and Donald Crisp directed the production.

Bob White, two and a half years old, who has appeared in two pictures already, in this play has a chance to prove that he is perfectly capable considering his years, to act in naturalness though situations are difficult.

In the supporting cast are Helen Eddy, who has been seen so often in Mr. Beban's pictures for Paramount; Henry Barrows, Pietro Sosso, Vera Lewis, Frank Bennett and others.

A wealthy man loses his wife when their child is born and in his grief refuses to keep the baby and orders it taken to a home. A couple of years pass and his empty heart cries out for the love of something and he sends for the boy. On the way to his house it is kidnapped.

Meantime a woman deposits a chubby youngster in the rags, bottles, sacks wagon of Niccolo Darini—otherwise George Beban. Then she proceeds to end her life. The kindly Italian finds the little chap and is so taken by his winning ways that he decides to keep him.

A rival for the love of Nita Lapi has seen the child with Niccolo and when a reward is offered for the recovery of the kidnapped babe, he tells the matron of the home and the Italian is forced to give up his little charge. His heart is broken; he can no longer eat; the light has gone out of his life. Later a beggar is struck by an automobile while leading a child across the street and in his dying moments confesses that this is the real child.

General Announces Another Four-Part O. Henry Picture

Following its four-reel O. Henry story, "The Defeat of the City," General Film brings to the trade a two-reeler by the same author, in "John Tom Little Bear." The "John Tom Little Bear" subject keeps up the weekly releasing system of Broadway Star Features, which are now devoted to screen masterpieces interpreting the best O. Henry stories.

"John Tom Little Bear" is a college graduate Indian, who is a figure of mingled pathos and humor. Debarred by his color from employment in the higher walks of life for which he has been educated, he is found as a "ballyhoo" man in Jeff Peter's medicine show, dancing about in the paint and feathers he loathes, all for the edification of gaping villagers. A little boy, adventuresome and a runaway from home, shoots at "John Tom" through ambition to make a real redskin bite the dust. The Indian and the showmen gather the lad to their bosoms and make a pet of him until they worm out of him his home address and history. His mother is sent for from an Illinois town, and when she arrives to claim the child "John Tom" falls in love with her. However, his reason tells him that he can never hope to be on terms of social equality, and he drowns his heartbreak in the "firewater" of the white man. The great O. Henry climax comes when the little chap's rascally father kidnaps the child and "John Tom" finds it out. A more powerfully conceived climax can hardly be found in any of O. Henry's other works than the catastrophe that then ensues.

Al Jennings plays "John Tom," and Dan Duffy "Jeff Peters."

Dorothy Dalton in Cairo Scenes for Paramount

Work on her first photoplay for Paramount has been started by Dorothy Dalton, Thomas H. Ince's star, at the studios in California under the direction of Roy Neill. The scenes of the new picture are laid in Cairo, with which city and its environs Mr. Neill is familiar, having once been an actor in Maurice Bandman's, touring the Orient.

William N. Selig Releases Jungle Play and Others

William N. Selig announces the following releases in General Film service:

"The Victor of the Plot," a two-reel drama of British Army in India, featuring Miss Bessie Eyton, supported by an all-star cast.

"The Voice That Led Him," one-reel, released Saturday, September 15. This is a drama of the African jungle with Kathlyn Williams. A number of wild beasts are engaged in the action.

On Monday, September 17, "The Law, North of 65," a two-reel Selig release. It is a drama of the Canadian Northwest, with Bessie Eyton in a new characterization. Colin Campbell is the director.

"Vengeance Versus Mercy," single-reel drama, for release Saturday, September 22. Vengeance thwarted by mercy is the theme.

The Selig Company promises excellent photography and strong plots.

"The Awakening of Ruth," Edison, for Sept. 17

"The Awakening of Ruth," by Julien Hubbard, the five-reel Edison feature, one of the first Perfection pictures to be released through the Kleine system on September 17, is stated to be of unusual charm and variety. Shirly Mason, Viola Dana's younger sister, is given opportunity to show her art. She is ably supported by George Forth and Donald Hall.

The suspense of the story is sustained through a plot in which life on an island off the Florida coast and the complex existence of the "Great White Way" are cunningly interwoven.

The love interest predominates.

Triangle Puts "Idolaters" on September 2 List

Substituted for "The Man Hater," Titling and Cutting of Which Was Delayed—"The Haunted House," "Polly Ann" and Other Sept. 9 Releases

OWING to the fact that the cutting and subtitling of "The Man Hater," the Saturday Evening Post story starring Winifred Allen, has not yet been finished, that play has been taken off the Triangle schedule for September 2 and "Idolaters," starring Louise Glaum, substituted.

"Idolaters" is the story of a woman who worships the false god of vain success, setting aside all else to satisfy her ambition. The action parallels the lives of two women who are determined to win places for themselves on the stage. One proceeds to flourish her way, the other to make good by hard work.

This is the production for which Triangle built an elaborate Egyptian setting, representing the apartment of "the peacock woman," played by Miss Glaum, who, as "Vanity," wears innumerable gowns of bizarre fashion.

The tale of a ghost that turned human is the theme of "The Haunted House," an Allan Dwan production, featuring Winifred Allen, will be presented on the program of September 9. The locale is a New England village, where superstition continues to stalk in the minds of the austere residents. Denied the ordinary pleasures of youth, the girl of the story devotes herself to imaginative fancies. Being of a sensitive, spiritual temperament, she believed the spirits of the wood commune with her, as they did with Joan of Arc. The mystery of the haunted house, which holds in awe the superstitious villagers, is not penetrated until one night a young desperado, seeking refuge, dares to invade its premises and finds the ghost to be exceedingly human.

As a small-town slavey who becomes a barnstorming Bernhardt, Bessie Love makes her appearance in "Polly Ann," the other release for September 9. She is an orphan inmate of a poor farm until the village tavern-keeper engages her as a slavey of all work. When a fly-by-night company of players comes to town, Bessie is smitten by the romantic demeanor of one of the actors. She determines to become a player and proceeds to give her version of Ophelia, Portia and other great characters of dramatic literature. Later she becomes an heiress and experiences a real adventure, as romantic as any ever presented by the strolling players.

"His Precious Life," featuring Louise Fazenda, Charlie Murray, Slim Summerville, Dora Rogers and Wayland Trask, will be released by Triangle on the week of September 9.

"A Warm Reception," with Alatia Morton, Marianne de la Torre, Pietro Bianchi, Pat Kelly, Jack Dillon and Larry Bowes, is the Triangle comedy accompanying "Polly Ann."

"A Dark Room Secret" will be the supplementary feature with "The Haunted House." The comedians of this one-reeler are Elizabeth De Witt, Lillian Biron, Harry Depp, Lloyd Bacon, Marie Manley and Ben Horning.

"The Seven Pearls" Delayed Release Sept. 16

Pathe's New Serial, Mollie King in Leading Role, Starts "with a Splash" and Has a Weird, Uncanny Second Episode

"THE Seven Pearls," Pathe serial, written by Charles W. Goddard, is to be released in its first episodes September 16. The first date, September 2, was objected to by many exhibitors who desire to put the serial on their programs.

Mollie King plays the lead in this serial while Creighton Hale enacts the part of the hero. Leon Bary is again seen in the "heavy" role and makes a very satisfying villain. A recent review says:

"The first episodes of 'The Seven Pearls' are briskly developed and contain a wealth of fast action and exciting mystery. The serial launches itself with a splash and will probably continue at top speed throughout all its numbers, much in the same manner as have Pathe's serials of the past."

The second episode is entitled "The Bow String." Harry Drake discovers that the masked figure who held him up is Ilma. When they realize that the intruder who took the pearl from Ilma has departed, they discover that the pearl has disappeared.

Harry tells Ilma that he loves her and he is about to kiss her when he hears a knock at the door. He goes to the door and looks through the keyhole. He assures Ilma that no one is there. She suddenly points to the floor, starting back in terror as she sees a bow string slipped under the door. The bow string is used to strangle women of the harem who flirt. Later the pearl is mysteriously returned to Ilma, and Harry, gambling for Jack's pearl, loses his own.

Recovering the pearls, his own which the crook had won and Jack's, Harry gives them to Ilma, and starts toward the window after Jack, who tries to escape. As Harry goes to the window, Ilma backs toward the curtain. In an instant some unknown throws a curtain over her head, takes the pearls, and before she is able to disentangle herself, the figure escapes.

Five Directors Are Busy on L-Ko Comedies

J. G. Blystone, who recently returned from a vacation in the mountains, has five directors under him producing L-Ko comedies.

Phil Dunham directs and acts in a two-reeler with Lucille Hutton and Billy Bevan. Vin Moore is turning out a mining camp comedy with Al Forbes. Noel Smith is directing Gladys Varden with Walter Stevens and Bert Roach. Dick Smith has Eva Novak with Bob McKenzie, Chester Ryckman and Eddie Barry. Hughie Mack left Vitagraph and is now hard at work as an L-Ko featured one.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Sixty-two Per Cent. of World Sold for "Ages," Says Ogden

Although the Ogden Pictures Corporation's initial release, "The Lust of the Ages," in which Lillian Walker is starred, has been exploited, or offered for sale, through advertising in the trade journals for but three weeks and although but two weeks have elapsed since the trade showing of that production, 62 per cent of the entire world has been sold on this as well as the succeeding seven Lillian Walker attractions, it is reported.

"This is an extraordinary situation, when it is considered that the foreign market is one of the most difficult to dispose of, but all of the foreign market with the exception of three of the belligerent Central Powers has been disposed of," says an officer of the company.

When a statement was requested at the offices of the Ogden Pictures Corporation of the territory sold Jesse J. Goldberg, exploitation and productions manager, stated: "We do not intend either advertising or giving publicity to the individual territory sold until the entire world has been disposed of; then we shall pound away through the medium of every worthy trade journal to the end that the exhibitors may know with whom to deal. In any event, although 62 per cent of the world has been sold, our contracts provide the release by the exchange cannot take place before September 25.

Berg on Trip for "Man's Law"

Harry Berg, of the Overland Film Company, 729 Seventh avenue, left Saturday on a transcontinental trip to visit the leading independent buyers of the country. Mr. Berg, who is a comparatively newcomer in the field, has already established himself as one of the live wires of the industry. Before entering the motion picture business he had a long and comprehensive training in the theatrical business, having been connected with many of the leading producers, and for more than a decade held a responsible position with a leading vaudeville manager.

Mr. Berg brings to the picture business a thorough knowledge and understanding of the requirements of the exhibitor, and in his presentation of the feature photoplays on a territorial basis considers only their value from the box office point of view.

On the trip he will carry two prints of "Man's Law," a feature starring Irving Cummings, which will be shown to the big buyers in the principal cities he will visit. He plans to stop at Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Denver, San Francisco, and will spend considerable time in Los Angeles. While in Los Angeles he will complete negotiations already under way for the signing of long-term contracts with several picture stars.

Pathe Puts Two Pictures on Open Market

"Today," Starring Florence Reed, Receives High Praise from Edel of the Strand, New York—"Mad Lover," with Warwick, Is Second Film for Independent Buyers

"TODAY," starring Florence Reed, and "The Mad Lover," starring Robert Warwick, are announced by Pathe for the open market.

"Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand Theatre does not hesitate to call it one of the three or four best pictures he has ever seen, and 'Today' had its premiere at the Strand," says an official of the company. "The picture was greeted by newspaper and magazine critics as a bigger hit than the play, by George Broadhurst and A. S. Schomer, which played to tremendous business on Broadway for over a year.

"Florence Reed, who has proven herself to be a splendid moving picture star, says it is the best film she has ever appeared in. Her interpretation of the role of Lilly is a wonderful piece of screen acting. The picture was produced by Harry Rapf under the direction of Ralph Ince, the man who has made several of the biggest stars in motion pictures.

"Robert Warwick is one of the two most popular dramatic stars on the screen. His name alone is an advertising point which insures success. The title 'The Mad Lover' is also a box office asset. Beautiful Elaine Hammerstein, who made a hit with him in 'The Argyle Case,' is his leading woman. Leonce Perret, the French producer, not only directed the story, but also wrote it.

"Prominent film men who have seen it give 'The Mad Lover' high commendation. They characterize it as a picture that will be successful in any house.

"'Today' is in seven parts. 'The Mad Lover" is in six. Harry Rapf, the producer, considers them the two best pictures he has ever made.

"Mr. Rapf seems to have a knack of hitting the popular taste. Every picture he has made has been a money getter.

"Pathe paid a large sum in cash for these two pictures. It is a general belief considering the many inquiries that have been received, that they will return 100 per cent profit on the investment."

M. H. Hoffman Praises Women as Careful Executives

DURING this time when the war is taking men from all branches of industry the question as to woman's place in the business field of the motion picture industry comes up for discussion. M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of the M. H. Hoffman, Inc., takes up this question in the following interview:

"Personally, I feel that woman's place in the business end of motion pictures is established. I do not believe that she should be asked to sell, because very few of the feminine sex are fitted for this character of effort. For one thing, the physical demands are often beyond the endurance of a woman who is sensitively organized and not generally gifted with qualities that are required for selling.

"But in executive capacities, women have again and again demonstrated their worth. They have powers of keen discernment and are faithful in their work. In the Hoffman-Foursquare offices our feminine attaches are exceptionally capable and do their work, often, better than men could.

"Many women in the motion picture industry have logical minds and reasons with a clarity which would do credit to capable men. Then they have intuition developed to the ninth degree, and their judgment is nearly always tempered with reasoning power and intuition.

"All in all, I should say that women are very much to be desired in positions for which their sex and individual abilities fit them. I have always been glad to have them in my organizations and shall continue to have them with us. Furthermore, their presence in offices is conducive to creating the sort of atmosphere we all like to have about us."

Twenty Copies of "Redemption" Booked for Sept. 10

Announcement has been made by Nathan Hirsh, president of the Civilization Pioneer Film Corporation, controlling the rights for Greater New York and New York State to Julius Steger's production, "Redemption," that twenty copies have been booked for September 10, the date of release. The picture has been booked by the entire Loew and Keith circuits, the 81st Street Theatre, Mt. Morris Theatre, and other leading theatres in the territory.

"I know," said Mr. Hirsh, "that in 'Redemption' I have acquired a box-office attraction second to none. The story is too well known to demand further comment, and there is no doubt that Miss Nesbit could not have been allotted a more suitable vehicle to display her talents. I feel confident that her appearance in the picture will not alone draw a great patronage, but that the audience will leave the theatre well pleased and satisfied.

"So far we have obtained week stand booking from discriminating exhibitors throughout our territory, which fact, in itself, speaks well for the picture."

The Civilization Pioneer Film Corporation also controls the exclusive rights to "Hate" and "The Submarine Eye."

E. & H. to Market Art Dramas

The E. & H. Film Distributing Company, of Atlanta, Ga., has moved from 65 to 73 Walton street. The firm has purchased all the fixtures of the Art Craft office, which was formerly at this address, and at the same time took over all the films controlled by the Strand Film Company, consisting of nearly twenty features, including "The Ne'er-Do-Well."

The E. & H. Film Company consists of two men only, Chardles W. Harden and P. A. Engler. Mr. Harden has for several years past been associated with several of the big film companies, including the Mutual at Kansas City, the Thanhouser Company and William Fox, having been district manager of the latter for the entire South. Mr. Harden recently resigned his position with the Metro Company at Kansas City to go to Atlanta and devote his entire time to his own company.

Mr. Engler is also an old film man, having been manager of the Mutual and International in Kansas City, the Fox office in Atlanta, and was also associated with the V.L.S.E. in Atlanta. Mr. Engler is well known in the South and has many friends among the exhibitors.

The E. & H. Film Company was originally organized to distribute "The Crimson Stain Mystery" serial in the South, which was handled by Mr. Engler with success. When the King Bee Film Company released the Billy West Comedies, the E. & H. Company, realizing the merit of these pictures, purchased the rights for Georgia, Florida, Alabama and South Carolina, and has them well established at the present time in these four states.

Commencing September 1 the E. & H. Film Company began distributing the Art Dramas program over the entire Southeast, including seven states. A big campaign has been started to exploit this program.

A crew of road salesmen left Atlanta on August 27, under the direction of Wm. Conn, formerly of the K.E.S.E. office in Atlanta, and Wm. Sharp, recently with the Atlanta Triangle Company. Mr. Sharp will have charge of the southern district and Mr. Conn the northern.

Second Nesbit Picture Soon in Work

A company of forty people has left New York for the Adirondacks, where Evelyn Nesbit, assisted by her son, Russell Thaw, and a large cast of players, will begin her second photoplay under the personal direction of Julius Steger.

The title of this picture is "The Greater Love," by James M. Starr, the scenario version of which has been made under Mr. Steger's supervision. This story is said to be a worthy successor of "Redemption," the photoplay in which Miss Nesbit scored a success, and Mr. Steger believes that the role she therein portrays will afford her the opportunity to demonstrate to a still greater extent the truthfulness and sincerity of her dramatic talents.

Mr. Steger also announces the production following the Nesbit picture, which will be "Just a Woman," by Eugene Walter, of which Charlotte Walker will be the star, appearing in the role she has created in the stage version of that successful play.

Peter Pan Plans Elaborate Short Subjects

Mo-Toy Comedies and Black Magic Will Be Released as a Single Reel, Alternating with Shadograph and Miroar as Single Reel, Beginning Sept. 15

R. M. VANDIVERT, the vice-president and general manager of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, has recently returned from an extensive trip covering all distribution centres of the United States. The purpose of this trip was to establish the exact status of the short subject upon the present day program. Mr. Vandivert has made a keen analytical study of the market conditions, and has submitted in his report to H. C. Allen, the president of the organization, that there is a brilliant future in store for the short subject throughout the country, and that practically in every important distribution centre exchange men are receiving numerous calls from their exhibitors for pictures of this type. In speaking of his trip, Mr. Vandivert said in part:

Motoy's Savages
(Peter Pan Films)

"As regards our future plans, we have decided to launch into the short subject on a very elaborate scale. The first step toward this end was the moving of the studio from Chicago to New York, in order that we might secure closer co-operation between the production and the sales branch of the business. This arrangement will undoubtedly be a great benefit to us, as it will centralize all the work, and we can keep in close touch with all sides of the business.

"We have contracted for the services of C. P. Jaeger as director-in-chief. He is already widely known through his excellent work in connection with our Mo-Toy Comedies. George W. Hanlon, a son of one of the famous Hanlon Brothers, has been engaged to assist him in the production. The latter has been in the show business for a matter of twenty years, and has produced and directed such productions as the Hanlon Brothers' 'Superba' and 'Fantasma,' as well as many vaudeville acts here and abroad. At present he is working on a new and original line of screen stories.

"We have given very considerable thought to the type and character of short subjects that we could add to our program of Mo-Toy Comedies in order to make the Peter Pan short features a factor in the independent field. To this end we have selected the Black Magic Comedies, which are a series of novelties in which everything is black and white, the actors either in white against a black back-ground, or in black against white. Nothing of the kind has been attempted before, and the pictures are finding an excellent reception.

"The Miroar Comedies, the Shadographs, and the 'Honeymooners' are our other releases, the last being a series of foreign pictures, which Mr. and Mrs. Richard Schayer are taking on their wedding trip around the world.

"Our sales plan is already complete. Commencing September 15, the Mo-Toy Comedies and the Black Magic will be released as a single reel, alternating each week with Shadograph and Miroar Comedies as a single reel. In addition to this the 'Honeymooners' will be released in a 1,000-foot reel each week, thus enabling us to give the exchanges a weekly output of 2,000 feet of high-class novelty pictures.

"The quality and reliability which has characterized our pictures in the past will be maintained, and under this new arrangement our service to the exchanges will be vastly improved, for the centralization of the work cannot but be a material aid in this respect. There will be nothing depressing in any of our releases, our idea being to create an atmosphere of pleasantness and happiness, particularly at a time when the country needs light entertainment. In connection with this new policy we are preparing to launch an extensive advertising and publicity campaign, which will be a benefit not only to the exchanges, but also to the exhibitors."

Ellman in Charge of Wolfberg Publicity

In line with the recent announcement from the Harris P. Wolfberg offices, Lyceum Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., that cooperation with the exhibitor is being developed to a high degree, J. L. Ellman has been engaged to take charge of the publicity department.

Mr. Ellman is an advertising man with many original ideas, and for the past year has been with the Reuble-Brown Advertising Agency of St. Louis.

"I consider the coming of Mr. Ellman important," said Mr. Wolfberg when asked about the announcement. "My salesmen have always helped the exhibitor in putting over our production. That is the chief reason for our rapid growth. It will be Mr. Ellman's work to help our salesmen as well as the exhibitor. His years of experience will be placed at the disposal of every exhibitor in the territory. In other words, the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions will be an organization specializing on the distributing of important pictures."

Mr. Ellman will be located at the Pittsburgh office, but his work will take him over the entire territory—Ohio, western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Missouri and Kansas.

Many Signed Options for "Alma" Says Briscoe

Newfield Representative, on Countrywide Trip, Finds Widespread Interest in Subject Featuring Ruth MacTammany Because of Reputation Made by Stage Play

HILLER and Wilk, New York, will be the final distributing agents for the Newfield Corporation in the marketing of "Alma, Where Do You Live?" featuring Ruth MacTammany.

Howard Briscoe traveling representative of the Newfield Company, who has been on an extended trip, has thoroughly canvassed most of the big cities in Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Minnesota, Dakota, Arizona, Utah, Wisconsin and other states in his traveled belt, and already holds signed options for "Alma" that anticipates an unusually attractive gross when all the rest of the forty-eight states of the Union are brought in under their separate state blocks.

Mr. Briscoe, working on a plan mapped out in the executive offices of the Newfields concern, was enabled to work expeditiously, not having to spend more than a few days in each of the big cities of the states visited for the reason that all outlying territory that might be interested in the productions of the corporation had been brought into co-operative line in advance by correspondence.

The Newfields method promises to work out expeditiously, and phalanxed as it will be commencing early in September by generous advertising, for the public as well as for prospective independents, may become a fixed procedure for other concerns in developing quick markets for worth while film productions.

Mr. Briscoe reports an unusually vigorous demand for big feature films everywhere. The country was never more avid for indoor amusement, and even throughout the warm weather the theatres everywhere given over to film exposition were doing a land-office business.

He found "Alma" easy to sell everywhere. Its fame as a play, stimulated by its ten years of presentation throughout practically all cities and hamlets of the country had proved a golden introduction. Everybody knew of "Alma," the girl of such rare attraction that all men desired to know her. Every one had wondered more or less that the play had been so long in finding its way to the drama of celluloid, not knowing that its author, Adolph Phillips, had designedly held it for a famine market year.

Ruth MacTammany, too, was well known everywhere by reason of her successes in the regular theatre, and her first big film success, "One Day," which had sold to an extent as great as "Three Weeks," a picture it suggested but did not copy. Mr. Briscoe found by intimate inquiries everywhere—a part of the objects of his travel mission—that women throughout the country wherever they could be found to talk of the things of the theatre, were curious to see how "Alma" would be realized on the screen.

In all the cities visited, Mr. Briscoe, where occasion offered, gave private exhibitions for the diversion and enlightenment of film men and their families. Fairly without exception, the picture was voted ideal for general presentation, having nothing in it that might offend, while at the same time possessing the piquancy of the original "Alma" as she coquetted, enslaved and toyed with amorous men in the stage version.

"Sirens of the Sea" Opens in New York

"Sirens of the Sea," the six-reel feature of Jewel Productions, Inc., opened at the Broadway theatre, New York, last week with Louise Lovely, Carmel Myers and Jack Mulhall as the featured players and a large cast of dancing maidens and mermaids of the deep.

Allen Holubar is the director and the story is by Grace Helen Bailley. More than two thousand persons, it is said, were employed in the cast and the production was six months in the making. Jewel's next offering at the Broadway is Edward Everett Hale's "A Man Without a Country," produced by the Thanhouser Film Corporation. The version is by Lloyd Lonergan, after the Hale story, and Florence La Badie and H. E. Herbert have the leads. Ernest C. Warde is responsible for the production.

Charles H. Christie Makes Tour for His Comedies

Charles H. Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, has returned to Los Angeles after a trip to Kansas City, Minneapolis, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Washington, New York and other important cities.

"In line with our policy of placing Christie comedies with strong exchanges of the highest class," said Mr. Christie, "a few changes are gradually being made in the distributing offices handling our product. It is especially gratifying to announce that during my trip I closed a contract with Louis B. Mayer of the American Feature Film Company, of Boston, by which his company will take over the distribution for the six New Eigland states. Exhibitors will now have the advantage of the active co-operation and efficient service of this big organization.

"Another important connection just established is with H. L. Charnes, head of the Standard Film Service Company, which now controls Christie comedies in Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky."

Veribest Prepares "Parentage" Campaign

The Veribest Pictures, Inc., has opened offices at 47 Swann street, Buffalo, N. Y. The company is preparing a big campaign on "Parentage," which will open shortly at one of the theatres in Buffalo. The company also has "God's Man," "Mormon Maid" and "Whither Thou Goest." The offices are being fitted up on the style of many of the New York film offices and are attracting a lot of attention. The policy will be two big feature productions a month, starting from October. The operations will be confined to New York state outside of Greater New York.

John W. Noble, Producer-Director of the Official State Rights Feature "Shame"

Career of Noble Is Varied

John W. Noble, who recently completed "Shame," which will be put on the open market, has had a varied career, and numerous productions directed by him have proved to be pictures of excellent drawing power.

Mr. Noble directed Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "Romeo and Juliet," "The Wall Between," "Man and His Soul" and "The Bridge." The former Metro director has seen service as an army officer in the Philippines, and later went on the stage.

Overland Sells Rights to "Man's Law"

The Overland Film Company, 729 Seventh avenue, sponsors for the Irving Cummings picture entitled "Man's Law," is in receipt of inquiries from all over the country relative to the feature.

After the first showing the rights to New York and northern New Jersey were immediately sold to the Mammoth Film Corporation, F. E. Backer, president. Harry G. Segal, general manager Globe Feature Film Company, Boston, Mass., was so enthusiastic over the picture that he made a special trip to New York City to obtain the rights, and after reviewing the subject immediately purchased it for the New England States.

Mr. Mattson, representing John Olsen and Company, shared the same views with Mr. Segal and purchased the rights for Norway, Sweden and Denmark. U. Ono has contracted for the rights for Japan. Negotiations are now pending for the sale of the Canadian rights.

Hartmann Opens Office in New York

William C. Hartmann has opened offices on the fifth floor of 218 West Forty-second street, New York, where he will conduct a general film business, specializing in open market features, including comedies.

Mr. Hartmann's first offerings will be a series of farce comedies, said to be produced along new and original lines.

There will be four separate and distinct subjects, each under an individual trademark. One each of the series will be produced monthly. The stories are by writers of national reputation.

Each series will be worked out with a performer having a world-wide reputation in the theatrical and vaudeville field.

The names of the stars and subjects will not be disclosed until the pictures are ready to be shown. The first picture will be ready for screening in the course of a week.

Mr. Hartmann says that there will not be a single pie or slap-stick in any of the productions, but that a laugh will be in every fifty feet of film.

Short Features Exchange in Larger Quarters

The Short Features Exchange, handling the Lion comedies and the Walt Mason subjects, will move from the seventeenth floor of the Godfrey Building, New York City, into larger quarters on the sixth floor of the same building.

"The Short Features Exchange," says an officer of the company, "was organized about four months ago with the purpose of confining itself to the release of short subjects of merit. Those who organized the Short Features Exchange firmly believed that specialization was the keynote in any enterprise, and consequently when this organization was formed, it was done with the purpose of specializing in the distribution of short subjects only. It set out with much confidence in short subjects, and to date, that confidence has grown stronger.

"It didn't take long for us to work up a large clientele, and the evidence that we have made good with the exhibitor is clearly demonstrated by the steady patronage each exhibitor has given us. By consistent plugging on one line, slides, heralds and other descriptive matter which are rare on pictures of short length have been supplied to all exhibitors who have booked any of the releases from this exchange."

Deseret Buys "Deemster" for Eleven States

J. L. Adams, acting for the Deseret Film Corporation of Salt Lake City, Utah, and W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, signed contracts last week whereby "The Deemster," becomes the property of the Deseret Film Corporation in eleven Western states, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, California, Arizona and Nevada.

This leaves only one group of states on "The Deemster" available. It has not been decided what policy will be pursued by the Arrow offices for the future.

Quirk Plans Red Cross Aid Through Screen

All Profits from "Photoplay Magazine Supplement" Single Reels, Twelve Subjects Released in Year, Will Go to the Cause

JAMES R. QUIRK, publisher of Photoplay Magazine, surprised the trade a week or two ago by announcing that he is about to issue twelve single-reel motion pictures for the open market, under the title, "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement."

Now, he has another and an even bigger announcement to make. He declares all the profits from the sale of these de luxe motion picture subjects are to be turned over to the American Red Cross. All of the net profit received from the sale of territorial franchises on "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement" will be donated to the fund for aiding war-stricken Europe—helping Uncle Sam's soldiers and sailors to be more comfortable.

"In these strenuous times, when the whole civilized world is struggling in defense of humanity, when every man, woman and child is being called upon to aid the cause in which we have taken up arms, I feel that the least Photoplay Magazine can do is to contribute its bit toward alleviating the suffering of those who are stricken," said Mr. Quirk. "The idea of making and distributing motion pictures of the stars as they are—unique and unusual views of the players—'off-the-screen'—under the title, 'Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement,' was not conceived with a thought of profit. We aimed solely to increase and augment our service to the picture fans of the country—to give them in motion pictures glimpses of the things they have read about the players doing, in the pages of Photoplay Magazine.

"I want to thank the manufacturers who have co-operated to make this idea a success. Without their whole-hearted belief in the proposition it would have been impossible. I am sure every one of them will be with us strong on this idea of increasing the public interest in the stars, and at the same time helping the most worthy cause in the world. I am going to make sure these pictures reach the highest degree of excellence.

"We have the pictures ready, and though many of them have been difficult to secure, we are not going to exploit them for profit. It is my plan to turn over every cent received from the sale of the territorial rights on these twelve de luxe single-reel subjects to the American Red Cross, after deducting, of course, the bare sum necessary to cover the cost of the undertaking. This does not apply to any one release of 'Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement,' but to the entire series of twelve subjects which are to be released within a period of a year.

"I am more than glad to assure every buyer of territorial rights on 'Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement' that his money will not only secure for him what I sincerely believe to be the greatest box-office attraction ever offered him, but also will enable him to participate pro rata on what I hope may be a generous donation for the relief of the sufferers of all nations."

McMahan & Jackson Pioneers in Field

Well-Known Cincinnati Firm, Formerly Owners of the Buckeye Film Company, Were First to Open Exchange and Run Theatres in Central West

McMAHAN & JACKSON, Cincinnati, are pioneer film men, being the first in the central states to establish a film exchange and run a string of moving picture theatres. They formerly owned and operated the Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company, handling the entire output of the Universal program.

They also operated eighteen moving picture theatres, among them being the beautiful Alhambra theatre, located at 146 West Fifth street, Cincinnati, O., which is considered one of the best picture theatres in the city.

McMahan & Jackson claim to be the first ones in the industry to charge high prices of admission for feature pictures and at the time they were operating the Lyric theatre, they presented Madame Sarah Bernhardt in "Camille" in three reels, with big admission price and made money with the engagement. They also presented Madame Anna Pavlowa in the "Dumb Girl of Portici" at the Lyric theatre, for two weeks, charging one dollar admission for the orchestra seats, which was the first time in the history of Cincinnati this prices was charged for a feature picture.

Among the well-known theatres operated under the successful management of these men are the Lyric theatre, Grand Opera House, Alhambra theatre, Orpheum theatre, the Ohio theatre, the Ohio Vaudeville theatre, Plaza theatre, the Forest theatre, all of Cincinnati, in addition to a number of theatres in other cities.

McMahan & Jackson give much of their time to their feature film business and have handled such big bookings as Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter," Anna Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Witching Hour" and many other big pictures.

McMahan & Jackson started in the business in the fall of 1905 and the only rival at that time was Harry Davis at Pittsburgh, the Cincinnati house being the second theatre established in this country.

Warren Completes Picture

Edward Warren finished his latest picture last week and it was shown to the directors of the Edward Warren Productions and the cameramen who shot the picture. Mr. Warren will personally do the cutting and editing of the film, and expects to have it ready for a trade showing in about two weeks.

The picture is yet unnamed and the title will not be announced until the subject is ready for the trade showing.

All Ogden Pictures on Open Market

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Eastern executive office of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, that for the next twelve months the Lillian Walker attractions, to be eight in number, will be marketed on the independent plan. To the buyers of the first release, "The Lust of the Ages," the company is awarding the exclusive rights to the remaining productions.

"The purpose of this," said Lester Park, general manager of the company, "is to concentrate, as much as possible on the exploitation of Lillian Walker and not to divide our productions among several exchanges in the same territory.

"Consistent with this idea we are cooperating with the independent purchasers of the Lillian Walker series as to the extent of advertising to the exhibitors in their own territory and the issuing of advertising matter in connection with Miss Walker herself, as, for instance, there is being mailed by this company to photoplay fans, whose names are forwarded us by exhibitors a cabinet photograph of Miss Walker. The initial order for these photographs has been for 2,500,000. In addition to this, we intend forwarding to every motion picture theatre in the United States, with a seating capacity of 1,000 or over, an oil painting of Miss Walker, forty by sixty. The cost of this painting alone is $23.50 each.

"We are not heralding in advance, nor do we intend giving much publicity to each individual innovation created by us, consolidating our endeavors toward creating a demand for Miss Walker's pictures among exhibitors throughout the United States. It has truly been astonishing to us to learn that Miss Walker, after an absence of six months from the photoplay screen, is still the favorite supreme in her own particular class of work, but perhaps the fact that she has been off the screen for that period of time has whetted the appetite of the photoplay public, including the exhibitor.

"Miss Walker's second production is an adaptation of a popular novel, written by a man who is reputed to be the second most popular author in the United States. We have already purchased, however, the rights to the next seven plays, all of them adaptations of popular novels."

ON THE RIGHT LINES

McMahan and Jackson, Cincinnati, are enthusiastic over the work done by MOTION PICTURE NEWS in promoting the interests of the open market field. They say:

"You can rest assured that we will do anything we can to assist you, as we feel that you are working along the right lines and are entitled to our support. We appreciate the progressive steps you are taking in your open market department, and believe it is excellent."

Private Feature Now Metropolitan

M. S. Stocky, Cleveland, has taken over the Private Feature Film Company, which made "Ignorance." He will operate the company under the name of the Metropolitan Film Company, at 210 Columbia Building, Cleveland.

As soon as the new company is well under way, Mr. Stocky expects to take more pictures, but not of such a sensational character as "Ignorance," although it has been a good seller. Eighteen states have been covered up to date, the most recent being western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, which were bought by the Leader Film Serial Company, 804 Penn Avenue, Pittsburgh; and New York State, which will be handled by the Popular Cinema Exchange, Inc., 47 West Swan Street.

Peerless Buys Lion Comedies

The Peerless Film Service of Los Angeles has closed with the A. Kay Company, New York, for the Lion comedies in the territory embracing California, Nevada and Arizona. The comedies were made by the Masterpictures Company of Houston, Texas, and a publicity campaign was put under way by the reference to the coming releases with the phrase, "Make 'em Roar,"

F. E. Backer Goes to Coast

Franklyn E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation, left for the West last week, to oversee his interests on the coast. His first point will be Denver, where "Who's Your Neighbor?" which Mr. Backer purchased for New Jersey and eleven Western states, opens for an extended run, on September 2.

From there he will visit all the important cities in his territory, finally meeting in San Francisco a number of capitalists, who are negotiating with him the early formation of a producing company, based upon lines which will be especially attractive to the exhibitor who has sometimes felt that there was a lack of consideration shown him, and that he was asked to bear too great a share of the burden. Mr. Backer started in the state rights field with one picture, "The Fall of a Nation," a year ago. To-day he controls the output of ten big features in New Jersey and New York, and in addition, the Western rights of "Who's Your Neighbor?" Mr. Backer attributes his success to the motto of his exchange, which is: "A square deal, and a carefully selected picture."

Holland Exchange Closed

The draft is taking Edward Geller, of the Holland Feature Film Co., 97 Woodward avenue, Detroit.

Tietel Gets "Souls Redeemed"

Albert Teitel, manager of the Ideal Film Exchange, Philadelphia, announces the purchase of Edward Warren's "Souls Redeemed," featuring Mary Shotwell, Sheldon Lewis and seven other players of note, for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. The picture has a peculiar interest in connection with its acquisition by the Ideal company. It was made in the Ideal Film Laboratories and Studios, Hudson Heights, N. J., which were erected by Mr. Tietel.

Mr. Teitel has planned an extensive campaign for the exploitation of the picture in his territory, which will consist partly of the publication of the story of the play in the local newspapers a few days before its appearance in the cities of his allotted territory.

Mr. Teitel has also bought from the American Standard Company the rights to "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," featuring Sheldon Lewis, for the same territory; and "My Country 'Tis of Thee," featuring Tom Terris. He has also purchased "The Hero of France," from the Sunbeam Company, for Maryland, the District of Columbia and Washington, D. C. "The Hero of France" was also obtained by Mr. Teitel for exploitation through the Midland Film Company, Chicago, in which he is interested.

The Midland exchange will be under the management of Abe Tietel during the absence of his brother Harry, drafted for service abroad.

Southwest Art Dramas, Inc., in Larger Offices

Southwestern Art Dramas, Inc., distributors of the Art Dramas program throughout the State of Texas and the Southwestern territory, has taken larger and more convenient quarters at 1911½ Commerce street, Film Row, Dallas, Texas.

The company was forced to do this, in order to keep up with the constantly increasing business, which has expanded at a surprisingly rapid rate, under the management of F. N. Sanford, president and manager, and L. C. McHenry, vice-president and assistant manager. These men are veterans in the business of film distribution, and by strict application of their policy of fair play, cordial treatment and sound business principles have commanded the respect and gained the business of exhibitors throughout their territory.

Announcement is also made by this company of the acquisition of James J. Harvey, well known salesman throughout the New Orleans territory, to do special work and help exhibitors with Art Dramas in that section. Mr. Harvey has an enviable record and is one of the best-liked film men in New Orleans. He was formerly connected with the Central Feature Film Company of New Orleans.

Hoffman Buys "One Hour"

"One Hour" in six reels, a sequel to "Three Weeks," has been sold by Harry Rapf to M. H. Hoffman, Inc., New York City, who now controls the entire American rights to the picture.

"For originality of treatment," said P. V. R. Key, sales manager for M. H. Hoffman, Inc., "'One Hour' will arrest and hold the spectator's interest to a degree requiring a free use of adjectives. Daring, yet restrained, this picture is likely to continue to cause much discussion.

"While there are several big situations in "One Hour" there is one which is of such outstanding importance as to take precedence over all others. Beautifully handled, it imparts a thrill. Zeene Keefe, who plays the role of a foreign princess living in the northern woods of America, and Alan Hale, are the players who figure in this scene.

"Harry Rapf, who produced the picture, has done nothing finer."

Mammouth Buys "Ages" for Jersey

The Mammouth Film Company has bought from the Ogden Pictures Corporation the rights to "The Lust of the Ages," featuring Lillian Walker, for northern New Jersey. Jesse J. Goldberg of the Ogden company conducted negotiations with Franklyn E. Backer, president of the Mammouth Company, for the sale of the picture.

Ditmars for Indiana and Illinois

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager Educational Film Corporation of America, announces that he has closed two more states on the Ditmars animal pictures, "The Living Book of Nature." Metro Service Pictures, Inc., of Chicago, will handle the state of Illinois and the H. Lieber Company of Indianapolis, have obtained the rights of Indiana.

Sawyer and Lubin Buy "Warrior"

A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, acting for the General Enterprises, Inc., 1600 Broadway, New York, closed contracts last week with Harry Raver whereby the General Enterprises become the owners of the United States and Canadian rights for Raver's Italian picture, "The Warrior."

"The Warrior" played to four weeks' capacity business at the Criterion theatre in the midst of the hot weather. Mr. Raver had many offers for rights but stood out for a sale of the whole territory in one lump.

The General Enterprises, Inc., plans to put over a big advertising campaign and then parcel the territory out on a state rights basis. Advertising matter is being prepared which will include twenty life-size enlargements done in colors.

Maciste, the giant hero of "Cabiria," is featured in "The Warrior," and some of his stunts brought cheers from the audiences at the Criterion. He is also a comedian.

The General Enterprises plan to secure two more big specials now in the making and they will enter the open market on a big scale.

"Lust of the Ages" Big State Rights Feature, Says Goldberg

JESSIE GOLDBERG, who is exploiting "The Lust of the Ages" for the Ogden Film Corporation, has the following to say:

"Many pictures are produced without a thought given to their final sales channels. If a film is intended for state rights' market it should be conceived, made and sold along entirely different lines than those to be followed for ordinary program work. The state rights' production must be more impressive, more spectacular than the program production. It should be the giant among films on the market.

"When I was called into conference by the Ogden Film Corporation as to the proper methods of handling their product and the proper market for its exploitation, the question was whether "The Lust of the Ages" is a program or state rights feature. This production would have fallen down on the program. It is too big for other than the state rights market. When the idea for the production is conceived, then is the time to determine whether the production is to be offered for program or state rights market.

"'The Lust of the Ages' was produced by a comparatively unknown concern, the Ogden Film Corporation, but in the short time in which they have been in the field they have produced a picture worth while and one that will stand on its merits alone as an excellent state rights' feature for any territory."

Billy West Comedies Supervised Personally by Bernstein

LOUIS BERNSTEIN, president of the King-Bee Company, is a busy executive. He not only looks after the executive functions incident upon his official capacity, but he gives his personal attention to the production of the Billy West comedies.

Mr. Bernstein says that before a comedy script is passed upon by himself, the director and Billy West, the featured comedians are asked to express their opinion as to its merits; and, lastly, before a decision is reached, Nat Spitzer, the sales manager for the King-Bee Company, passes upon the script's merits from the standpoint of its selling qualities and the reception it is likely to be given by the exhibitor. Mr. Bernstein is strong on detail, it is said. He has made a careful study of efficiency methods in comedy productions and applies these methods to every phase of the business in which he is engaged.

Marie Shotwell and Dora Mill Adams have important roles. Among other players are Stanley Walpole, as the youthful lover, Tom Burrough, as the doctor, and Elean Hume as his daughter.

A trade showing has been set for September 15.

Shell-Wrecked Villages in Pathe Pictures

"In the Wake of the Huns," Authoritative Films Taken Under French Government Supervision, in New Release

UNDER the title of "In the Wake of the Huns," Pathe will release on September 23 the first authoritative pictures taken under French Government supervision of the occupation by French troops of the territory recently evacuated by the Germans after the battle of Arras. As a contribution to history as well as for its great interest and timliness this two-reel picture ranks very high.

Unlike many of the war pictures which have found their way to this country "In the Wake of the Huns" is beautifully photographed. The cameraman or cameramen who took these views were artists. By intelligent selection of foregrounds there is a wonderful effect of depth obtained in the longest "shots" as well as those with more limited backgrounds.

The first impression that the observer gains from viewing this picture is one of surprise to note how the scenes shown amplify and make clear the brief press dispatches from France as to the extent and character of the wilful devastation wrought by the Germans before their evacuation of this territory. Notable are the scenes of miles of orchards leveled to the ground to serve no military purpose but as a means to show an astounding spite.

Some villages are shown which were not under bombardment but were deliberately blown up with high explosives so that barely one stone rests upon another.

In one scene of particular havoc we see a placard left by the retreating enemy which well illustrates the inconceivable German point of view. It reads: "Nicht argern, wundern," the translation being, we suppose, "Don't be angry—just wonder."

We see cross roads wrecked with dynamite—tremendous craters which do not block the progress of the French troops as they lay their roads around them. We see the French entering towns where the Germans were in possession for nearly three years, and see the pathetic joy of the few remaining townsmen and women who turn out to welcome their fellow men back to their native land.

Dr. E. A. Salisbury's First Color Films of Revolution

DR. EDWARD A. SALISBURY is returning to this country with what are declared to be the first pictures in color of a revolution ever taken. The doctor is believed to be a passenger on the steamer Siberia Marue and about to arrive at a Pacific port. He has made an extensive tour through China and Japan for Prixma.

From present indications, backed by the assurances from this noted photographer-explorer, Dr. Salisbury has not only obtained the most valuable records ever photographed in these countries, but he has preserved for the first time in color, the customs, habits and costumes of these interesting peoples of the Orient.

Dr. Salisbury had the good fortune to be in Pekin at the time of the recent uprising. Concerning this he cabled Carl H. Pierce recently: "I have the only camera here. Have fine close-ups of the fighting, bursting shells, etc. Large footage," following this up with another message: "My camera is the only one in Pekin during all the trouble and I have taken several thousand feet and am still taking. It is all in color. Taken for The Prizma, Inc."

The Prizma people are enthusiastically awaiting Dr. Salisbury's arrival, because it is expected that these views of bursting shells and other battle scenes will give Americans and the public at large a better idea of actual fighting conditions as they exist than anything yet offered for the screen.

In the letter just received, telling of his departure from the Orient, Dr. Salisbury adds: "I am enclosing some pictures I have taken with a small Graflex. I believe no one else ever took or cared to take the chances I have to obtain these pictures, and you can bet that this lot of moving picture material from the front will be the finest lot ever taken in a battlefield. I hope to see some trouble tomorrow as the approaching Republican troops are just outside of the wall and say they are coming in tomorrow.

"I am sending these by a special courier to Tinsin so that they can reach you promptly."

Poster Making Shown in Pathe-International Picture

"The Making of a War Poster," from the time the models first start to pose until the finished product is taken from the lithographer's presses, is shown in an educational film produced by International and released by Pathe on August 26. Simultaneously with the release of the picture thousands of these posters will be shown on walls throughout the country.

There are said to be many remarkable things in connection with the making of this poster, which was done by Albert Sterner on a special commission from the Navy Department. The poster is entitled "Over There," and shows Columbia pointing across the Atlantic with a marine by her side.

In the making of lithographs it is customary for the artist to draw an original sketch, which is transferred to stone in the plant of the lithographer. In this instance, however, Mr. Sterner drew the picture on the stone, which weighs half a ton.

Whitman Cartoons to Be Educational Films

V. I. and B. C. Whitman announce that they have an agreement with E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, to produce cartoons.

Their cartoons have made quite a hit during the past two months at the Rialto theatre, New York. V. I. Whitman said this theatre received inquiries from exhibitors all over the country desiring to know where they could procure these cartoons. He added:

"We therefore felt that we had to tie up with some company that could give them proper distribution. We have watched the rapid growth of the Educational Films Corporation of America, and when Mr. Hammons told us the plan of distribution they had been using so successfully with their other pictures, we decided that they were the proper company to work for.

"We will not only make cartoons similar to those shown at the Rialto theatre, but, we are also going to make burlesque cartoons on a great many of the pictures released by the Educational Films Corporation of America."

Wide Range of Topics in Selig World Library Issue

The Selig World Library No. 17, released in General Film service on Wednesday, September 5, pictures the famous beach resorts on our Atlantic Coast and the homes of millionaires at Newport.

The mussel pearl industry is another interesting picture. Fishermen drag mussels from the bed of White river, Arkansas and the value of pearls discovered amounts to thousands of dollars yearly. Out of the shells pearl buttons are made and this is the most profitable part of the industry.

In Africa the wife must be her husband's barber. The primitive method of pulling out the hairs is still in practice.

Java possesses a soil of astonishing fertility and a vegetation unsurpassed in its luxuriance. One of the chief articles of export is sugar. Preparing the soil, the plant, the harvest of sugar cane, the manufacture of sugar.

Universal to Aid New York Safety Campaign

New York state's automobile bureau, under the supervision of the secretary of state, Francis W. Hugo, has enlisted the Universal Screen Magazine as a channel of distribution of the "Safety First" films designed to cut down the number of auto accidents.

The pictures, to be released shortly, were taken in New York city under the direction of C. L. Grant, manager of publicity for the secretary of state's office. They show right and wrong methods of boarding and alighting from cars, etc.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeL. Berg

WHERE LABOR IS CHEAP

Slaves of the machine our artisans may be. But what of those who slave because there are no machines to lighten labor and increase production? In "China and the Chinese No. 5" (Educational Films Corporation), we see conditions of labor strikingly unlike our own. Whether the industry be one that women share, as the spinning and weaving of cotton, or a man's job of rope making, hand and foot take the place of steam and electricity in supplying power to drive the machine.

Perhaps the sombre round of daily toil makes a demand for pomp and circumstance in everything that interrupts it. Certainly the funeral procession of a rich man, with thousands of paid mourners, banners and images, and joss men soliciting offerings, appears to the foreign onlooker at least as an interesting and diverting spectacle,—circus and bread for the drudging multitudes.

GUNS THAT KICK; KICKERS THAT HAMMER

"As iron workers, we are good dancers," say the Dolly Sisters (Universal Current Events 16), as they sit astride a girder on a New York skyscraper. One might almost imagine, from the professional overalls and the ease with which they wield a hammer, that they might make good on the first-named job.

Fellows that really do the business, however, are the great guns that guard our coast. One never tires of watching the huge monsters heave up and over, deliver their thundering defiance, and settle ponderously back, ready for the next charge.

This issue of Current Events gives us glimpses of our foreign visitors when the Russian diplomats view a parade of our Grand Army men, and the representatives of that bravest of nations, Belgium, are welcomed to New York.

A pleasing innovation is the sprightly humor of the captions, whenever humor is in place.

BOBBY'S BRAVERY

Something went awry at the Vitagraph Studios when this latest Bobby story was released. Our hero dreamed dreams, saw visions, most pleasing visions of himself in a becoming suit of shining armor going forth to the rescue of hapless damsels. And when that pearl beyond all price, his wonderful "Teacher," seemed in mortal danger of abduction at the hands of a cruel ruffian, Bobby rallied his faithful band and effected a spectacular rescue. But alas, Bobby's opinion of the ruffian and Teacher's did not seem to be the same, and poor Bobby had to see her depart on the arm of the khaki-clad villain. This is where Miss Aida should have come to the consolation of the downcast youth. Miss Aida, however, has no part in this last picture, and we miss her greatly.

GREAT FIRS FROM LITTLE CONE SEEDS GROW

When it comes to Reel Life No. 72, we are going to please ourselves. We are not going to tell you about the Shetland pony no bigger than a rocking horse, or of how they collect the eggs of the loggerhead turtle, and even the poor turtle herself, basking in the slushy sand. We are going to take all of our allotted space to talk about the excellent series of pictures showing the United States Forestry Bureau at work repopulating the hillsides of the northwest which have been denuded by fires. We see cones being sought, even from the hiding places of squirrels, to furnish seeds, we watch the care with which the seeds are sown and tended, the first growth of tiny trees, the transporting of two-year old nurslings, and finally the men at work replanting in the devastated district. A beautiful sunset picture, and another taken at dawn complete a most interesting and attractive subject.

SNOW? WHO CARES?

Some stupid animal folk may roll up and sleep the Winter months through, but if they live at the New York Zoo, the chances are they will keep awake so as not to miss any of the fun. Ditmars' "The Animals in Winter" (Educational Films Corporation) is a record of jolly times among our animal visitors. The shaggy buffalo trot out in the snow at feeding time as though it made not the slightest difference. In a seventy-mile blizzard, the baby wild goat grows so venturesome that it has to be butted back into shelter beside its mother. For the polar bear life takes on a new aspect when his sensitive nose tells him a wintry storm is on the way. Only one creature seems to mind the cold. Baby gorillas, even if born thousands of miles from the equator, need special protection. And get it, in a manner surprising and laughable.

BUCKING A GLACIER

If the venturesome boat that took Al I. Smith and his party through ice-infested waters to the very foot of Miles Glacier, Alaska, didn't actually buck the ice river, it was because the river got cold feet (no, warm ones in this instance) and started to fall into the bay. The camera that pictured "Alaska Wonders in Motion, No. 3" (Educational Films Corporation) caught one four-hundred foot mass in the act of breaking away. Great is the fall thereof, and tremendous the waters that are hurled up and about until the monster settles into place, seven-eighths of him beneath the surface.

Preceding this theatrical display, we have fine glimpses of swimming salmon, of the thousand-dollar bridge over Copper River, known to readers of Rex Beach, and of the Kenai Esquimaux.

BONE DRY, PERHAPS, BUT IRRIGATED

We once knew a man who owned a potato and onion farm. Each year the onions and potatoes came up in handsome rows, and each year, before market day could come, they died of drought. So the man dug down in his jeans and invested in a sprinkler irrigator. After which the heavens opened, and the onions, potatoes, and cabbages grew so large that no one would pay the price for them. Perhaps the moral of the proverbial umbrella is reversed, and it always rains if you have a sprinkler. We thought of our friends as we watched Reel Life No. 71, which gives several views of such a sprinkler irrigating a fifteen-acre farm.

Reel Life continues its series of pictures dealing with the handling of the mail, devoting this issue to those departments handling registry, parcels post, and money orders. The importance of this last department may be judged by the army of clerks engaged in transacting the many details of the business. The mysterious machines which actually sort cards are shown. The Senses in Business and Pleasure afford interesting and amusing contrasts.

FOOD FOR MILLIONS

To-day comes the welcome news that five-cent bread is within sight. Pictures of the great American harvest, in the Selig Library, No. 16, would seem to confirm this. Beyond the screen we seem to see endless processions of the monster reapers and binders, gathering in mile upon mile of grain, thousands of threshers piling up huge mounds of wheat kernels, and a parade of steamers on the Great Lakes, laden almost to sinking with the precious foodstuff.

Then, as if that were not enough to feed the world, comes still another means of adding to our store, or rather, of preventing its spoliation, a poison for the grass hoppers that consume our corn. A toothsome confection of bran, water, orange juice, and arsenic is spread on the growing plants, and before Mr. Grasshopper has had time to get down to the salad course, he has curled up his toes in death. A stretch of corn so treated stands as a happy contrast to the adjoining field, completely divested of growing things by the swarming pests.

PANNED OYSTERS, ARMY STYLE

Is your boy in a training camp? Does he ever tell you the things you want to know? Ours doesn't, not even when we ask him pointblank questions. So imagine our pleasure when we saw him, or maybe other young medicos, learning how to bandage arms, rescuing comrades fallen on the field, and administering first aid. Then, the day's duties ended, they gather in a jolly group each with his tiny camp fire and cooking kit. One could almost smell the coffee, and the sight of oysters, curling up in the hot pans, made us glad that the R days had come again.

Nor is this reel (Selig, American War News) confined to the doings of recruits. There are pictures of submarine chasers, painted like the waves of the sea, and of our French allies.

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

Progressive Exhibitors Get Goldwyn First Runs

Expensive Exploitation Planned in Los Angeles, Where Rialto Will First Show Pictures—Successful Bidders in Other Sections

JOSEPH GROSSMAN, lessee and manager of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, has signed a contract for Goldwyn Pictures in Ohio's largest city. He inaugurates the Goldwyn first-run service in Cleveland on September 9 with Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," by Margaret Mayo, and is beginning the greatest promotion campaign in the history of amusements that has ever been recorded in his city.

Eagerness of big exhibitors to inaugurate their Fall season with Goldwyn Pictures has resulted in the pre-releasing of "Polly of the Circus," Margaret Mayo's celebrated play, starring Mae Marsh, in several cities at the solicitation of managers and owners of theatres.

Robert Lieber, the Indianapolis exhibitor, will begin his season at the Circle theatre with "Polly of the Circus" on August 27, and Jones, Linnick and Schaefer will play this beautiful attraction, beginning the same day, in the Colonial theatre, Chicago.

Goldwyn Pictures will be shown first in Baltimore under pleasing auspices, for C. E. Whitehurst, president and general director of the New theatre, Lexington and Park streets, has closed a contract for all Goldwyn productions.

The New theatre begins its Goldwyn releases simultaneously with their presentation in other large cities of the country, "Polly of the Circus" being presented on September 9 and "Baby Mine" being the offering on September 23.

In Calgary, Alberta, Can., N. B. Wright, manager of the Regent theatre and one of the foremost exhibitors in the Dominion, is carrying half-page advertisements in every newspaper in Calgary and spending several thousand dollars in a period of three weeks merely to tell the Calgary public of the Goldwyn stars and productions. Mr. Wright has contracted for all Goldwyn productions for a period of one year and releases "Polly of the Circus," Margaret Mayo's play, starring Mae Marsh, on September 9.

"Double Trouble," the first Fairbanks reissue, will be shown in the first run houses on the week of September 2. Margery Wilson, Gladys Brockwell and Olga Grey are the other featured players in this production.

Long Run for "Honor System"

The record for long runs, and it is also said for big prices, will be broken for Philadelphia picture theatres by the "Honor System" of Fox, which has been booked by Stanley Mastbaum for the Stanley theatre for a first-run of two weeks, beginning August 27, after which it will run a whole week at the Victoria.

The Stanley will now run all the Fox Standard releases for first showings in Philadelphia.

William Fox's Plays Force Full Week Runs

William Fox's "Jack and the Beanstalk" will be shown at the Academy of Music, New York, the week of September 2. "The Spy" will follow for the week of September 9. During the week of September 23, "The Conqueror," with William Farnum, will be the bill.

The policy of full week runs at the Academy of Music is new.

Middle West Houses Taking All Patriotic Pictures

Patriotic pictures are at their height in the Middle West, as are all news reels showing the United States soldiers both at home and abroad. Twenty-one contracts in one day is a record made last week by the Universal exchange in Omaha, Neb., for the Animated Weekly, Current Events and Screen Magazine releases. All four downtown first-run houses in Sioux City, Ia., are using these pictures.

Dealers who furnish theatre supplies report a heavy demand for slides showing flags, pictures of President Wilson, the American eagle and other patriotic subjects.

"The Slacker," shown at the Boyd, big downtown "legitimate" house, by Exhibitor Jules Rachman of the Grand, followed in the footsteps of "The Tanks at the Battle of Ancre" as a success. Bands playing patriotic pieces marched through the streets advertising the show, and the various nights were "benefits" for the Red Cross, Boy Scouts and other patriotic organizations. The picture was a big success in Omaha.

Vita's Reissues Said to Be in Demand

Albert E. Smith, president of the Greater Vitagraph Company, received a gratifying report last week from the distributing organization, Vitagraph, relative to "Favorite Film" features, under which name Vitagraph is re-issuing some of the best pictures in its library.

"The bookings on the Favorite Film features," as they are called, "jumped 100 per cent last week," according to the report sent to Mr. Smith.

"Not a Cancellation" Record for "Fatal Ring" Serial

A serial without a cancellation is a record set by Pathe in "The Fatal Ring," the chapter photoplay starring Pearl White, which was released July 8. Despite the hottest weather the country has seen in years, hundreds of exhibitors from all sections of America have reported capacity business on the days they showed this serial. In addition to the fact that there have been no cancellations on "The Fatal Ring" by exhibitors each week's bookings set new records for the serial that is pleasing motion picture fans and is bringing big returns to the box offices of the theatres.

Under the caption "'Fatal Ring' Most Successful Serial," the New York American Motion Picture Reviewer writes as follows:

"No motion picture serial produced in recent years has attracted as widespread interest and such favorable comments from exhibitors and the public in general as Pathe's 'The Fatal Ring,' in which Pearl White is the bright particular star."

THE WORLD MARKET

Metro Pictures Secured in East by Howells

The Howells Corporation has secured the Metro program for distribution in Japan and the Dutch East Indies. Last week "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" series was shipped to the Dutch East Indies along with "The Round-Up." David P. Howells, in cabled reports from the Far East to the home office, states his tour has been most satisfactory in point of business done. He expects to return in several months.

To License Exporters

A ruling handed down late last week in Washington was to the effect that in future all exporters of film must obtain a license from the Bureau of Licenses, Washington, D. C.

Schlesinger Takes Charge of Inter Ocean Ad Department

Leon Schlesinger is now in full charge of the advertising and publicity department of the Inter Ocean Film Corporation. He joined the firm last December.

Schlesinger is well known throughout the trade. Previous to coming to the New York office of Inter Ocean he was for three years looking after the interest of H. J. Brock's theatres in Canada.

Inter Ocean Deals

H. J. Brock, of the Inter Ocean, last week announced the placing of a number of World-Brady features in Japan, and in addition the sale of "The Whip" for Scandinavia.

Beecroft, Back from Tour, Sounds Warning Note

Exporter Returns After Perilous Trip—States Conditions in Foreign Market Have Changed Immeasurably—Closes Contracts

CHESTER BEECROFT, of 501 Fifth avenue, New York, who has been touring Europe in the interests of his film exporting and importing business for the last four months, returned to America on the Scandinavian-American liner Oscar II, landing at his home port on August 30. Mr. Beecroft left New York on the steamer which carried General Pershing and the first American expeditionary forces to the battle front in France and witnessed the entrance of the American commander and his staff into London and later on into Paris.

It is said that Mr. Beecroft is the only American commercial traveler and possibly the only traveler of any class whatsoever whose passport shows the successful entrance and departure to and from England and France, a return to and second departure from England, then Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Russia, during the last two years of the war. In making this voyage over more than 12,000 miles of water Mr. Beecroft passed through the majority of the most dangerous submarine and mine areas in the world, including two trips across the Atlantic by different routes, two through St. George's Channel, two across the Straits of Dover, one through the Irish Sea and North Atlantic, twice across the North Sea and once through the Skager-Rak and Kattegat.

In course of these voyages, some of which were made in small freight boats under the most trying circumstances, Mr. Beecroft's vessel was twice attacked and once sunk by submarines.

When interviewed at his office at 501 Fifth avenue, New York, Mr. Beecroft said that conditions in the foreign film markets had changed so rapidly and so completely during the last year that few on this side possessed any definite knowledge of the subject and that many mistaken impressions had gained credence here.

Many conflicting statements had been made that in many cases extraordinary prices, out of all proportion to the possibilities of the market, were being asked. Sometimes these prices were absurdly high and sometimes absurdly low, few firms or individuals, indeed, having any idea as to what kind of picture was suited to the various countries in which they were endeavoring to make a sale. It frequently happened that a product which had absolutely no chance of being placed in a certain specific market at any price at all was being held at a price which a Griffith production might possibly obtain, while a line of pictures which was peculiarly suited and which consequently would net the buyer or distributor a handsome profit was being slyly coaxed away by the "wise ones" at a figure far below its worth.

It was this state of affairs, so unfair to the American manufacturers of today and so inimical to the American product of the future, that determined Mr. Beecroft to go abroad despite all hazards, to study first-hand and to learn from actual observation the exact conditions which obtained in the principal European markets. Mr. Beecroft found amongst other things, that which will be of particular interest to picture producers here, namely, that the film business is far from enjoying full confidence in certain official circles.

The American manufacturers, he says, should use the utmost caution and make the most thorough investigation, since an unfortunate association, however innocent the action of the seller may be at that time, is almost certain to have a most serious effect upon the standing and future activities of the manufacturer or seller himself.

While abroad Mr. Beecroft closed several important contracts and considers his journey to have been even more successful than anticipated. He no doubt has many friends in the business who will be glad to hear of his safe return, as his association with the film industry dates back to the pioneer days, during which he has held executive positions with the leading concerns.

Growing Demand for Standard Export Contracts

Claim Is Made That Indiscriminate Selling by Manufacturers Leads to Pirating and Consequent Loss of Business by Established Exporters

THE necessity for establishment of a standard, equitable contract between manufacturers and exporters, as suggested by Carle E. Carlton, of Crest Pictures, in an article in the Motion Picture News of September 8, was further argued last week by several prominent exporters.

It is pointed out by those engaged in buying and selling film for the foreign market, that under present conditions they have no assurance of sole right to a picture even when they have purchased it for a certain territory, on account of lawless pirating by men outside the industry's pale, and also through the laxness of some producing firms. Some of these corporations, it is said, sell foreign rights to undependable parties without investigating their status, and in this way prints are unlawfully made and then distributed in territory bought by a reputable firm. The usual result of a protest on the part of a buyer, who in good faith purchased the picture, is, according to Mr. Carleton, a reply to the effect that it is up to him to protect himself and put the pirate out of business.

In connection with the suggestion for an equitable and protecting contract, a suggestion which may develop into a concerted movement, according to report, Benjamin F. Howells, of the Howells Corporation, said last week:

"It is absolutely necessary for the producer to know with whom he is doing business in the foreign market. The integrity and standing of the buyer should be investigated. Otherwise, it is not safe to dispose of prints of pictures for far away countries, for it is then possible for an irresponsible buyer to dupe prints and send them to other territories. The result on the parties who buy the picture rights for those sections in good faith can be imagined.

"There are so many stolen films placed in the Far East from London and New York and so many copies there, that prices are cut grossly."

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

THOMAS H. INCE had his coat off this week and operated the megaphone, personally directing a number of scenes for the first Dorothy Dalton-Paramount release, which is in charge of Roy Neill. Thurston Hall, well-known leading mon of the stage, plays the opposite lead with Miss Dalton, and William Conklin has been engaged for an important part. Others appearing in this picture are Adele Farrington and Dorcas Matthews.

Director Neill has been working with the technical staff which has reproduced Shephard's Hotel at Cairo, Egypt, from photographs taken by Neill when he was with the Maurice Bandman company, which toured Egypt and the Orient a number of years ago.

Script and settings for the next Charles Ray-Paramount release are now being prepared and the actual work of filming this will be started in a few days under the direction of Victor Schertzinger. The supporting cast has not been selected for the next Ray subject.

Hart Working Fast

William S. Hart staged a genuine Western county fair for his first Artcraft, "The Narrow Trail," this week, and in it used approximately 500 people, a big troop of cowboys, and a number of freaks, exhibits and a big midway. A half-mile track, which completely encircled the fair attractions, served as the principal place of interest, where a great throng in grandstands witnessed the Western running races, in which Fritz, the pinto pony, ridden by Mr. Hart, carried away the laurels. Around this race hinges the identity of the bad man, and following it he makes an unusually clever getaway with the prize. The county fair days were indeed strenuous days for everyone who is connected with the making of this production. A number of cameras were used continuously to get different shots, and Mr. Hart required several assistants to aid him in managing the big crowd. Sylvia Bremer, who plays the opposite lead, is conspicuous in a number of these scenes when she aids Hart in his getaway.

Mr. Hart spent two days of the early part of the week in San Francisco, where he made scenes on the waterfront, showing an attempted shanghaing. While at the hotel in San Francisco, he was called upon by a kindergarten teacher and seventy-five of her children, and they for an hour entertained him with songs and recitations.

Fairbanks Coming to New York

The Fairbanks-Artcraft company returned early this week from Riverside ranch near Laramee, Wyo., after spending two weeks filming Western scenes, in which more than a score of cowboys took part. The subject is now referred to at the studio as "The Man from Painted Post," and this will in all probability be the title. At this ranch, which consists of 160,000 acres, there are more than twenty-five hundred thousand head of cattle. There was a continuous contest held during the two weeks the company was in the North, and a purse of $300 was divided among the cowboys as prizes. Sam Brownell and Tom Grimes won the greater part of the money. Fairbanks, Director Joseph Heneberry and Millard Webb served as judges.

Upon the completion of the Western subject, Mr. Fairbanks and company, including Eileen Percy, John Emerson, John Fairbanks, Joseph Heneberry, Victor Fleming, Glen McWilliams and Bennie Ziedman will leave for New York, where the opening scenes will be made for the next Fairbanks photoplay, as yet unnamed. The company will go by way of New Orleans, where they hope to secure a number of scenes. From New Orleans they will take the boat to New York. The photoplay was written by Anita Loos, and provides a number of scenes of New York harbor, Fifth avenue and Broadway. A portion of the story is laid in Italy. The company will spend only three days in New York, and it is estimated the cost of the trip will amount to approximately $60,000.

The Mary Pickford-Artcraft company is again absent from the studio on a trip to Santa Barbara, where Director Marshall Neilan is filming a number of scenes.

Mary MacLaren Film Finished

The Current Cub Comedy, filmed at the Horsley studio is unique, in that the usual situation is reversed. Jerry, taken by George Ovey, in all past releases has found it necessary to beat a hasty retreat when a cop put in an appearance, but in this instance, Jerry is the cop, the title being "Officer Jerry." George, who has always played the desperado role, likewise reverses the usual by appearing as a clergyman. Beulah Booker plays the feminine lead.

The second Mary MacLaren subject has been completed by Director Tom Ricketts, and this company is taking a brief vacation pending the arrival of Mr. Horsley, who is personally supervising preparation of all scenarios for this producing unit.

The Baby Marie Osborne subject, "The Child of M'sieu," promises to have a number of new photographic effects which were worked out by Director Harrish Ingraham and his cameraman, William Noble. This will be completed within a few days.

Fox "Vamp" on Second Subject

Production of the second Theda Bara super picture to be made at the west coast Fox Studios, began Monday, and is from an original photoplay by Richard Ordinski, former producer at the Metropolitan Opera House at New York. This photoplay deals with the recent Russian revolution with Czar Nicholas a conspicuous character. The filming will be done under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, and already the main stage of the Fox plant contains a number of settings prepared for the subject. Many of these are of a very elaborate nature. The Bara spectacle, "Cleopatra," is being given its final editing this week, and will probably be shipped to the eastern laboratories within a few days. This is being done under the supervision of Director Edwards and Miss Bara.

A. L. Selig, who came to the coast with the Theda Bara Company to prepare special publicity matter for "Cleopatra" spectacle, is leaving Sunday for the east to supervise the publicity matter for the premiere of the picture. En route Mr. Selig will visit Salt Lake City, Denver, Omaha, Kansas City, El Paso and other important cities. He has been succeeded at the studio by Stuart Acheson, former New York newspaper man, who has been affiliated with the Fox eastern publicity department for some time. He has arrived at the coast after a trip which provided stop-overs at some of the principal cities along the northern route to the coast, including Seattle, Portland and San Francisco.

Walsh Suffers from Strenuous Work

August is proving a very fortunate month for George Walsh, who is working under the direction of his brother, R. A. While making the last scene for his recent director, Richard Stanton, Walsh had a bit of business which provided he should leap from a second-story window, knock a man from a horse and alight in the saddle and ride away. In this act he cut a deep gash in his arm on a piece of brass over the horn of the saddle. This week, while a scene was being taken in a dentist's chair, he waved his hand too strenuously, hitting the alleged dentist's arm, driving a sharp tool into the flesh just above his eye. Very fortunately the instrument did not penetrate the eyeball.

Douglas Gerrard is playing the lead opposite Gladys Brockwell in "Conscience," or "The Soul of Satan," which is being directed now by Bertram Bracken. Bertram Grassby takes the heavy role which is one of the three leads. This is a present-day society drama, and a very elaborate wedding scene in which almost 100 people were used was staged Friday. The flower bell and flowers used to strew the floor of a beautiful parlor in which the ceremony was performed, cost several hundred dollars. The wedding scene is one of the prettiest filmed on the coast.

New Fox "Kiddie" Picture

The Fox Studio is now the gathering place of scores of kiddies in the garb and make-up of sons and daughters of the Cherry Blossom empire. They are appearing in "The Mikado," which is being filmed by the Franklin Brothers. This has Virginia Corbin and Francis Carpenter in the principal roles, and is an adaptation of the light opera of the stage. A greater portion of the exterior lot at the Fox Studio is now in use for a Japanese village which has been built for this subject. Another very large setting is being built in one of the beautiful gardens at Pasadena.

Improvements now being made at the Fox plant include the erection of a mammoth enclosed stage, and an attractive bungalow, both of which are to be the home of the Fox kiddies while at the studio. The new stage will be used exclusively by the Franklin Brothers, and their troop of children, and the bungalow will contain nursery, dressing rooms with shower baths and a modern school room equipped fully. School will open here early in September at the same time the Los Angeles schools take up.

It is stated at the Fox Studio that scenarios suitable for Gladys Brockwell and George Walsh are in big demand. Manuscripts should be forwarded to John J. Glavey, scenario editor.

Triangle for Outdoor Plays

Considerable attention is being given the production of photoplays requiring mountain and sea settings at this time by producing units of the Triangle. General Manager H. O. Davis appreciates this is harvest time for the making of such scenes, and that filming of them is practically impossible in the winter. Four companies are this week working at Hartville.

E. Mason Hopper has completed the filming of his first Triangle and has taken up the direction of "The Firefly of Tough Luck." Walt Whitman is to continue as one of the featured players of the Hopper company, and Miss Alma Rueben will be leading woman of this subject. The photoplay is of the nature of a Western drama calling for a number of desert scenes, which will be made near here.

The first Triangle subject which will offer Roy Stewart as star is "The Devil's Dodger." In this Stewart takes the role of a bad man who fears neither man nor beast, but is tamed by a mere slip of a girl, but not until after many exciting scenes. Stewart has been playing leading man parts for the past year, following three years' experience before the camera, a greater portion of which time he appeared in heavy roles. Critics at the studio are very enthusiastic over his first picture.

Child Picture on "T" Program

Child pictures are to be made for the Triangle program, work having been started on one this week at the Culver City Studios under the direction of William V. Mong. This will probably be titled "Wild Shumac." While the subject has a Canadian Northwest Mounted Police atmosphere, it has a great many scenes that require the children, principals selected being little George Stone and Beulah and Selma Burns. Marjory Wilson plays the featured role, that of a gypsy maid, and among other exciting experiences, there is one scene in which she is taken from a jail to be burned at the stake. George Chesebro is the leading man.

Josephine Sedgwick, for more than eighteen months with Universal and for the past month with Triangle, where she played an important part in "Ashes of Hope," is to in the future play leading woman parts, and has been cast to play opposite Roy Stewart in a western production now ready for filming.

Jack Dillon, director and leading man, who has been identified with the west coast industry, has been engaged by the Triangle, and will direct Olive Thomas in her next photoplay. Until recently Mr. Dillon was with the Sennett Keystone organization.

Keystone Studio to Move

The Triangle-Keystone forces, which will be moved to the Culver City Studios as soon as improvements are made there which will provide for sufficient stage space, was increased this week by the addition of Harry Williams, who will serve as director. Williams has been on the coast almost two years, and during that time has served continuously as writer and director of Keystone comedies. Prior to entering the motion picture field he was a song writer and was prominent in vaudeville. Max Asher will in all probability be featured lead of the first Williams made Keystone. The author-director is using a recent experience at Bear Lake as a basis for his first story. Work will be started by this producing unit next week.

Quite a material change has been decided upon in respect to all Triangle-Keystones released after October 1. The comedies are to have a genuine story with important situations, and "gags" will be but incidental comedy business. To make this possible, working scripts are being provided by the scenario staff, headed by Albert Glassmire, and including Walter McNamara, Walter Fredericks, Harry Wulze and Anthony Caldeway.

Myrtle Reeves, who has appeared in Balboa, Lasky and Bluebird subjects, has been engaged by the Triangle-Keystone, and will play leading roles opposite Jay Dwiggins in comedies made under the direction of Henry Kernan.

Alatia Martin, the Dallas, Texas, girl who was one of the winners of the Photoplay Magazine beauty and brains contest, has been selected for a featured part opposite Ray Griffith in a Triangle-Keystone now being made by Director Reggie Morris. Miss Martin has played in a number of Keystone releases, and from the first has been given important parts.

National Film Locates

Director Scott Sidney of the producing forces of the National Film Corporation, has found it advantageous to use locations at Morgan City, Louisiana, instead of Iberia, and the company has transferred its activities to that city for the filming of African scenes for "Tarzan of The Apes." At Morgan City the producing organization was given every aid possible. They have been donated the use of a large warehouse with trackage on one side, and a wharf on the other, which will also serve as a large store room where a force of technical people are at work.

Director Sidney has heeded the request of the merchants of Morgan City, and will film the larger scenes on Sunday. This will afford all an opportunity to see motion pictures made, and accomodate the employers of the negros. In the past few months he reports many negros have gone north, and the wage scale there is now one dollar and seventy-five cents per day for cannibals instead of the former eight bits.

President William Parsons has engaged M. J. Doner to supervise some special work required for this company's nine-reel production, "Tarzan of The Apes." Mr. Doner was formerly affiliated with the Triangle Studio at Culver City, and has been associated with several of the most successful companies of the coast.

Player Badly Hurt

William Shanley, member of the producing force at Morgan City, was shot while working on location, and is in a serious condition at the general hospital in that city. Report from the producing company states that Shanley was impersonating an ape in a tree and was ready to leap to the ground and kidnap the youthful Tarzan, impersonated by Gordon Griffith, when a shot rang out and he fell at the feet of Director Scott Sidney, who was giving him his last instructions. The scene was being made near the Mississippi, and a man in a boat not knowing a motion picture company was working there, is accredited with firing the shot.

William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation, is on his way to Morgan City, La., where he will spend several days with Director Scott Sidney and company while enroute to Chicago and New York. He will return to Los Angeles in the course of a couple of weeks.

Doings of Universal Players

Helen Gibson will next work in a three-reel drama of a railroad type, which is an adaptation from the Frank H. Spearman story, "The Run of the Yellow Mail." This has been adapted by R. A. Dillon, and a cast of unusual strength, which includes Val Paul, Buck Connors, Raymond Nye and Wadsworth Harris, has been selected.

Harry Carey and Molly Malone are to work in a five-reel Western, "Bucking Broadway," which was written by George Hively. This is a decidedly Western story with many thrillers, which is being directed by Jack Ford.

The next Ida May Park picture, "The Boss of Powderville," has Dorothy Phillips as star, with William Stowell and Jack Mulhall as the principal supports. This is an adaptation of a magazine story of the same name.

Singer's Midgets, a troupe of seventeen liliputians, were guests at Universal City during the past week, and personally entertained by Henry McRae, production manager. None of the troupe are over three feet in height, and the average weight is thirty-five pounds.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are playing diplomats for warring principalities ruled by a troupe of crowned heads that might have come from Long Beach. It is titled "The King Was Crowned," and was written by Fred Palmer, and is directed by Harry Edwards.

Mae Murray's Lead

"The Wolf and His Mate," a five-reel drama with a backwoods atmosphere, is in production at U City and Louise Lovely is the featured player supported by Hart Hoxie, specially engaged for this subject, Hector Dion, Betty Schade, Little George French, and others. The story for this photoplay was written by Julian Maier and adapted for the screen by Doris Schroeder.

Stuart Paton and his band of serial makers are now at work on the fourteenth episode of the "Gray Ghost," giving them but two more to make after this is completed.

Robert Leonard has under his direction as a supporting player for Mae Murray, Paul Nicholson, well known on the musical comedy stage. This will be Nicholson's debut in picture, it may be said, for his only experience before the camera was in 1898, when he appeared in a subject made by the old Biograph Company. His experience on the stage began when he was six month's old, and he has been before the footlights almost continuously ever since.

Christie Studios Busy

The Christie Company has a big aggregation at work this week in a comedy directed by Al E. Christie, which features Betty Compson and Jay Belasco, with a cast that includes Harry Rattenberry, Jean Hathaway, Gene Corey, Edward Clark and William Pollard, and a bevy of school girls. The plot revolves about Betty's parents trying to break up a love affair between the girl and Jay by sending her to a boarding school. Complications that ensue afford good comedy situations.

This studio was the scene of a rough and tumble fight, and the property men are still finding broken furniture. The important parties were Jay Balesco and James McCormack, and the event became such a rough and tumble affair that it promises to be the talk of the studio for some time to come. The warriors are said to be the only things that remain intact.

Manager E. V. Day of the Essanay studio at Culver City, is busy with the preparation work for the filming of "Hawthorne, U.S.A.," which is to be adapted from the stage play of the same title. California scenes are decidedly appropriate for the exteriors needed in this play, and a number of big sets, including one representing Monte Carlo, will be built at the studio. James Young has been engaged to direct the filming of this subject, and while the principal players have been engaged, Mr. Day is withholding this announcement for a little later date.

Railroad Serial Half Completed

Although the Signal Company has not yet completed half of "The Lost Express" serial, the producing unit now being engaged on the seventh of the fifteen episodes, there is every indication of the belief it will be the most expensive installment picture this company has ever made. Five exterior sets are now in construction at the studio for subsequent installments, and figures compiled by Clyde Roe, technical director, show that 400 pounds of wire nails, 150,000 feet of lumber, about a mile of electric wiring, and sufficient furniture for eighty-five rooms have been used to date in addition to the several automobiles that have been smashed and the railroad cars cluttered up in wrecks.

The company has this week been working at Del Mar, an exclusive summer resort place, where eighty-seven scenes were made in and about Saratoga Inn. Director McGowan induced a number of the guests to take part in scenes with Helen Holmes, and it is stated that their combined wealth would capitalize another Standard Oil. Included in the big list of guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Belmont of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Palmer of Chicago, and the Misses Swab of Kansas City.

Record in Filming Scenes

In addition to the traveling necessary to secure scenes for the seventh episode, the company in three days this week made 180 scenes, which is a record for the organization. A number of additions have been made in the cast of the Signal Company since work was begun on this serial. This does not affect the principals, who in addition to Helen Holmes are Thos. Lingham, Wm. Brunton, Leo Maloney and Edward Hearn, who appear in all episodes of the serial. Others of the cast are Al Smith, Wm. Beherns, Andy Waldron, Charles Leonard, D. McKinnon, V. E. Whitehead, Jean Perkins, and Virgil Hart. S. A. Sues and Robert P. Phelan continue as photographers.

Rolin Hart Hit by Draft

General Manager Dwight Whiting has engaged Al Griffith to serve as technical director at the Rolin Film Company studio. Griffith comes to this organization after an experience of five years in this capacity. For a time he was with the Essanay, and later served the Rex Beach Company.

The Rolin studio, recently damaged by fire, has been completely repaired, and at the same time additional facilities added which will make possible better work.

Perhaps no film producing organization has been harder hit by the military draft than that of the Rolin Company. Dwight Whiting, who is secretary and treasurer and serves as manager, together with Hal Roach, general director and producer of Lonesome Luke Comedies, will answer the call to the colors on Sept. 5, together with Herbert Carrigan, assistant director, and Harry Pollard, comedian of the Lonesome Luke Company. The two executives are now busy with the arrangement of their business affairs, so that they will be ready to leave at the time the government requires.

Extra Vita Serial Chapters

The technical people of the Vitagraph studio, headed by Manager W. S. Smith, are assembling props used in the fifteen episode serial, "The Fighting Trail," as ten additional episodes are to be made for this picture, according to instructions received by William Duncan, who directed the original fifteen episodes, and with Carol Halloway played the lead. George Holt and Joe Ryan will continue in the additional episodes to be made.

Filming of the "Fighting Trail" will not be taken up by Director Duncan and his company until they have finished "The Tenderfoot," one of the series of five-reel subjects adapted from the Lewis tales of "Wolfville" nights. The company has been putting in strenuous hours on this film, as a number of night effects are required that can be made only at night.

Elaborate Mena Production

At the studio of the Mena Company, it is announced their first release, entitled "By Super Strategy," will require more than fifty elaborate settings in addition to many exterior locations that will be required. Scenes are laid in Egypt, Rome and French territory. The plot for the photoplay is adapted from a Bible story. Director Howard Gaye and the technical staff are progressing rapidly with the making of this subject. Mlle. Yvonne Chappella has been specially engaged to do a number of classic dances in Egyptian scenes. She is accredited with originating the Lotus dance.

The Mena Company has found the need of a pool at the studio, and this is now being constructed. When not being used for scenes, it will be at the disposal of the players.

Select Anita King's Vehicle

"The Girl Angle" a five-reel photoplay by L. V. Jefferson, has been selected as the first starring vehicle for Anita King in Horkheimer Mutual releases. It is to be made under the direction of Edgar Jones, who filmed "The Twisted Thread" serial.

Clarke Irvine, formerly correspondent for Moving Picture World in Los Angeles, who later published a small paper named Motion Picture Times, has enlisted in the stenographic service of the navy, and has been assigned to the U. S. S. Cheyenne. Irvine previously served two years in the navy. He has a wide acquaintance in the film colony.

Engage Players for New Concern

James Keene, production manager of the recently organized Pasograph Company of El Paso, Texas, arrived in Los Angeles early this week to secure players, technical people and others to take part in the making of the seven-reel subject shortly to be produced at El Paso. Mr. Keene has engaged Francis Powers, formerly affiliated with the Fine Arts producing organization, as director and writer, and Carl Von Schiller and Edith Sterling, who will play leads. Bill Clancy, of New York, is to be an important member of the cast. Mr. Keene states that work on the first production of this company will be commenced immediately upon his arrival at El Paso.

State Right Horsley Feature

W. A. S. Douglas, president of the Lasalida Film Company, has returned from an extended tour to New York and other Eastern points and is now supervising production at the Dave Horsley Studio of the Baby Marie Osborne five-reel subjects made for Pathe. Mr. Douglas reports an era of unprecedented activity in picture production and prosperity reigning with exhibitors throughout the country.

Beulah Booker has been selected to play leads opposite George Ovey in the Cub comedies to succeed Claire Alexander, who has been transferred temporarily to the Baby Marie Osborne company. Another new member of the Cub organization is John J. Hayes, who will take juvenile parts. "Jerry," George Ovey, is again at work after an absence of more than a week made necessary by a badly sprained wrist.

According to statements issued from the Horsley Studio, Dave Horsley, who is now in New York, has decided to dispose of the Mary MacDonald MacLaren subjects on a state right basis. The first, entitled "The Counterfeit Soul," according to reports from Mr. Horsley made known at the producing plant, has been sold for New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New England territories. The second Mary MacDonald MacLaren subject is now in production under the direction of Thomas Ricketts.

Lengthen Lockwood Picture

"Under Handicap," the Yorke-Metro subject starring Harold Lockwood, completed this week, is to consist of seven reels. Originally it was planned that this subject should be kept in 5,000-foot length, but during the process of filming so much good action was found in the story by Jackson Gregory that the producer decided it could not be cut to less than 7,000 feet. The story has three different parts; one shows social life in New York, another is laid on a Western ranch, and the last part pertains to a big reclamation project typical of California and Arizona a few years back. Supporting Lockwood are Vera Sisson, Lester Cuneo, William Clifford and others.

The stage of the Yorke-Metro Studio, recently destroyed by fire, has now been completely rebuilt and a big set representing the interior of a ballroom, to be used for "Paradise Garden," is being built by the studio technical staff.

Lasky Loans Player to Fox

A new Gladys Brockwell production was commenced this week by Bertram Bracken and one of the prominent players of this is Marjorie Daw, who has been loaned to the Fox Company by the Lasky organization. Mr. Bracken was formerly director for Fox at the Eastern plant, and has a number of good productions to his credit, including several in which Theda Bara was starred.

Otis Turner, who formerly directed Miss Brockwell, has completed his contract with the Fox Company, and will devote all of his attention to his business establishment in Hollywood, which supplies paints, wall paper and decorating material to studios.

Olive Thomas in "Broadway Arizona"

Director Lynn Reynolds has completed his first Triangle subject, which has Olive Thomas as star, and "Broadway Arizona" has been decided upon as its final title. The past two weeks has been spent by the company filming interior scenes at the studio, following the making of a number of exteriors at Bear Lake Valley. The plot for this pertains to incidents in the life of an actress who is forced to give up her conspicuous position among the bright lights Broadway to seek health in a Western town.

The Triangle-Keystone producing staff was decreased from five to four directors this week by the resignation of Harry McCoy, who played comedian leads in his own pictures in addition to directing. It is stated at the studio that the staff will be increased within a short time.

Peggy Pearce, who will be remembered for her work in many Keystone-Triangle releases, has been engaged by the Triangle organization and will be featured in additional subjects. It is not definitely known what director she will work under, or who will be other members of the company in which she appears.

Grace D. DeGarro, an acrobat of Sells-Floto Circus, is a new member of the Triangle-Keystone and is to be retained to train players for acrobatic scenes required. This week she has a number of Triangle-Keystone girls working on rings and trapeze in an atmosphere of a big top.

Keystone Players Drafted

William Irving, juvenile in the Reggie Morris Keystone Company, was injured this week when he fell headfirst from a second-story window to the pavement when a ledge on which he was working broke. Irving was not seriously injured, but his face was badly cut and bruised, and is holding up the production of the remainder of scenes until the cuts and bruises disappear.

Ray Griffith and George Hall, Triangle-Keystone featured players, have passed the physical examination and are to report with other drafted soldiers on September 1. These men are very popular in film circles on the West Coast and their friends insist that the boys in the trenches will have something to laugh at between charges.

Triangle-Keystone scenario staff was given a vacation this week when Charles Avery needed four or five typewriters for two or three scenes and instructed his property man to get them in a hurry. The order was given at a time when the scenario writers were absent from their desks at lunch, and when they returned the machines were in Avery's act. One scene had been taken, and the typewriters thus being registered, could not be removed until all the remaining scenes needed were made.

Another Comedy Company

The Triangle-Keystone Studio this week added an additional producing company, which is to be directed by Henry Kernan, formerly with the Vogue, and later a member of the Mack Sennett staff. He will have as his leading comedian, Jay Dwiggins, who has been seen in Keystones for the past year. The comedies made by Kernan with Dwiggins will be devoid of slapstick, and depend upon their situations for comedy. Dwiggins will write many of the stories and makes the claim that he will try and show the joy of living at fifty. Caroline Rankin, who claims the distinction of being the skinniest woman in pictures, will be the feminine lead.

The first Triangle-Keystone, with Bob Milliken, Fritz Schade, Claire Anderson, Andy Anderson, Little Joey Jacobs and others, has been finished, and now Director Kerr is making one which provides that practically every player shall wear a heavy beards or "muff," all of which makes it quite necessary that the head of the production department, Bert Glassmire, shall keep well out of sight.

Many "U" Subjects Under Way

Universal City producing units continue this week without any important change in the staff, the first time for weeks that new people have not been added. This indicates that the producing staff has reached the maximum strength for the Summer season when a greater organization is maintained, as production costs during the Summer months are far less than during the Winter.

"The Phantom Ship," which was placed in production under the direction of Francis Ford several weeks ago, and announced to be a five-reel subject, is now reported as a serial. The company is working on the sixth episode. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber take the leads, and Kingsley Benedict, Duke Worne and Elsie Van Name are the principal supports.

The first five-reel picture featuring Little Edith Roberts, "O'Connor's Mag," has been completed by Director Eugene Moore, who this week took up the filming of "Gene of the Lazy A." This is an adaptation from the B. M. Bower book, and has a Western cattle ranch atmosphere. The supporting cast is yet to be selected for this subject.

"The Dragnet," a five-reel Bluebird drama, written and prepared for the screen by Waldemar Young, has been completed by Director Elmer Clifton. This has Herbert Rawlinson as the featured player, who is to continue permanently under Clifton, who will direct only straight dramas. Officers of the producing staff believe the success of "Come Through" indicates that Mr. Rawlinson's forte is in drama instead of comedy drama. Mary MacDonald, a Swiss girl, who has been in this country but a short time and who was sent to the coast by President Carl Laemmle, plays the opposite lead in "The Dragnet" with Rawlinson, and will continue with him.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

TO the starboard of this column is a rare and valuable picture, secured by Lumier at great risk of his life. In the center is E. K. Lincoln, well known as a host and actor, while surrounding him is the group of burglars who browsed on the fat of his land during the week end of August 18. This aggregation of desperadoes were only lured into the picture by the terrorizing threat that they would have to go without food for the next three or four hours. If you will look closely you will notice the look of anguish spread over the ordinarily passive features of Ben Grimm, the feeling of pain that is slowly encompassing the jovial countenance of Jack Edwards, the resigned desperation expressed by Wid Gunning, to say nothing of the yollow, menacing outlook portrayed by Edwin La Roche and the deep-dyed villainy running at low visibility through the rugged features of Bill Beecroft. These varying expressions were all due to the threat, and on top of this the thought of the publicity their appearance before the camera would undoubtedly bring upon their bashful heads.

BURGLARS!!

BILL BARRY, another member of Mr. Lincoln's Berkshire excursion, was ill for a week afterwards, this being due to the fact that he consumed three cubic meals a day while away in the country.

DID you know that Myrtis Morgan, playing the leading role in Vitgraph's current O. Henry release, "The Duplicity of Hargreaves," is a niece of General John Morgan, the noted "Raider" of the Civil War?

Neither did we.

ARTHUR LESLIE, of the Universal publicity forces, has just written a book: "Who's Who and Why: The One Hundred Leading Lights of the Screen." It is in no sense a studio directory, nor comprehensive in character, nor does it deal with Universal stars especially, as it was written during Leslie's vacation at Atlantic City. It is, however, unusual in character, as it is not merely biographical but indulges in criticism of the players' screen mannerisms. It was prepared for the exclusive use of newspaper editors. The book is not for sale or general distribution. It is dedicated to Carl Laemmle in recognition of "his fine courage and broad vision in making the motion picture world safe for democracy" in being the first large independent producer.

MANAGER POLUMBO, of the Liberty, in East 116th street, New York City, draws his patronage almost exclusively for the American-Italian colony surrounding him. He delivers a Bluebird every week, and great was the consternation in his neighborhood when it became noised about that "Mr. Wop" would be shown on the next "Bluebird Day." When the exact title of the feature was disclosed as "Mr. Opp," great was the relief in "Little Italy."

THE stork paid a visit to Mr. and Mrs. M. F. Tobias on August 27, leaving an eight-pound boy. Latest reports indicate that mother and child are doing well.

PAUL L. ANDERSON has on the book stands a volume entitled "Pictorial Photography." We might suggest that the reviews glance through its pages. They can then refer to the quality of the photography in five reelers by others than the adjective "good." Mr. Anderson has contributed a valuable work.

THE Winter Garden is not the only institution that can boast of a "Passing Show." Down further on Broadway Willard Bradley has brought into being "The Passing Show." This appears in black-faced type. Underneath is written, "An intimate review of stage and screen." There is "an entire change of program" each week. In the first number which has come to our notice, Willard, speaking editorially, says that he intends printing whatever he sees or hears. Willard, be careful, that's a strong statement.

The Longacre Lampoon

All the News That Fits, We Print Longacre Square, N. Y., September 15, 1917

September 15 marks the passing of the straw hat from the year A. D. 1917.

Why not make September 15 the date for the relegation to the ash barrel of all worn-out, dirty and rain-spotted tricks of the motion picture business.

For instance, let's discard:

Unimportant opinions of stars on important events of the day.

Convenient deaths.

"The motion picture business is still in its infancy."

The ever-ready pistol in the upper drawer.

"The surface has only been scratched."

Dream endings.

"The motion picture business is here to stay."

Advice from players on how to succeed in business.

Beauty hints from prominent stars.

Major Funkhauser.

Slapstick comedy that is all slapstick and no comedy.

Discontinuance of projecting room showings.

Vaudeville dancers in dramatic roles on the screen.

"Better than 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

Water pictures without plots.

And all the other impossible things inflicted on the great and beautiful industry.

Getting Under the Shirt

The above expresses exactly the idea back of MOTION PICTURE NEWS Sub-editions, the first of which—"The West Coast" is now in circulation among all the exhibitors in eleven western states.

Each of these exhibitors now receives not only the large national issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, but also and in it a special section devoted to his local happenings, himself perhaps, and the important exchange news he could only get through making a long trip to his exchange center.

This section gets "under his shirt," close to his heart in other words, with complete and interesting and valuable marked news of his own bailiwick—news he wants to read.

More readers, closer readers, of "the paper that's read"—this is the inevitable result of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Sub-edition plan.

Watch for future announcements of other Sub-editions.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

LEAKS IN THE LOOP

Ralph Morgan, now playing with the "Turn to the Right" company at a Loop theatre, and Peggy O'Neil, of "Peg o' My Heart" fame, are playing the leads in "The Penny Philanthropist," the first of the Wholesome Films Corporation's productions. The picture is now being made at the Rothacker Studios and its elaborateness is causing great activity within and without the studio on Diversey Boulevard.

Oscar Eagle, who will direct Charlotte, the queen of ice skaters, in a feature picture to be made by the Commonwealth Pictures Company of this city, arrived in town last week and is getting ready to begin work.

Lewis Stone, of the Pyramid Pictures Corporation, was a Chicago visitor last week. Mr. Stone is on his way to the Coast, where he will make "Inside the Lines" for his company.

Among the recent visitors at the Rothacker Studios were Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer; Oscar Eagle, of Commonwealth Pictures; Harry Sherman, William N. Selig, Guy McConnell, Otis Thayer, H. A. Spanuth, president of Commonwealth Pictures; Isadore Bernstein, Mrs. Bryant Washburn, and others.

Watterson Rothacker left for New York last Thursday and will spend ten days in Gotham on business.

Cress Smith, manager of the local Metro exchange, had on his visiting list last week the following: Norman Samisch, of the Amusu, Clinton, Iowa; H. J. Lego, of the Palace, Fort Dodge, Ia.; Sam Greenbaum, of the Family, Garden and Lyric, Davenport, Iowa.

Julius Singer has been in town the past ten days making negotiations with Mrs. M. L. Fulton for the securing of territory for her picture, "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief."

"The Slacker," Metro's latest and biggest feature, was booked for 154 days by the Chicago office during August. Most of the contracts signed were for showings in Chicago and nearby territory.

Frank Dempsey, formerly a member of the local K. E. S. E. office sales force, and who for the past two years has been in service with the American Ambulance Corps in France, has returned to this city and spent last week visiting his film friends in the Loop.

Two of the World-Brady officials from the New York offices visited Manager Rozelle in the Chicago office last week. They were Vice-president Ricord Gradwell and C. M. Steele, auditor.

The new Central Park theatre at Central Park Boulevard and Twelfth street, will open its doors for the first time to the public on October 1.

Bryant Washburn and Ralph Proctor made a trip of three days to Bryant's summer place, The Dells, in upper Wisconsin last week. The trip was made in a new Paige car. I was told whose it was, but I forget at this writing. If it wasn't Proctor's it must be Washburn's.

Another handsome new theatre, of the small type, has been added to Chicago's list. It is the Ben Hur, at 306 South Cicero, managed by Elbertie E. Bolen. It opened last Saturday with a Fox program.

The new line-up of World-Brady pictures will soon be seen in the Loop. Bookings for the first four are already at the high-water mark, according to Manager Rozelle, of the local office. "Betsy Ross" goes into the Orpheum this week after a preshowing at the Castle, on State street, last week. Next comes Lew Fields in "The Corner Grocery"; "Shall We Forgive Her?" and "The Burglar."

Manager Breitlinger, of the Merchants' and Bankers' Theatres Company, a Chicago syndicate, in charge of the Orpheum at Fort Wayne, the Isis at Kokomo, and a new theatre at Terre Haute, has established offices in Room 1724, Lytton Building.

Joseph Skirboll, district manager of Metro, dropped in at the Chicago office last Tuesday, on his way to Pittsburg.

Metro's big patriotic picture, "The Slacker," was shown to 6,000 recruits at the Naval Training Station on August 13. Sousa's Band accompanied the showing.

The Italian war pictures now being shown at the Auditorium theatre here will probably make a record for attendance that no other war picture has ever made in the Breezy Burg before. Much of it is due to the showmanship behind the exploitation.

"The Honor System" continued at the Studebaker last week; the "Retreat of the Germans at Arras" went on for another week; Mae Marsh and the first Goldwyn picture, "Polly of the Circus," went over great at the Colonial, and Doug Fairbanks in his newest, "Down to Earth," can be seen at a half dozen houses within the Loop; and the epidemic of booking it is spreading to other parts of the city.

"Babbling Tongues," the Unity Photoplay's feature, opened at Alfred Hamburger's Ziegfield theatre last week.

Picture City Built on Rothacker Lot

A complete little city has been erected on the property west of the Rothacker Studios in Chicago for the purpose of securing some special scenes in connection with the production of the "Penny Philanthropist," which is being filmed at the Rothacker Studios under the direction of Guy McConnell. The "Penny Philanthropist" is adapted from a book of that name which was written by Miss Clara Laughlin and will soon be presented by the Wholesome Film Corporation, who have rented the Rothacker premises for production purposes.

Mr. McConnell is assisted in the production work by Mr. Otis Thayer. Miss Peggy O'Neil of "Peg O' My Heart" fame and Mr. Ralph Morgan, who is playing lead in "Turn to the Right" are the featured players.

Six big interior sets are in use all the time inside the Rothacker Studios in connection with this production in addition to the big exterior set which has been built and which is a reproduction of a historical section of Halsted street, at which point a large part of the "Penny Philanthropist" is portrayed. The out-door stage is approximately 150 feet in length, which conveys some idea of the magnitude of the production.

The "Penny Philanthropist" has been in the course of production for about eight or ten weeks and is rapidly nearing completion. The trade showing date will be announced shortly by Mr. Weisfeldt, general manager of the Wholesome Film Corporation, and Mr. Weisfeldt also states that within the next week or ten days work will be started at the Rothacker Studios on another big picture.

Strict Ruling Against Carrying of Film in City Limits

It has been made a serious offense in Chicago to carry motion picture films anywhere within the limits of the city when not encased within individual containers made of tin and galvanzied iron and bearing tight fitting covers. A violation of the ordinance is punishable by a fine of from $25 to $200.

The ordinance is being strictly enforced by trainmen and ticket agents on all the lines of the Chicago elevated railroads.

CORRESPONDENCE—

New Film Building to Be Ready in Detroit

Detroit's new film building will be ready for business by the first week of September, and among the first to do business there will be the Mutual, moving from 97 Woodward avenue. At least twenty film concerns will be actively doing business in this fireproof structure at the corner of John R. and Elizabeth streets by October 1.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Universal to Establish Exchange Publicity

W. A. Bach, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, started this week on a tour of a number of principal exchange centers, where he will install special publicity departments. These exploitation bureaus are expected to have a wider scope than anything that has been done in the motion picture industry, for Mr. Bach has some very strong ideas about the value of publicity and the need for studying local conditions to handle this work intelligently. He will remain in each city he visits for about three weeks. Chicago will be his first stop.

Mr. Bach came to New York from Canada, where his brilliant and effective publicity work won him much recognition. He has had thorough training in the exploitation field and his efforts for Universal are expected to prove of value to the entire industry.

Walter Brandt, Exhibitor, with Triangle Cleveland Office

Walter Brandt, former manager of the Stillman theatre, Cleveland, O., has quit the exhibitors' end of the business and has enlisted on the side of the exchange. He has associated himself with Triangle, and will henceforth demonstrate to the exhibitors of northern Ohio the benefits accruing from the bookings of Hart and Fairbanks pictures, as well as the financial assets attending the Keystone Comedies.

Mr. Brandt's former experience as an exhibitor makes him especially well fitted to tackle an exhibitor.

Division Manager Finds K. E. S. E. Changes Please

E. R. Pearson, on Tour, Reports Big Increase in Business—Addition to Weekly Program and Exhibitors' Aid Department Responsible

E. R. PEARSON, one of the three division managers of the K-E-S-E Exchange system, is spending several days in Los Angeles while making a tour of the Western cities. Mr. Pearson came to Los Angeles after visiting the branches at Minneapolis, Seattle and San Francisco, and is very enthusiastic regarding the increase in business of this system of exchanges.

"Several important changes were made recently which have materially benefited the program," Mr. Pearson said. "In May we added a number of reels to the weekly output by the acquisition of the conquest program, which consists of seven reels. This, together with the change of policy with respect to exchange management to a commission or profit-sharing basis, has made necessary the increase in the sales force at all of our branches, and with this increase in sales force the business of the exchanges has been materially affected. The number of theatres now showing our films include a very large percentage of the good houses in every territory worth while.

"One purpose of my trip is to go over our profit-sharing plan of exchange management with the branch managers and their assistants. It is proving highly successful in every sense of the term, and is giving to our men an added impetus that it would be impossible for us to secure otherwise. The enthusiasm of our men for the plan, and the very broad terms of our contracts to exhibitors which really gives them the advantage of open market booking, have worked together effectively for the upbuilding of the K-E-S-E."

Concerning conditions in the territories visited, Mr. Pearson added, he had heard of little complaint except from the valley territory where the weather has been extremely warm. "On the coast I have found," he added, "that conditions have greatly improved in the last month or two. Business with all the theatres seems fairly good, and much better than I had expected to find it when starting on this trip."

The new department added to K-E-S-E publicity service which pertains to aids to exhibitors in advertising and publicity matters, has received considerable attention from exhibitors using releases from these exchanges, and the "helps" have proven very beneficial to the live wire exhibitors who have taken the trouble to use them," Mr. Pearson explained.

Automobile Brings Films 150 Miles to Sioux City

AN automobile race against time across 150 miles prevented a large audience at the Sun theatre in Sioux City, Ia., from being disappointed in seeing the first episode of "The Fatal Ring," which had been "played up" in a large advertising campaign. When the train arrived and Operator Jack Melchoir at the Sun realized the afternoon patrons would be disappointed unless something unusual was done, he called up Manager C. E. Holah of the Pathe Exchange in Omaha.

There were no other trains whereby connections could be made. As it was arranged, Holah, accompanied by Carl F. Helgren, one of his salesmen, would start by automobile from Omaha toward Sioux City, and Melchoir, driven by the speediest chauffeur he could find in Sioux City, would start to meet them. It is 150 miles from one city to the other.

Holah's car averaged 45 miles an hour and at times the speedometer registered over fifty miles an hour before the cars met in the road near Onawa, Ia. This picture was taken in the roadway, with Holah's car facing Sioux City and Melchoir's car facing the other direction, just as they met. Holah is holding the film box and beside him are the chauffeur and Melchoir. Helgren is taking the picture.

Connecting rod bearings in Holah's car were so damaged he had to call for help to tow the car to the nearest garage, which they reached through a downpour of rain. From there they took a train to Omaha. Melchoir turned and sped back to Sioux City, arriving in time.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"Seven Keys to Baldpate"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

GEORGE M. COHAN'S second appearance on the Artcraft program is by way of an adaptation of the comic-mystery play, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," which enjoyed a remunerative run on Broadway not so many years ago. It is, indeed a laughable and, at the same time, intensifying piece of work. The various mysterious characters and mysterious events that respectively visit and involve the abstracted author while in the seclusion of Baldpate Inn come thick and fast, while the general tone of the production swings alternately between the surprisingly melodramatic and the ridiculously farcical. The ending which displays a fade-in to the author finishing his book and which reveals the fact that the wild happenings of the previous scenes were manufactured by the man himself, is big in its quality of surprise, but not so startling in its effect as it was on the stage. Such a trick has been employed too often in pictures to draw more than a passing "Oh" from an audience.

The only George M. has improved his picture work over his first production by holding himself in check. He still, however, utilizes his hands as much if not more than his face and is constantly on the go. But such traits are identical with the actor, and while he would certainly appear to better advantage if he held himself still more in restraint, his personality then would not be the thing peculiarly Cohan that it is now. On the whole, he puts over every humorous point with a significance that the spectator can never doubt.

The staging of the picture under the direction of Hugh Ford is modeled after the original play as much as possible. The hotel set is excellent, and the many rapid entrances and exits of the characters have been handled deftly. The photography and lighting merits the warmest praise.

Anna Q. Nilsson makes a most suitable opposite for the star and of the remainder of the supporting cast Armand Cortes is the outstanding figure because of the extreme manner in which he burlesques a heavy's role. "Seven Keys to Baldpate," with George M. Cohan, should, all in all, prove an attraction over any theatre—and likewise in any theatre.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

George Washington Magee (George Cohan) makes a bet that he can write a novel in twenty-four hours. His adversary sends him to his summer hotel, Baldpate Inn, where he may have absolute quiet. There is only one key to it, he is told, and that is in his possession. But as soon as G. W. Magee starts writing, a succession of startling events occur. There proved to be seven keys to Baldpate, and when the seven persons gain admittance to the lonely inn, a wild and furious melodrama is unfolded before the eyes of the bewildered author. All he succeeds in doing is to fall in love with the heroine of it. Then the characters disappear, and it is discovered that Magee has been writing all the while. The heroine of the story turns out to be a newspaper woman, who comes to interview him later on.

The various characters of the melodrama are enacted by Elda Furry, Corrine Uzzell, Joseph Smiley, C. Warren Cook, Purnell Pratt, Frank Losee, Eric Hudson and Carlton Macy, besides those already mentioned.

"The Lost Express"

(Mutual-Signal—First Three Chapters)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM J. McGRATH

THE legion that are at present accusing the motion picture industry of following the same old trend day in and day out should see this newest Helen Holmes serial that is ready for the market if they would find a concrete contradiction to their contentions. Here is Helen Holmes once again in a railroad story—but wait a minute, not a railroad story in its entirety; not a repetition of previous pleasing Helen Holmes productions. It has something new within it, the something that has been asked for and claimed not delivered. It is a mystery angle that is as fresh and as new as a dime out of the mint. There is the railroad of course, the speeding engines; the life and limb defying feats that have made Miss Holmes famous in the past, but the action is not confined to that.

There is a lost express train, granulated gasoline and other brand new bits of business that prove there is still something new under the sun in movie plots. It is the ideal serial with every chapter a whetter of an appetite for what is to come. As one looks at it they are forced to commend inwardly and outwardly too, if the occasion offers, the creative ability of Frederick Bennett, well known war correspondent, who wrote the scenario and the genius of J. P. MacGowan who directed it.

It should have no trouble whatever in finding a place in the exhibitor's sun. It is a Helen Holmes picture in the first place, and that gives it a great get-away. Then, to cinch the prediction of its success, is that all-absorbing, new and tantalizing mystery tang that is bound to pervade it until the end. It isn't one of those slam bang, hurried up, padded out serials. Thoughts, labor and care have been expended throughout. Not a single member of the cast but knows his work and does it well. The photography is excellent with here and there an artistic handling of light and shade as only J. P. MacGowan knows how.

And another bit of something new is contained in this picture that is commendable. It is a lightening of the heavy melodramatic effect here and there with ingenious daubs of comedy; just enough to keep from halting the action and plenty to maintain a receptive spirit in any audience.

"Woman's Work in War Time"

(S. S. Film Co.—Two Reels)
Produced for the New York Woman's Suffrage Party
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

THIS is a propaganda film made specially for the New York Woman's Suffrage Party by the S. S. Film Company. It was written and directed by Charles J. Davis, Jr., and tells in two reels what the women are doing to help their country in time of war. There is the semblance to a story running through this offering, but it offers nothing which gives rise to anything resembling the dramatic excepting in the last few feet of the second reel when the soldier is shown leaving his sweetheart.

It is essentially a propaganda offering setting forth what the women of the country are doing and will do as their share of the war's work. Women are shown at work in the fields, in the factories, in the home, in the Red Cross service, and a subtitle calls attention to the fact that women in Russia are taking an active part in the war by entering the trenches and performing the work of the most hardy soldier. Ida Darling, Marguerite Gale, Nelle Hayes and B. L. Scott are cast in the principal roles. Mrs. Hayes (Ida Darling) is the mother. Alice Hayes (Nelle Hayes. Alice and Betty Grey (Marguerite Gale), Nelle's friend, are working for the Suffrage cause, and persuade Betty's mother, by calling to her attention the good work that the women throughout the country are doing for their country, that the women in asking for the vote are asking for that to which they are justly entitled. Jack Hayes (B. L. Scott), Mrs. Hayes's son, leaves for the front, and she is convinced that the women will be called upon to do their work at home. She is won over to the cause. This offering should be well received, especially by the women throughout the country. It sets forth in a most convincing manner what they are doing to help the cause for which their country is fighting.

"Betrayed"

(Fox—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE gentle art of spoofing the public has been indulged in by R. A. Walsh, author and director of "Betrayed." It is good-natured spoofing, however, and the public is hardly going to raise any serious rumpus over it. Indeed, considering the fact that the action is fast and furious at all times, with its fights, break-away chairs and tables, and its real troop of United States cavalry, the selfsame public will, perhaps, fail to notice the little jokes of Mr. Walsh. It seems that his original story failed to consume enough space, so he finished it up by making it a dream and adding another episode. At least this seems to be the case, and one or two subtitles that treat the picture in a lighter vein serve to bear out the statement.

Mr. Walsh's ability as a director is well demonstrated in his handling of the fight scenes, although those demanded more detailed attention, including the comedy touches, are put over just as forcefully. Some of the chasing scenes with the falling riders and horses are marvelous when the risk of human life is considered.

Miriam Cooper handles the role of the flirtatious Mexican maid in a truly alluring fashion. Hobart Bosworth gives an outstanding characterization of the bandit villain. James Marcus is equally as prominent in a comedy role, while Monte Blue and Wheeler Oakman figure largely in the plot.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Carmelita Carrito (Miriam Cooper), daughter of Carpi (James Marcus), a lazy Mexican, is wooed by Pepo (Monte Blue), until Juares (Hobart Bosworth), the outlaw, comes along and takes her for his own. His enviable position is, in turn, usurped by Jerome (Wheeler Oakman), of the U. S. A., who is hunting for Juares. Carmelita decides to betray the outlaw into Jerome's hands, but relenting hastily she interferes with her own plot with the result that both she and her current lover are killed.

Then she wakes up to discover Juares actually attacking her. Pepo comes to the rescue with the American troops headed by Jerome. Pepo makes short work of Juares, while the soldiers give the Mexican insurrectos a sound drubbing. And Carmelita is satisfied with Pepo.

"The Stranger at Dumcrieff"

(Kalem-General Film—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

IN this episode there is again a plot strong enough for a five-reeler or two of the kind many producers are grinding out these days. E. W. Hornung, who writes these Stingarees, possesses a fountain of inspiration, that, considering the certainty and steadiness of its flow, might be better called a "gusher." Once more it is necessary to say that in good, live outdoor action these Stingarees excell, even in comparison with so-called "super features."

It may be that the bushranger Stingaree is to be detested as an outlaw, but is it not true that we are all outlaws at heart, with the outlawry restrained or rather crusted over?

In this episode Stingaree saves the reputation of a minister who had a "past" in England, where he had served time. The bushranger proves the preacher was innocent even when jailed, and proves it effectually by extorting a confession from the actual criminal. This is done most dramatically at the church trial, which gives the episode a vivid climax that is splendidly suited to the screen.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Paul C. Hurst directs and plays the best character part, that of Howie, the "pal" of the bushranger Stingaree (True Boardman). Jerome Moffitt (Frank Jonasson) is the crook who betrays the clergyman, and is forced to confess, while Edward Hearn is the minister, Stephen Hope. Barney Furey is Sergeant Deane of the constabulary, and G. A. Williams is John Stuart, the church deacon and father of Edith Stuart (Edythe Sterling), who is to marry the rector.

"Sirens of the Sea"

(Jewel Productions—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

JUST at present "Sirens of the Sea" is merely a series of pictures, prettily photographed. Given the attention of a skilful editor, with the power to cut down and rearrange, it might be transformed into an interesting photoplay. As it stand now, its scantily, diaphanously clad swimming, diving and dancing girls are its chief attraction. But even the celebrated tired business husband and his lady friend want action as well as a back to nature movement on the part of the cast. Before "Sirens of the Sea" is over, one is surfeited with the scantily clad young ladies and is longing for something more substantial (begging the young ladies' pardon).

Scenes are jumbled, there is too much of legend and not enough of progressive plot, and while none of the action is intentionally repeated, many of the close-ups, as well as the full sets, duplicate the slight significance of those already passed. Jack Mulhall kisses Louise Lovely more times than can be counted, and when he isn't kissing her he seems to be getting ready to do so. And when the camera leaves them for the moment it usually finds its way to Carmel Myers and William Quinn plotting the downfall of the other two. Intermingled with such scenes there is the diving and swimming, the silhouette dances and the waves breaking on the shore.

Grace Helen Bailey is author, while Allen Holubar adapted and directed. The locations are good and the photography and lighting commendable, although the posing of the various players in the group scenes is seldom artistic in the highest sense of the word.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The prologue shows Lorelei, a baby, being washed up on the shore. She is adopted by the Stanhopes (Sydney Dean and Helen Wright).

Lorelei (Louise Lovely), attaining girlhood, entertains her school friends, including Julie (Carmel Myers), at the Stanhope home. David Waldron (Jack Mulhall), on a cruise with Boyce (William Quinn), lands when he sees Lorelei and her friends swimming without even a one-piece. He likes the surroundings and stays. He and Lorelei fall in love. Julie and Boyce are jealous. One evening Waldron pursues Lorelei and she falls over a cliff. Waldron, searching for her, falls asleep and dreams of years before of the same happening, enacted by the same characters, only this episode is punctuated with supposedly interpretive dances and the like. Waking, he finds Lorelei in the water.

"Tears and Smiles"

(Lasalida-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE name and personality of Baby Marie Osborne must be magic indeed if they serve to nullify the melodramatic crudities contained in "Tears and Smiles." Such rare talent as that possessed by the diminutive star certainly deserves exploitation of a considerably higher grade. She is constantly the center of the action and, again with the assistance of a clever little colored boy, is responsible for many a smile and hearty laugh; but the ultra-sordid surroundings of the story are at times inclined to detract from the freshness of the child leads, whose happy antics stand small chance of counterbalancing the ill flavor of their setting.

The unnecessary brutality pictured in detail inflicted on the wife by her drunken husband, which Director William Bertram has allowed to creep into the opening scenes of the picture, is quite revolting. The subsequent and constant application of coincidence, ending with the marvelously convenient death of the rich man's wife, leads one to the conclusion that the author expended little gray matter on the story. If Baby Marie's admirers can shut their eyes, figuratively or actually, to the shortcomings circumventing the little favorite's performance, then perhaps all will be well, as she was never more endearing and cute than here; but it can be guessed that many will express the wish that a story worthy the talents of the star had been written.

Katherine MacLaren as the society woman does a most creditable piece of work. Philo McCullough as her husband seems rather ill at ease in the part. Marian Warner is quite acceptable as Marie's mother.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Little Marie (Baby Marie Osborne), terrified when her father (Melvin Mayo), in a drunken rage, beats her mother (Marian Warner), flees, and happens into the home of the rich Greers (Philo McCullough and Katherine MacLaren) when they are thinking of adopting a child. Through Marie's ingenuity the mother is later taken on as nurse. When the father is released from prison he proceeds to become unruly again, and this time is killed by the police. Greer, who has been falling in love with Marie's mother all the time, finds his last obstacle removed when his wife dies from an overdose of headache relief.

"The Marriage Market"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

NONE of the successful ingredients of a World Film melodrama have been omitted in this five-reeler bearing the name of Clay Mantley as author. They have been slightly altered as to setting, and to be sure there would be no mistaking its recent production, a glimpse of General Joffre at Grant's Tomb, New York, is sandwiched in between the scenes of the picture proper. It may be assumed that as World Film continues to produce such fiery melodrama as that contained in "The Marriage Market," there is a public waiting to welcome it in the picture theatre. It is not the sort of stuff that goes in a high-class house, but nobody is claiming that it will, so no harm is done.

It is the familiar snarl of the woman being bought by the man in order to protect her family name; her discovery that he is a brute; her attempt to gain financial independence, in so doing encountering another brute; a murder, a trial, retribution by the villain, his dying confession, and the final happiness of the woman and the man she really loves. The action has plenty of snap, plenty of intensity, and is throughout well calculated to grip its particular audience.

June Elvidge does her usual commendable work as the woman. Carlyle is quite in the background for a hero. Arthur Ashley and Frederick Treusdell work faithfully and conventionally as heavies. Mr. Ashley also directed. As for the general tone of the action, it is acceptable, but the settings appear to have been furnished in a hurry and too profusely.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

To save her father (Jack Drumier) from financial disgrace, Helen (June Elvidge) marries Spayden (Arthur Ashley), millionaire sportsman and general rounder. It is not long before she discovers herself treated as his horses and dogs. Determining to gain her independence, she speculates in the market, loses, and turns to Foxhall (Frederick Treusdell) for assistance. He offers to buy her horse. She goes for the money and is attacked. She shoots him and, believing she has killed him, takes refuge in another quarter of the house. The bullet, however, has lodged in Foxhall's cigarette case. Spayden traces Helen to Foxhall's house. He shoots and kills the other man. Helen, seeing the body, believes she is guilty. Marlowe (Carlyle Blackwell) assumes the blame. At his trial Helen appears and confesses to what she believes her crime, but Foxhall's valet proves the man in need and his accusation of Spayden brings his confession and suicide.

"Lonesome Luke Loses Patients"

(Rolin-Pathe—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HAROLD LLOYD is seen as proprietor of a sanatarium in this number—a sanatarium where henpecked husbands repair to be attended by cohorts of pretty nurses. An extremely old flirt is brought on, tendered to the care of Bebe Daniels, while his frantic wife makes all sorts of attempts to discover whether he is playing possum or not. At length she learns the truth and after she possesses this knowledge Dr. Luke's place is very much of a wreck.

Lloyd appears in fine raiment in this comedy. Dressed in a cutaway and other accessories, and smoking cigarettes in a long holder, he affects a studied nonchalance that is thoroughly amusing throughout. The action is slower than in the last Rolin two-reeler and gives the principals more opportunities to register comical bits of business.

"Tides of Fate"

(World Film—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

KATE JORDAN'S story, "Creeping Tides," as adapted and offered under the title of "Tides of Fate," fits well into the general run of World pictures. It is melodrama containing an unusual amount of action, which however is scattered over many episodes and hardly deserves to be termed continuous. The fights staged, including the Filipino uprising and the encounter between the members of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police and the outlaws are realistically done and lack nothing that thrills should have.

Save for only occasional lapses in the speed of the action, the picture remains on an average plane. Alexandra Carlisle is seen in the role of chief importance while her support includes Frank Holland as the hero and William A. Sheer as the heavy.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Fanny Lawson (Alexandra Carlisle) marries King (William A. Sheer) against the wishes of her family. He turns out to be a counterfeiter and general blackguard and his work is the cause of her unjust arrest and imprisonment. Her old suitor, Cross (Frank Holland), discharged from the Northwest Mounted Police for a deed of which he is innocent, enlists in the United States Army and distinguishes himself for bravery in the Philippines. He returns to New York and meets Fanny who has escaped from prison and is living under an assumed name. King is reported dead but later he returns, this time, however, to battle to the death with the police and exonerate Fanny with his dying confession. Cross is reinstated in his former position because of his bravery.

Charles Graham as Fergus McManus, Jane Kent as Claudia Lawson and Walter Ryder as Heth complete the cast.

"The Customary Two Weeks"

(Edison-Kleine—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

IN these days when war, melodrama, fable and riot hold the screen nearly everywhere, it is a relief to see a picture with a simple plot, easy natural action and a perfectly plausible climax. It is a fact that for one person who is attracted by the clash and bang, blow-ups and destruction of film impossibilities, a score will be pleased with this logical little play.

The tragedies that appeal to most of us are those we know and very likely have experienced. With efficiency managers a fad in most corporations, the cruel dismissal of old and faithful employees is so frequent as to be almost usual. This photoplay is built up around such an incident. The oldest man in the factory office is turned out, the only notice being, "The customary two weeks." The hero a younger man in the same office intercedes with the owner, a young man who has just inherited the property, and the discharged clerk is reinstated. The incident that makes bad feeling, and the rest is built up around the rivalries and office friendships that might be expected and would in due course be the outcome.

It might happen in almost any office, and this is why the heart interest strikes home. Robert Ellis, in the part of the hero, does well, and Joseph Burke, as "Pop" Grinnel, is a good characterization of a "genuine antique." Kathryn Adams's work, in the part of the stenographer who loves, aids and comforts the hero as he forges ahead, is much better than would be expected.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Carl Vibert (Herbert Evans) is efficiency manager and general executive of a tool factory owned by Harry Burnhart (Craig Ward). Vibert dismisses "Pop" Grinnel (Joseph Burke), and George Extell (Robert Ellis) intercedes. Vibert dismisses Extell in turn, and Muriel Clemm (Kathryn Adams) urges him to "make good," which he does in a rival factory, that of Mr. Wetterson (Arthur Dennis). In fact, his success gets him Vibert's place, and he, in turn, gives Vibert his "customary two weeks." That he regrets this and takes Vibert back, is one of the pretty touches in the play.

"Who Was the Other Man?"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

IN this fast melodrama speed boats are pressed into service to raid the "Black Legion," which has put its hidden rendezvous in a boathouse, near open water, where the light is good. The daughter of the United States Senator who, in the first scenes, has been lolling in luxury in foreign palace hotels and expensively furnished drawing-rooms in Washington suddenly becomes strenuous, leads the raid, engages in the hand-to-hand conflict between the Secret Service men and the spies, and proves herself quite capable in rough and tumble.

There is another scene where the woman spy, confronted with the "cold muzzle" of the hero's revolver, drains the posion potion herself and falls apparently lifeless at his feet.

It has developed earlier that the agent of the foreign spies in Paris is the precise double, even to the "burnsides," of the hero, which is, of course, much to the advantage of the latter since he is in the Secret Service himself. So he takes the steamer trip to America planned for the spy, gets in touch with the woman confederate, gets admittance to the inmost circle of the "Black Legion," and performs other wonders that ought to appeal to any gallery god who has a thirst for the startling.

From this it will be apparent that "Who Was the Other Man?" is indeed a live one. The photography, especially the outdoor work, is excellent.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The American, a Secret Service man, James Walbert (Francis Ford) discovers his precise likeness to Ludwig Schumann. A messenger shoves orders into his hand meant for Schumann, so he takes the steamer on which the woman confederate, Wanda Bartell (Beatrice Van), and the daughter of the American Senator, Marion Washburn (Mae Gaston), are passengers. On the voyage Walbert is smitten with the charms of Marion, which Wanda turns to her advantage later in exciting the jealousy of Herbert Cornell (Duke Worne), who is Marion's fiance. In this way Wanda gets possession of the plans for the interoceanic canal with which Cornell has been entrusted by the Secretary of State. At this point Walbert enters, admits his real identity as Government agent, and takes custody of the plans, while Wanda gulps the poison with which she had stupefied Cornell—and leaves the screen.

"Soldiers of Chance"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"SOLDIERS OF CHANCE" is a melodrama written by James Oliver Curwood. It is not the high type of plot which Mr. Curwood might prepare for a magazine, as the loose joints are many and are only partially concealed by a cloak of action which is fast though not always convincing. The South American stuff shown in the latter reels, including a miniature revolution, is hardly to be taken seriously. Neither army is inclined to display the real fighting spirit and as a consequence the supposed danger of the hero awakens little suspense.

The peculiar manner in which the author suddenly chose to whisk all his principals down to South America is rather mystifying, inasmuch as small explanation is given as to the reasons for Mountain in taking Josephine and her father along as guests. At the finish, when Yawkey suddenly appears on the scene after being thought dead, the surprise is somewhat too great to be countenanced without a smile. It would have been better had a few scenes of him been inserted from time to time.

Evart Overton and Miriam Fouche are the principals, with Charles Henderson appearing to good advantage as the heavy. The supporting cast, with the exception of the extras, is competent. Paul Scardon directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lawler (Charles Henderson) a dishonest promoter possesses Winton (Charles Kent) in his power, the latter believing he has killed Yawkey (Denton Vane), Lawler's partner. Lawler demands the hand of Josephine Winton (Miriam Fouche), threatening her with the exposure of her father unless she complies.

Billy Mountain (Evart Overton), alias Captain Josslyn, a man whom Lawler previously swindled, arrives from South America, disguised with a heavy beard, and interests his old enemy with a proposition. He invites him on his yacht and there makes him prisoner. Josephine, hearing that Lawler will give away the truth, accompanies Winton with her father. In South America she frees him when he threatens. He joins the forces of the government. Mountain and his partner (Ned Finley), arrayed with the revolutionists, plan an attack on the president and his forces. Mountain is captured and sentenced to death, but when the battle turns in favor of the revolutionists he escapes. Josephine is freed from the clutches of Lawler by the appearance of Yawkey.

"Mother o' Mine"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"MOTHER O' MINE" is the story of a mother, told in a simple, homely way with a real, old-fashioned mother, seventy-two years young, portraying the title role. It is one of those photodramas that stirs our very souls because it tells the story of the homely things of life. There is a human appeal, a heart interest that strikes home. It is one that will appeal to man, woman and child, to all classes, to all creeds. It can grace any exhibitor's program and will be awarded the blue ribbon by an unanimous vote. There is no spectacle attempted—the true-to-life, simple, homely story of a mother and son, is told in a straightforward, unpretentious manner, without prejudice. The character, most dear to us all is there. In Ruby La Fayette, who presents the part of the mother, you will find an exemplification of your mother—your mother as you like to remember her.

Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford are featured, but upon Ruby La Fayette the eyes of the audience will be fixed. Without "make-up," without "acting" this old lady who is one of the old school actresses who carries the mother part without affectation. Mr. Julian directed the production. He has given it some very human touches. Elliott J. Clawson wrote the story. He gave to his characters just enough to do and no more. He has made them do the natural thing. His story is as homely and as life-like as the title suggests. Mr. Julian in the role of the son gives a good exhibition. When he denies his old mother it is only in words—his heart is with her, as he proves. The incident was well conceived by the author and well staged by the actor-director. It is a strong anti-climax—one that impresses. After the incident has passed and the son sees his duty, we like him the more for it. Instead of lowering the character of the son in his audience's estimation, Mr. Julian lifts it and we admire the son for having overcome a strong temptation and for having defied his friends and the world to come between him and his mother. Miss Clifford is not called upon for any appreciable amount of dramatic action. The little she does is done with feeling and points towards bigger and better things. E. A. Warren and Elsie Jane Wilson carry the comedy element with honors. Mr. Warren reminds one of a Beban. He can "put over" the character stuff. The exterior scenes of suburban life disclosed some pretty "shots." The lighting effects register a good percentage. The work of the camera man is in evidence throughout the run. "Mother o' Mine" need not hesitate to show before any audience. All will feel its human touch.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mrs. Standing (Ruby La Fayette), a widow, lives in a small country town. Her only son, John (Rupert Julian), is at college. He is her life, her hope. Finished college, John comes home and brings with him several college chums. They spend a week-end and are made to realize what a wonderful old mother John has. John worships his mother. Christine (Elsie Jane Wilson) and Romeo Bonelli (E. A. Warren) are the hired help. They, too, worship Mrs. Standing. Having spent a short vacation with his mother, John leaves for the city to make his mark in the world. He is fortunate and wins success from the start. He meets Catherine (Ruth Clifford), a daughter of the rich. Five years have passed and John has not visited his mother. She decides to surprise him and goes to the city. When she arrives John is entertaining his friends. After much formality his mother is admitted. John is surprised when he sees her. He tells her to wait and he goes outside the reception room to explain to Catherine, now his fiancé, that the old lady was his nurse during childhood. The mother hears him. That night she quietly slips away leaving a note, telling her son that she longs for the old home. John reflects on his actions toward his mother and decides to break his engagement to Catherine, and spend the rest of his life with his mother. He does so. Catherine surprises him with his mother in the little country town. He introduces his mother to her as the dearest person on earth. When she has gone Catherine tells him that she had known it all the time. He embraces her and happiness reigns in the little country town where mother, son and daughter-in-law, have settled down.

"Lorelei of the Sea"

(Marine Film Company—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"LORELEI OF THE SEA," with a good plot to carry its more picturesque side along, has been given a good production by the Marine Film Company, under the direction of Henry Otto. As shown to the trade last week, it ran to too great length. It could be cut to a big advantage. In the first reels too much time is taken up by both author and director in introducing the characters, with the result that there is confusion in the minds of the audience as to the purpose intended and as to their real identity. After the second reel comes a smoothness in action and plot which is carried out to the end and, with the introduction of the scenes depicting the adventures of Lorelei and her lover among the colony of sea nymphs, there is an interest aroused which holds. Mr. Otto is strong on atmosphere and he has succeeded in getting the camera within range of some beautiful exteriors. The photography is up to the minute.

Richard Willis has succeeded in accomplishing what some other scenarioists have failed to accomplish and that is, combine story with a good proportion of fantastic episodes. He did not reach the point of perfection along these lines, but he has prepared for reproduction on the screen a story far above the average in its class.

"Lorelei of the Sea" presents a clean, entertaining picture, some parts of which register with all the conviction of a hundred per cent production. It point of direction it has been well done. It consists of practically all exterior scenes, and these are good to look upon. Cut to shorter reelage, this production by the Marine Film Company will register above the average. Released as it was shown to the trade, the superfluous footage will, in many localities, pass unnoticed. Those who like beautiful scenic display will get their fill from the exhibition of "Lorelei of the Sea." It should be a good offering at any exhibitor's theatre. Tyrone Power is given the usual "heavy" character part to present, but has not been given an opportunity to do justice either to himself or the picture. He is listed on the program as the featured player but he is hardly entitled to the honor. He convinces in a role of limited opportunities. Frances Burnham, who has the ingenue lead, is well cast. She screens a good percentage and carries her part with a true dramatic touch. Jay Belasco is convincing in the juvenile lead. John Oaker, Gypsy Abbott and Winnifred Greenwood are others in support.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lorelei (Frances Burnham) lives by the sea with her protector, Paul, the Fisherman (Tyrone Power). Peitro (John Oaker) loves her and becomes violently jealous when Dorian (Jay Belasco) is unexpectedly found cast on the shore. He had been lost at sea. Lorelei reads of the sea nymphs and in her dreams sees herself as Lorelei of the sea. Her adventures with Dorian, whom she finds on the shore, are here recounted. It develops that Lorelei when she was a small child had been taken by Paul, the Fisherman, and reared as his own child. She, during childhood, was the playmate of Dorian. Most of the story is told in a dream.

"Idolaters"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

LOUISE GLAUM is the star of "Idolaters," a picture written by John Lynch and Monte Katterjohn and produced by Walter Edwards. Miss Glaum has her familiar role of vampire and proceeds to do the "dragging down and down" act with a vengeance. She displays some gorgeous gowns—freaks of the costumers and very striking in their effect. The settings provided for the feature are very unusual. This time the vampire's taste runs to Egyptian surroundings and it would take the vocabulary of a press agent to fully describe them.

The story of "Idolaters" is a tragedy. There is no final reformation of the vampire to complete the usual sugary ending. However, some of the high lights of the story fail to register as pictured. The action soars to extravagant heights so that a point that might have been gained effectively, providing the action had been toned down a bit, appears in more or less of a humorous light. It is a case of carrying things just a little too far, when, if repressed natural results would have followed.

"Idolaters" is hardly the picture to take the neighborhood house by storm, for, in passing, there are a number of scenes that not only border on the risque but reach far over the line. George Webb as the playwright is inclined to exaggerate the character somewhat. The remainder of the cast does good work.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ralston (George Webb), playwright, becomes enamoured of Viola (Louise Glaum), who is to star in his "Vanity." She influences him to change certain parts to give her more lines. Not so much of a success as he is thought to be, Ralston fails at this job. His wife, Anita (Dorcas Matthews), once an actress, and her old manager (Hugo Koch) succeed in dressing the play up to suit the star. Produced, it is a success. Ralston takes all the glory. In time he deserts his wife altogether for the other woman. But the angel who backed the show discovers the relationship between author and star and then and there the play is taken off. Ralston, believing Viola sincere, sees her again. She, angered at him for causing her downfall, kills him. In a dirty tenement she lives in fear of the police. Finally they come, but her devoted servant (Lee Hill) kills her rather than see her in the hands of the law.

"Triumph"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is a picture of stage life and possesses more than the usual attraction of such productions, due to its artistic and tasteful direction. Dorothy Phillips, in the role of the country girl who makes her way to success on the stage—a success that is only a mockery—gives an animated and sincere performance and handles every one of her many big scenes with true skill. The production is realistic from first to last and the atmosphere of the stage is successfully instilled into every scene.

The picture is based on a story by Samuel Hopkins Adams. Fred Myton prepared the scenario. His skilful handling of the continuity and Director Joseph De Grasse's equally fine direction have resulted in a picture that entertains throughout its length despite the fact that the same story has been told many times before. Public demand, we suppose, accounts for the fact that the logical, though tragic termination of the story is only the end of the story within the picture. It seems that an audience is unwilling to see the heroine dead at the final fadeout. The love element of the picture is its only weak spot. It has not been fully developed and as a consequence the sacrifice which Nell Baxter makes for Niehoff doesn't carry as much force as it might have.

The supporting company, headed by Lon Chaney and William Claire DuBrey, Clyde Benson and Helen Elder are also in the cast. Stowell, is up to the usual Bluebird standard.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nell Baxter (Dorothy Phillips), the praise of the townsfolk ringing in her ears after an amateur performance of "As You Like It," in which she played Rosalind, decides to pursue a career on the stage. She encounters a traveling troupe at the station.

Later in the city she is given her great chance when she secures the ingenue's part in a Broadway production. She is a success and the manager (William Dyer) offers to star her if she will accept his attentions. Niehoff (Lon Chaney), a dramatic critic, longs to have his play produced. Nell persuades the manager to put it on. She is given the leading role. A few hours before the opening, the manager discovers that he is being "worked" by Nell and he calls the whole show off. In his apartment Nell pleads with him. He says he will open if she pays the price. In the struggle she stabs and kills him. Niehoff, told by the doctor that he only has a short while to live, takes the blame. The show goes on, but in the final act Nell kills herself.

The leading man of the traveling troupe thinks he has cured Nell of her craze with this story—and so he has for she returns home.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Pathe—Eleventh Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS full of thrills as ever, this number of "The Fatal Ring," entitled "The Short Circuit," introduces a more prominent love element than has been apparent in the preceding instalments. Tom Carlton, the reporter, thought dead by Pearl, is the cause of her sorrow, and later, when she discovers him alive, there is a tender scene between them that leaves no possible doubt as to the ultimate ending.

The body of the eleventh episode is taken up with the fights of all three parties to possess the violet diamond, and when it closes it has just been stolen from Pearl by an unknown hand while the dauntless heroine is threatened with death.

The Solution of the Projection Problem

SILVERTIP

Silvertips Banish Flicker and Insure Satisfactory Projection

Every operator wants his machine to give the best results, in other words, the clearest of pictures with minimum carbon trouble.

Silvertips, with their exceptional current capacity and small diameter furnish a sure solution for the old annoying problem of flicker. At the same time the high current they carry gives that intense white light which insures the most clearly defined pictures.

It will mean satisfaction in every sense to trim your lamps regularly with Silvertip lowers and National uppers.

This trim has become the standard projector trim of America.

Send for our booklet, "The Why of the Silvertip."

Worn Film and Poor Attendance

IT is pleasing to know that the campaign which we have undertaken for the improvement of film is bearing fruit and particularly that the exchanges are cooperating, realizing that conditions as they exist today are inimical to the best interests of our industry.

The statement that the film condition today is driving away patronage is not an exaggeration. We can see it on every hand. The small house, which is the backbone of the industry, cannot afford, in many cases, to take first run releases, and therefore must use 60, 90, or 120-day film. Under ordinary conditions if they receive the film as it should be sent out, they could make ends meet nicely and compete successfully with other houses in the town.

There is no use fooling ourselves—these houses must be successful or the strength of the industry will soon be on the decline. Pictures are and must continue to be the greatest single source of amusement in the country—the amusement of the mass of the people. The small house must not only exist, but be encouraged and helped in every possible way to thrive. The big theatre man must see to this just as much as the exchanges and the film companies.

* * * * *

HERE is a letter from the Victor Film service of Buffalo to Mr. Weinberg of the Elmwood Theatre, which shows the attitude which should be adopted by every exchange man in the country. It shows his attitude toward the small house and what the manager should demand in the way of service—his desire to receive complaints, etc. This desire to cooperate should be the slogan of every exchange.

August 8th, 1917.

Mr. E. O. Weinberg,
Elmwood Theatre,
539 Elmwood Ave.,
Buffalo, N. Y.

In re: Worn Film and Poor Attendance.

Gentlemen:

An editorial titled as above, appears in the Motion Picture News on page 1104 of the week of August 18th.

The exhibitor using a 60, 90 or 120-day film is very important to this exchange, and if you are an exhibitor using this age film, we want you to call our attention to any film that is not in good physical condition when you receive it. You will find on each film an inspection slip; I request that you return to this office the slip if condition of film is not up to your expectation. It is our intention to serve you to the best of our ability, whether you use release date film or 120-day film.

In order to maintain a high standard of efficiency, it is necessary for us to know all the complaints of our exhibitors and we want you to write us if our standard of service does not meet with your approval.

Very truly yours,
VICTOR FILM SERVICE,
G. W. Christoffer, Mgr.

Buffalo, N. Y.

The sooner theatre owners demand and insist that they receive satisfactory film, the sooner the industry will be universally on its feet and the sooner will prosperity increase. Every theatre man must be properly served, but in turn must lend his cooperation and see that his operator and attendants are working every minute to cooperate in return.

E. K. Gillett.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

No. 21 Reports Conditions

LEAGUE member No. 21, who recently took a ten-day vacation, during which time he visited several other cities and towns in the state of South Carolina, writes: "I am going to give you the true conditions I found during my ten days off. I wanted to see what kind of men were 'behind the guns' in our state, and this is what I found—now don't go on the war path, for it is the truth, every word of it: I visited several towns and cities in this and our neighboring state of North Carolina and found operators shooting 'em through from eight to nine and ten hours a day, at the large salaries [Salaries, did you say?—Ed.] of from four to twelve dollars a week. This does not include, however, every place I chanced to visit, for there were some well-paid men. Some of the booths I had the pleasure of "visiting" were just large enough to contain the machines; the operator had to squeeze in and out as best he could. The machines in some places would be better off placed on the junk pile. I saw a number of operators(?) making the kind of patches that will never pull apart, using glue and making the patch from a half an inch to an inch in width. When I began to talk about the league and a few other things, including my label and film report sheet (if you remember I was the first user of the above) they made me feel that I had never seen a projector before. The big companies should grab them off quick; these operators (?) certainly have reduced to a science the construction of motion picture projectors, for I have never seen so many 'rotten' ideas, such as motor drive connected to the fly-wheel, with terminal connections in the lamp houses, and other 'brainy' ideas, the enumeration of which would take up too much of your valuable space.

"Before I close I want to tell you a little more regarding the salary question. There was one poor fellow who put in just eight hours a day for the sum of $8 per week, and out of this he had to pay $5 for board. Now this same fellow cut a man who had formerly held the position, making a fair salary. Can you blame the manager for employing a man at a lower salary when he effects a saving. Allow me to say that I am delighted to see the league getting along so well, but let us have more members, for IN UNION THERE IS STRENGTH. Let us all get together and do our 'bit' for BETTER CONDITION OF FILM AND BETTER PROJECTION."

Comment: The conditions prevailing in the states you mention are, to my mind, almost unbelievable. I do not for one moment doubt the truth of your statements, however, for I myself have seen as bad if not worse conditions many miles north of the Mason-Dixon Line. If a man is willing to work for such a princely salary, what can be done about it. He is the "goat," and the employer is also, for it is he who must foot the bills, and the saving that is made in salary is more than offset by excessive repair bills, etc.

To all such I would recommend that they read the article which appeared in the department in the July 14 issue under the caption "Unionism—Its Advantages."

The matter you refer to in the last paragraph of your letter, which I omitted, was treated in the issue of May 26 on page 3328, under the heading of "Ye Town Knocker," and again in the June 2 issue, page 3482, under the heading "Why Not This?" If you have any further suggestions to make would be glad to hear from you.

Raise for Detroit Operators May Come

Committees representing the exhibitors and the union operators of Detroit have been holding frequent conferences during the past week for the purpose of coming to a mutual understanding as to a wage scale for the ensuing year.

At first the unions demanded a number of things which the exhibitors absolutely refused to sign; these have been eliminated from the agreement, and the committees are now arbitrating the wage scale. While it is contended the operators will get an increase, it is not likely it will be as large as asked for originally.

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

No. It Is Not

WILLIAM H. SHAY, Somerset, Wis., writes: "Is it necessary for me to be an operator and belong to some 'lodge' or the union in order to join the N. A. M. F. L.? I am not a member of any organization, as I do not believe I know enough about operating to be able to join the union. I run a show here and do my own operating, and following the advancement of the league, must say that it appears to be the right thing in the right place. Have been slow in writing, for I was not sure whether it would do me any good to do so, but if I can join, please put my name on the Roll of Honor and I'll do my best to live up to the pledge. I am sure if every operator would join the league it would not be long before we in the smaller communities would be able to give the public better and cleaner service and draw larger crowds to our theatres—and that is what we are all after, isn't it? [It is—Ed.] Hoping to see my name on the roll next week and wishing all members the best of luck and hoping to see many more names added soon, I am yours for better films."

Answer: It is not necessary to belong to any lodge or union in order to obtain membership in the N. A. M. F. L. Of course we are always pleased when we learn of a member who is already affiliated with the I. A., for the union is one of the greatest benevolent organizations we have today. The advantages enjoyed by the great majority of workers is directly attributable to the labor movement, and those who are members know best the many benefits derived from such membership. You are most frank in your admission. So many would have said "I know it all." And that is something that none of us can say, for the day is, I believe, far distant when we will have reached 100 per cent. projection. As far as the league is concerned anyone, whether union or non-union, who is actually engaged in the operation of a motion picture projector or the handling of films either in a theatre or film exchange, may become members upon signifying their willingness to uphold the pledge of the league, and who will fill out the blank which appears in the department. Or if they so desire they may send the required information on a post card. Their names will be added to the Roll of Honor and membership cards, buttons, etc., will be sent them.

Yours has been mailed you, and no doubt you are now wearing your button. The labels are causing some of the film exchanges to pay more attention to the film being shipped by them, and if every member of the league places one of these stickers on each of the film cans which he returns to the exchange each day, the importance of the league will be fully realized by the entire industry. In using the stickers do not neglect to make note on the label as to whether the film is in good condition. If not, state exactly what the trouble is. Also, if you find the exchanges are not paying any attention to your complaints we want you to write us direct and we will see to it that the proper parties in the home offices are notified at once. We are determined that, with your co-operation, we will force better film conditions, and, as was stated in Mr. Gillett's editorial in the August 4 issue, it will mean greater attendance and increased salaries to the operators who will receive the credit for the improvement. Your hesitancy in writing this department was without reason, for we welcome any suggestions that you or any other operator may desire to make for the advancement of the league or the betterment of conditions in general. For your kind wishes to the league members, I extend thanks.

Standardization of "Change Over"

R. F. RANDEGGER, Chicago, Ill., writes: "I am about to offer a suggestion which you no doubt have considered and cast aside, but it seems to be the only plausible solution at present for the 'change over' evil. It consists of the method used by the Edison Company, viz: closing one reel with a sub-title and opening the following reel with a continuation of the same sub-title. This seems to be the ideal way, for we all know that a title is good to change over on. I do not know whether this comes within the scope of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers or not, but it is a point of standardization which would be of great benefit to both the exhibitor and the operator as well as the exchange. If you can bring this about I am sure you will receive the blessing of every operator in the country. I will close by wishing you and your paper continued success."

Answer: Your suggestion is one that I have urged for some time, and I voice your opinion; it does seem to be the only plausible solution. Not only will it be of benefit as a "change over," but it will also help in a large measure to prevent the punch holes in film which were so prevalent previous to the formation of the Anti-Misframe League. The matter will be taken up with the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and I feel sure after they hear the many points in favor of such standardization they will take some action.

The First Contributor

FRED J. ALLES, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., writes: "Just a few lines to let you know I received my membership card in the N. A. M. F. L., and I sure am proud of it. I see by the last issue of the NEWS that my friend Homer Kesterson has been appointed 'recruiting officer' for the league in Wilkes-Barre, and as I induced him to join, you should appoint me general. I read of Brother Kline's idea of every member chipping in with one cent to buy Brother Pastre a gold button, and I second the motion and enclose herewith my 'bit' and hope I have the honor of being the first one to do so. [You have that honor, as yours was the first of many that have been received.—Ed.] Long may Pastre live to wear his button! I see the number of members is rapidly increasing and I do not think it will be long before we reach the 1,000 mark set by Brother Pastre and yourself. You did not answer the portion of my previous letter wherein I made mention of the possibility of erasures being made on the labels by those who were not members of the league. Also, my suggestion that all members get a photograph taken of their apparatus and send in for publication, so that we can see what each other's operating room looks like."

In Reply: Glad to learn you are pleased with your membership card. As you will see by last week's issue of the NEWS, you have been made "deputy" and I am waiting for the "returns" to come in. The possibility of any erasure being made is easily overcome by the members using an indelible pencil when filling out the blanks on the labels. Members can either write their name and number, or just the number, as they choose. No one will know the number of any individual member except the member himself and myself. The suggestion you make is one that we have made from time to time. Operators are requested to send in photographs, not only of their equipment, but of themselves, and in this way the entire craft can become better acquainted with each other. What's the matter with you sending in a photograph of yourself and equipment, and let us see what you look like. That is what they call "passing the buck" here in New York, so it's up to you to comply with your own request. Selah?

This Is Co-operation

MEMBERS Nos. 310 and 311 of the N. A. M. F. League write: "We have been reading what you and others have had to say concerning the league, and we believe it is a good thing, and like other good things of the same class should be pushed along. As we like to keep apace with everything that affects our business we have signed the pledge and signify our willingness to live up to it. Also, we are ready at all times to help other brother operators in any way possible. We have had considerable experience with different makes of machines and all kinds of hand-feed lamps. If my brother operator is in trouble, and you need a hand, we will try and answer any questions in regard to same."

Comment: Comment is, I think, unnecessary. The expression of willingness to co-operate with me is very gratifying and I sincerely thank the brothers for their kind offer, assuring them that I will take advantage of it early and often.

Prize Winner Joins League

MEMBER No. 4 of the N. A. M. F. L. sends in the name of the operator who won the prize in the World Film Company's better-service contest for membership in the league. During the month of July this brother, Edgar Forsyth, returned his film in such perfect condition that he was awarded 100 per cent. What is the matter with the Indiana operators? I see very few names on the Roll of Honor from here?

Answer: We are glad to welcome into membership one who is taking so much interest in his work, not as much, as he says, for the sake of the prize, but for the satisfaction that he obtains through the knowledge that he is putting over a good show for himself and helping his fellow operator as well. There are quite a number of the boys from Indiana registered, and although the number is not as large as we would like to see, we have hopes.

Heavy Foreign Orders for Simplexes Reported by Precision Company

THE scarcity of foreign made motion picture machines and equipment has created a demand upon the American manufacturers for such wares.

The Precision Machine Company recently received orders for twenty-eight Simplex projectors to be delivered to the Scandinavian countries.

A special letter of assurance from the British Embassy was granted for these shipments, so that there would be no delay in the projectors reaching their destination.

Other equipment, such as screens, generator sets, carbon, etc., were also purchased to be used in the above countries.

Through the Indianapolis branch of the Exhibitors' Supply Company of Chicago, Ill., the New Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., recently contracted for two of the latest Simplex projectors.

The Leland Theatre Supply House, Montpelier, Vt., reports the sale of Simplex projectors to the Colonial theatre, Portsmouth, N. H.

Newman Brass Installations

THE Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, with branch factory located at 68 W. Washington street, Chicago, Ill., have recently furnished the New Rialto theatre of Brockton, Mass., with the entire equipment of brass work, including a brass ticket booth, special brass unit frames to fit around the corners of lobby, and brass railing work and brass ticket chopper.

The Newman Manufacturing Company are also furnishing the Dusenbury theatres at Columbus, Ohio—namely, the Grand and the Vernon—with special Unit frames to fit around the corners made of corrugated moulding. This is the very latest style of display frames.

This concern is running a night shift in order to take care of orders and thus give prompt service.

Is the Union Worth $6.25?

NEW YORK operators, as has been said in these columns, now have an opportunity of becoming "UNION MEN" for the insignificant sum of $6.25. There is absolutely no reason whatever for any motion picture operator in the Greater City failing to become a member of the union. Local 306, I. A. T. S. E., whose initiation fee of $50 has been the bone of contention, and given as an excuse for not joining by those who for some reason or other failed to get in where they belong, can no longer be given as an "excuse," for from now until the first day of December the initiation fee has been reduced from $50 to $25. Payments can be arranged on such liberal terms that it is possible for an operator to become enrolled as a union man for a sum as small as $6.25. Is the Union worth $6.25? The answer is YES! There are, in every craft, men who can be termed moral "slackers"—men who like to criticise the efforts of others, while making no attempt on their own part to lend a helping hand. To such as these the following little poem I ran across the other day seems peculiarly applicable. It is entitled:

CRITICISM

It's easy enough to pick out the flaws,
In the work that others have done,
To point out the errors that others have made,
When your own task you haven't begun.

It is easy enough to fuss and find fault
When others are doing their best,
To sneer at the little that they have achieved
When you have done nothing but rest.

It is easy enough to cavil and carp,
To criticise, scoff and deride,
For few of us ever have done perfect work,
No matter how hard we have tried.

It is easy enough not to speak of the best,
And to dwell all the time on the worst,
And perhaps it is proper sometimes to find fault,
BUT BE SURE THAT YOU HAVE DONE SOMETHING FIRST.

It is the fond dream of the editor of this department to see every MAN IN AMERICA HOLD A UNION CARD AND GIVE HIS UNQUALIFIED SUPPORT TO THE ORGANIZATION THAT HAS DONE SO MUCH FOR THE WORKING MAN—The American Federation of Labor, of which the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, and Local 306 are a part. The daily papers have been carrying an advertisement calling upon all non-union men to affiliate before it is too late, for after December 1 the initiation fee of Local 306 will be increased to SEVENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, where it will remain. Now is the opportunity to SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS. JOIN THE UNION AND BE PREPARED TO BUY A LIBERTY BOND WITH THE SAVING. Further particulars can be obtained by applying to the secretary-treasurer, Al I. Mackler, Room 1004, 145 West Forty-fifth street. DON'T DELAY! DO IT NOW!!

Simplex Machines Aid Enlistment

THE Simplex Projectors, used by the first and largest model of its kind, the U. S. Recruit, which is located at Union Square, New York City, N. Y., are "doing their bit" to secure new members for the Navy.

Ten other Simplex Machines recently shipped to France by the Y. M. C. A., will help to keep the boys in good spirits.

The Forty-fourth Street theatre running the Italian Battle-front war pictures is also using this projector.

Optical Glass

"The necessity of applying to the construction of photographic objectives, new glasses, of which the principal virtue was not proportional run of dispersion, but rather a different relationship between the mean refractive index and the mean dispersion, had been pointed out by L. von Seidel in 1856, and by Joseph Petzval in 1857, but the remarks of these two men seem to have been passed over without attracting any attention. E. Abbe (loc. cit., see previous installment) had laid great stress upon the importance of new kinds of glass for microscope objectives in 1878, after having become convinced that further progress could not be made with the old glasses. This necessity in microscopic optics, combined with the long-felt want in telescopic optics, soon became paramount, and brought the question anew to the attention of scientists. At a later time it became known that attempts to produce glasses approximating these new requirements had already been made by H. Schroeder[1], and also by A. Safarik.

"The former, in conjunction with Th. Daguet, had attempted the production of Magnesium-Crown Glass in Solothurn, and according to H. Schroeder[2] these experiments had been carried out prior to 1870.

glasses characterized by proportional run of dispersion, and his experiments were particularly along the lines pointed out by the 1851 jury, which had suggested the production of new glasses that could be used as Crown glasses in combination with the old varieties of Crown glass, which latter would therefore take the place of the customary Flint in an achromatic combination thus formed. Safarik's experiments were productive of no important results, owing to the insurmountable difficulties incident to melting silicate glasses in the laboratory.

"An extensive change took place, however, as S. Czapski (loc. cit., see previous installment) has pointed out, when Otto Schott, a clever chemical technologist, intimately acquainted with the art of ordinary glass manufacture through serious study and family tradition, was attracted by E. Abbe's published report on the necessity of new kinds of glass, and formed a working connection with the latter. The joint labors of E. Abbe[3] and O. Schott began in 1881, in accordance with the plan agreed upon between them "to investigate minutely all the chemical elements which can be combined in any way as an amorphous (non-crystalline) flux, as regards their influence both on refraction and dispersion." It was therefore arranged so that O. Schott prepared these glass combinations in very small meltings (20 to 60 grams in weight) at Witten, in Westphalia (where he resided at that time), while the spectrometric examination of the samples was undertaken in Jena by E. Abbe, assisted by P. Riedel. In the course of the first year certain facts were established regarding the specific effect of various substances on the resultant glass, and it was decided to undertake further investigations 'on the basis of the chemico-optical knowledge already acquired, and to systematically form combinations of ingredients, which, in their optical properties, most completely satisfy the optical desiderata, and at the same time fulfil the necessary practical requirements, as to hardness, durability and freedom from color.'

"To this end O. Schott moved to Jena in the spring of 1882, where the experiments were now carried out on the more extensive scale (in meltings of about 10 kgm.), which had been found necessary. In these experiments two independent problems were always kept in view.

"The first was the problem, originating with J. Fraunhofer, and followed up by his successors, of producing glasses with proportional dispersion throughout all regions of the spectrum, in order to secure a more perfect degree of achromatism and thereby decrease or eliminate the secondary spectrum.

"The second problem, no less important than the first, was that of attaining a wide variation between the two chief constants of optical glass, e. g., refractive index (n) and mean dispersion (Δ). The old glasses all resembled one another in the respect that they were characterized by only slight variations in the ratios of their optical constants, so much so that increase in refractive index was invariably accompanied by a corresponding increase in the mean dispersion. If one plots out the data concerning the old glasses on cross-ruled paper (Fig. 5) so that the refractive indices are represented as abscissae and the mean dispersions as ordinates; the points which represent the various glasses, from lightest Crown to densest Flint, will be found to represent an ascending series, at a fairly constant inclination to the abscissa-axis, the heights of the ordinates increasing steadily with increase in abscissae values in the old glasses, as S. Czapski (loc. cit.) has shown by means of a diagram. The problem thus imposed was, therefore, the discovery of glasses whose representative points should lie either to the right or to the left (in the diagram) of those points which illustrate the characteristics of the old glasses.

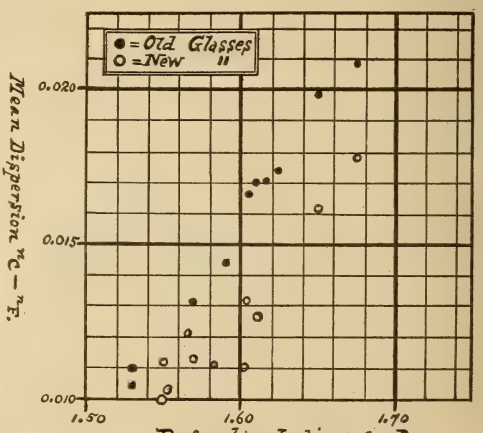

Fig. 5.

"The solution of this problem being duly arrived at, the requirements pointed out by von Seidel could now be satisfied, and through the enterprise of E. Abbe and O. Schott, the highly refracting Crown glasses demanded by theory were made available for use in photographic optics.

"The second stage of the work, which had commenced in the Spring of the year 1882, was the construction of a glassworks for the production of optical glass on a commercial scale. The manufactory was established by O. Schott, E. Abbe, C. & R. Zeiss, and in the year 1886 the name "Glastechnisches Laboratorium Schott & Gen. Jena" was given to the enterprise. The construction of the glassworks was completed in the Fall of 1884, and a liberal subsidy from the Prussian Government contributed, in no small degree, to the carrying out of the costly preliminary experiments on the production of glass in large meltings.

"In more recent times the example set by the Jena laboratory has been followed up in Paris, where Ed. Mantois, the successor of Ed. Feil, undertook the manufacture of these new glasses in the years 1893-4. According to Ch. Fabre (loc. cit., see previous installment) and E. Wallon[4] it appears that experiments had already been made on the new glasses in about 1880 at the Feil glassworks, but further particulars on the results secured at that time do not appear in these references."

The subsequent advances in the manufacture of optical glass need not be mentioned here, for the greatly enhanced capabilities of the more modern glasses are well known to makers and users of photographic objectives, but the physical characteristics of these modern optical glasses and their use in the construction of corrected optical systems are subjects of interest and importance to the student and the practical worker.

The detailed study of the Jena glasses is reserved, however, for a future occasion, upon which we shall consider their utility in the construction of modern photographic objectives.

Standardization

AFTER a two years' survey of the chaotic mechanical conditions which are prevalent in cinematographic production and exhibition, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers appear to be settling into their stride, and we are sure that in their efforts to standardize the important integrals of cinemachinery they will have the moral support of every bonafide and businesslike member of the "fifth greatest industry."

Firstly we will consider the diameters of the lens tubes in which projector lenses are mounted. It is stated that there will be three diameters adopted, corresponding, presumably, to the types of projector lenses in most extensive use. We can appreciate that there must be at least two classes of projection lenses in so far as the diameters of the lens combinations are concerned, by reason of the fact that lenses of over 6 inch E. F. must be of increased diameter, e. g. so-called "half-size" objectives, in order to utilize all possible light which proceeds from the projection aperture.

Just why three different diameters for projection lens tubes have been adopted by the Engineers is not clear at present, for it appears that the diameters of the glasses (or elements) of cinematographic projection lenses must themselves undergo some revision and standardization at a not far distant time.

The diameters, or apertures, of some projection machine objectives are of course in conformity with the dictates of correct theory, but in a majority of instances lenses of excessive aperture are in use; and are being supplied by some of the optical companies against their own good judgment. This has come about through the recommendations of empirical and grossly misinformed projection experts (so-called), but, according to present indications, the Optics of Cinematography is destined to come in for intelligent treatment ere long, and it will then be apparent to the Society of Engineers that the aperture of projection lenses is a subject for consideration, both from the viewpoint of the optical manufacturer and the projection machine operator. Under the circumstances it seems that the adopted standards of lens barrel diameters are of a tentative nature.

Passing now to the adopted standard for the picture aperture, we do not consider that this item calls for any remarks, excepting that it appears rather inconsistent to specify lens diameters in millimeters and the aperture dimensions in fractions of an inch. The point to be emphasized here, however, is that definite dimensions for the size of a film image, and a camera or projection machine aperture have now been established.

Every maker of cinemachinery, such as cameras, printers and projectors, should immediately get behind the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and adopt the dimensions which have been determined upon as the standard aperture. The B. & H. standard of film perforation is generally recognized throughout the industry, and with the aperture standardized, and the dividing line between the film image located in the center of the space between the perforations, as has just been recommended by the Engineers, some very important steps will have been taken toward rendering uniform the product of scores of studios throughout the country. The advantages of intelligent standardization are so obvious that we need not further enlarge upon the proposition here, but we desire to draw the attention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to an item which we believe all cinematographers will agree is in need of consideration for practical and economical reasons.

We refer to the bobbin or spool used in the magazines or film-boxes of cinematograph cameras, and coincidentally we must also consider the size of the take-up spindles of film perforating machines, and likewise, the wooden plug, or core, upon which a roll of film stock is wound by the maker.

There are almost as many different sizes of camera bobbins as there are different makes and models of cine cameras, and, moreover, hardly any camera bobbin corresponds in size with either the take-up spindle of a standard perforator, or with the core placed in the film roll by the maker of film stock.

As the inevitable result of this wide variation in the size of the spools and spindles, a cameraman, when loading his film boxes or magazines, must do one of the following things in order to assure the competent performance of his taking-instrument. Either he must tear out and throw away several feet of film from the center of the film roll, or else he must rewind the roll onto his camera bobbins.

It is obvious that the former procedure, which, we might add, is extensively indulged in, is a sheer waste of valuable negative film stock; while the rewinding process is always fraught, to a greater or less degree, with the danger of generating static electricity in the roll of film which is rewound. When we add to this the annoyance which a painstaking operator experiences when things are not "just so," it appears that the subject of camera bobbins can well be taken up by the Engineers as a practical subject for standardization.

We say camera-bobbins for it appears that the brunt of this standardization will fall upon the makers of cine cameras. According to our observations a similarity in dimensions already exists between the core in a roll of cine film stock and the supply and take-up spindles of a standard perforating machine, but of odd-sized camera bobbins there is no end. The proposition of standardizing the bobbin is not altogether up to the camera builders, however, because it may happen that some very good types of cine camera will not take up the film in a dependable manner unless a bobbin of quite large diameter is employed.

Under the circumstances standardization must be a give-and-take proposition, with reasonable concessions on the part of all concerned, but we believe that standardization along the line suggested would be readily acquiesced in by all manufacturers to whom the suggestion applies.

We repeat our suggestion that the Society give consideration to the take-up bobbins of cine cameras, and we congratulate the Engineers upon having devised and adopted some definite standards governing cinematographic construction. We trust that their suggestions will find speedy recognition by the designers and builders of cinemachinery.

For Framing Picture

RALPH R. BARTELS, Troy, N. Y., writes: "I have received my membership card and button in the N.A.M.F.L., and am submitting a little idea for framing the picture which may be of some value to operators using Powers' machines. Look it over and see what you think of it. I have one on both of my machines."

Comment: The brother's idea is to simply remove the face plate of the mechanism, take off the small brass name plate, then replace the face plate, first attaching a small electric bulb by means of small picture wire to the two bottom screws holding the face plate in position. A small 110 volt, 4 c.p. lamp can be used, and a switch placed in easy reach of the operator, enabling him to frame up quickly and surely. This method is particularly valuable where the mechanism is so close to the front wall of the operating room as to make it impossible for the operator to look through the front of the projection lens.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Music Department, Motion Picture News:
Will you kindly favor us by advising full particulars in regard to the Publishers' Protective Association tax, and oblige, Alhambra Amusement Co., Inc.

NO doubt, your inquiry has reference to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers recently formed and of which many of the prominent music publishers, composers and authors are members. In addition to the activities of this society, there is also a French society of a similar name in the field who claim to represent certain European publishers, composers and authors. The accredited representative of the French society is Ovide Robillard, with offices situated at 1265 Broadway.

It might be advisable for you to write him in order to ascertain particulars as to their demands.

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers conduct their offices at 56 West Forty-fifth street.

The objects of both societies is to exact a fee for public performances for profit of any copyrighted music controlled by them. It affects all the compositions issued by the publishers who are members and in accordance with a decision of the Supreme Court, it has been established that the performance of a copyrighted piece of music by an orchestra employed by a hotel, restaurant, theatre or moving picture house or any other public place where either indirectly or directly a fee is charged constitutes a public performance.

Several prominent publishers have not joined either of the above societies. The most important of these is, undoubtedly, Carl Fischer, whose immense catalogue covers every conceivable kind of music. Other publishers, whose music can be performed without payment for performing rights, include the following:

Will Rossiter, Chicago; J. Stern & Co., New York City; G. Schirmer, Inc., New York City; Sam Fox, Cleveland, Ohio; Oliver Ditson Co., Boston, Mass.; McKinley Music Company, New York.

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

New Theatre in Beverly, Mass.

PLANS have been prepared for a new theatre in Beverly, Mass., which is to be called "The Beverly" and for which the Enterprise Amusement Company has purchased the Gidding estate on Federal and Chapman streets. It is being surveyed preparatory to completing the working plans for the theatre which is to be of modern construction, iron, concrete, and steel, with as little wood as possible. It will conform to the strictest building code and will have abundance of exits on all sides, with passage ways sufficient to take care of any audience which may gather.

It is practically fireproof and every precaution will be taken to protect the patrons from any possible danger.

The preliminary plans provide for a building 100 x 120 feet and an annex; with a floor seating 1,200 people, every seat being a good one. The only posts are near the walls and will not obstruct the view. The seats nearest the stage are on a slant and the rows diminish omitting seats in the corners which have no view of the stage or a distorted one. The aisles will be broad and there will be no crowding of seats or passage ways. The stage is 25 x 70 feet with opportunities for dressing rooms, in case pictures should be supplanted by personal plays occasionally. There is plenty of room beneath the stage.

The floor has a descent of two inches to the foot and this is accomplished by having a ramp at the entrance, people going up a slight grade to reach the box office, which is directly in the middle of the lobby. This is constructed similar to the entrance to the Boston theatre and gives an elevation to the rear.

The side exits are on a level with the street and the stage exits are below the street level but easy of egress.

The entrance to the theatre is at the east end of the building near the Parish House, entering a lobby 20 x 100 feet one passes on to the main floor direct or ascends to the balcony, which has one way stairways for people going up and another coming down, although in an emergency both can be used for egress.

In case one does not go direct to the floor, or there is a crowd and it is necessary to wait until one performance is finished, there is a lobby just beyond with accommodations for 200, many of whom can be seated. Here will be an innovation in the shape of a kiosk for the sale of confectionery, cigarettes, etc., which has proved popular in such theatres as the Winter Garden in New York and elsewhere.

On the second floor is a balcony with a sloping floor, which will seat 400 people and in this every seat will be a good one.
